50,312. There is only one thing. It is rather a painful misunderstanding, but you say that Mr. Adney was incidentally the cause of it, because he was a misunderstood man; I did not quite understand what you meant exactly?—I thought that perhaps he was objected to as he had not much support from the neighbourhood, and, therefore, I was all the more determined to stick by him.

50,313. You mean that the people objected to him as a shooting tenant?—Yes, I understand so.

50,314. In what was he misunderstood?—I do not know that I can tell you in any special way, except that he seemed not to have been a popular man in the neighbourhood.

50,315. Was that because they did not like having a shooting tenant at all, do you think—did not like the shooting to be let in that way?—No, I do not know that it was that.

50,316. Are there any other shooting tenants in these parts?—A great many; I believe that is the chief thing to do about here.

50,317. And they are not generally unpopular?—I believe not.

Mr. Grove.

50,318. You say, I think, that you and Mr. Probert used to get on very well until this unfortunate affair happened?—Quite so, certainly.

50,319. Did you endeavour to satisfy yourself thoroughly before you gave him notice as to the exact thing that happened between him and Mr. Adney?—Yes, I could simply see no other way of acting than that in which I did.

50,320. Then I suppose you based that view on Mr. Adney's version to you?—Well, I had simply the testimony of a servant beyond,—I had that.

50,321. Were any legal proceedings taken over this matter in any way as to the son sporting over your land or trying to shoot over your property?—No, I simply treated the matter in silence.

50,322. Then you consider that Mr. Probert, when he left his farm, had no claim against you at all for improvements, did you?—I am led to believe that everything would be fully compensated for by the incoming tenant.

50,323. So that you think that the payment of 125*l.* ought to have satisfied him for his compensation?—I think so.

50,324. And you do not consider that there was any legal obligation upon yourself to give anything in addition to that?—Not at all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,325. I should like you to explain to us why Mr. Adney was misunderstood?—Well, I think you have given me rather a hard thing to do.

50,326. I do not know. You have made a statement, and I was thinking that you could supply us with the reason?—I think, perhaps, his style was not quite the same as the generality of people in Breconshire.

50,327. Was he curt in his behaviour, or what was it?—I dare say in some matters he may have been considered so.

50,328. Was there anything else?—I know of nothing more.

50,329. And you, out of a sort of bravado more than anything else, swore by Mr. Adney?—No, I cannot say that I did that.

50,330. You say that because he was misunderstood you determined to stick to him?—Because I think that I could not do otherwise, when a friend of mine was ordered to leave ground over which I could give him permission to go. I thought then was the time to take the matter in hand.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

50,331. Was Mr. Adney a sporting tenant of yours? Did you let the game to him?—We made some private arrangement—that he would supply me with game.

50,332. For the right of shooting?—For the right of shooting; there was nothing written.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,333. No money passing?—No no money at all.

50,334. Merely that you gave him permission to shoot on condition of his giving you some of the game that he shot?—Exactly; that was it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,335. Still, you would consider it rather hard that a man should bring five or six persons across the land of the tenant and trample his produce down as he said—his turnips and so on?—Decidedly I should, but I think Mr. Adney was a man who would take considerable care in getting over hedges and in avoiding crops and so on.

50,336. Are we to understand that there is no foundation for the statement of Mr. Probert that Mr. Adney and these men went across his turnips?—No, not at all; but I fully believed that my friend would do no damage to the land when I gave him permission to go across it. I do not know whether it is usual for gentlemen when they are out shooting to go across a field of turnips. I daresay some shooting gentleman present might be able to answer that question.

50,337. I think they do go across turnips. You say that Mr. Williams wrote to you to say that he thought that 125*l.* ought to satisfy Mr. Probert?—Quite so.

50,338. And that he had no other just claim?—Yes.

50,339. What do you say to what Mr. Probert stated, which was this, that Mr. Williams had not been on the farm for 11 years?—I think that is quite probable, because he does not very often come into this neighbourhood

50,340. Very well; if he had not been on the farm for 11 years how was he in a position to say that Mr. Probert had no just claim against you or the succeeding tenant?—As far as I can remember from his letter he said that he could not believe that he had any further claim.

50,341. But if Mr. Probert made a claim of 300*l.*, do you not think it was his duty as agent to go and see the farm?—That might have led to a satisfactory result certainly, but I do not know that it is.

50,342. I understand that there is to be a further rebutting statement made with respect to this, so I will not pursue it further. Do you know anything about farming?—Not very much, unfortunately.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,343. Have you a copy of the agreement you made between these two men?—I think I have one.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

50,344. I mean between the outgoing and the incoming tenant, Mr. Probert and the man that followed him?—Yes, I believe you have it there.

50,345. This is not the one I mean. Was there any agreement made between you and the incoming tenant and Probert? You say you left in the hands of the incoming tenant to treat with him; do not you think it was your place to treat with him yourself? He had nothing to do with the incoming tenant at all; his terms are with you as landlord?—Yes, but as it was more convenient to me, and it seemed a fair and just thing to do, I let the farm for seven years on the conditions that the incoming tenant would settle the matter of compensation.

50,346. What security did you give him in the meantime that he could have compensation; did you have any written agreement between the two parties?—I was never asked for one that I am aware of.

50,347. Would it not have been better for you to have settled with him and then let the farm to whom you liked?—That might have been done, but it would have been rather inconvenient to me to have done so. Not being a rich man I did not find it convenient.

50,348. Do you deny that Mr. Probert did improve his farm?—No.

50,349. You agree that he did improve his farm?—Quite so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,350. What rent does Mr. David Evans pay?—Mr. David Evans?

50,351. Yes, the succeeding tenant?—James Howells.

50,352. What does he pay you?—110*l.*

50,353. The same rent as the old tenant?—Yes; but he settles the matter of compensation. Of course, if he did not settle the matter of compensation the rent required would probably be a larger sum than that, only he settles the matter of compensation, and, therefore, he has the farm at the same rent.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,354. Some questions are handed in by Mr W. T. Lee: "Was not Mr. Adney summoned "before the justices for poaching?"—I should say most certainly not.

50,355. "Have you any practical knowledge of farming?"—Not very much. I think I have answered that.

50,356. "Did not Mr. Adney pay compensation to a farmer for killing a turkey?"—I have never heard that he did.

50,357. "Why should you punish Mr. Probert "senior, for illegal shooting by the son; why "not take proper proceedings against the son?" Can you answer that question?—I think that would be rather a difficult matter to do. I think that it is an unfortunate thing that Mr Probert should not be able to put that matter right himself. What I mean is, that if somebody else shoots over his ground, and he is not in a position to stop him shooting, it is very unfortunate.

50,358. There are questions by Mr. J. E. Vincent: "Do you know Mr. W. C. A. Williams' "handwriting?"—I have seen it many times.

50,359. "Is this addition to his game clause "in Mr. Probert's agreement in the handwriting "of Mr. Williams"—(agreement handed to witness)?—I should say decidedly that it was.

50,360. "Is there any truth in the suggestion "that the addition was made after the agree-"ment was executed?"—I do not think it can have been made since this matter of the shooting arose.

50,361. You will observe that that is not the question. The question is: "Is there any truth "in the suggestion that the addition was made "after the agreement was executed"? Perhaps you cannot answer that?—No, I cannot answer that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,362. Was Mr. Probert's son shooting on his own land near your house?—Oh, yes, as far as I know, he was.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,363. The land runs up, I suppose, close by?—Close by yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Irvine Blennerhassett called and examined

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,364. You wish to say something with regard to the compensation evidence that we have heard?—With regard to the 125*l.* which was paid by the ingoing tenant to Mr. Probert, the outgoing tenant.

50,365. What is the name of the incoming tenant?—Mr. Edward Howells.

50,366. That 125*l.* was paid to Mr. Probert in cash?—Yes, when the transaction was agreed to; and the 125*l.* was to cover what Mr. Probert claimed for compensation for laying down any permanent pastures, and any small amount of hedging that he may have done, which is not a small item.

50,367. Have you any memorandum?—No; and, further, for what he considered would be fair to allow him for grass that was growing at the time, and which had not been in any way consumed by any animals. That, I think, was as near as possible the exact amount for what the 125*l.* was made up.

50,368. How was the figure of 125*l.* arrived at?—A lump figure.

50,369. But by valuers?—No. Mr. Probert asked a certain figure, and the incoming tenant considered it was excessive, and after a good deal of haggling it was ultimately agreed that he should have the 125*l.*

50,370. May I ask how you know what the consideration was for?—Because I happened to—well, really, negotiate the matter between the ingoing and outgoing tenant.

50,371. You were an intermediary?—I was.

50,372. You were in their councils?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,373. Did Mr. Probert understand that the 125*l.* was to satisfy all claims?—Mr. Probert understood that his landlord was not in a position to give him any compensation himself, and therefore the landlord agreed with the incoming tenant: he said, "Howells, you shall have "the farm at 110*l.*, and any compensation that "Mr. Probert claims you must settle yourself," and those terms were agreed to, and Mr. Probert was present when that arrangement was made.

50,374. Did Mr. Probert understand that the 125*l.* was to satisfy all claims? He says that it was only for growing crops?—Well, he must have understood it, because he was present at the time when Mr. Davies told Howells, and Howells agreed on his behalf to give him what sum would be arranged between them.

Mr. Grove.

50,374A. Referring to this agreement, I may say that I know it to be Mr. Williams' handwriting because he is our county treasurer. That agreement was sent to me shortly after Mr. Davies came of age, when Mr. Williams handed over the agency, and I took it on for Mr. Davies; and I remember distinctly when the agreements came to hand casually looking through them, and my attention was drawn in perusing it to that footnote, and it was there then; but whether it was put in actually at the time the agreement was made or not, I could not positively say.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,375. That is outside your knowledge?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

50,376. But it was there some two or three years ago, you say?—I should say the agreement came to me as near as possible about three years ago, and it was there then.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,377. Are you a solicitor?—No.

50,378. You did not put it in writing between these two men at all?—Oh, yes, there is a written undertaking between them signed by them. See 50,450.

50,379. Have you that by you?—In my office.

50,380. It is unfortunate that it is not here, because that might explain matters?—I can get it for you if you wish it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,381. Is it here in Crickhowell?—Yes.

50,382. Will you get it for us?—With pleasure.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,383. Was there anyone present at the time?—At what time?

50,384. When you arranged matters between these two men?—No, only the three of us. It was down in the field opposite Probert's house on the morning of the sale, and the cheque was drawn out.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,385. I should rather like to see it?—I will get it for you. The cheque was drawn out and paid to Mr. Probert within an hour of the transaction being made.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,386. Did Mr. Probert express himself satisfied?—Well, I think he was satisfied; at any rate, with the 125*l.* he appeared to be.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,387. Mr. W. T. Lee sends up the following question: "Have you had a large experience in making farm valuations?"—I have had an experience ranging over a term of about ten years.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 50,450.

Mr. ROBERT PROBERT recalled and further examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,388. What do you wish to say?—There was one thing I forgot to mention. I had a heifer shot on the ground during that time.

50,389. Shot on the ground?—Yes. I was away at the Abergavenny market on the Tuesday, me and my son, and on the Wednesday we found a two-year-old heifer in the meadow lying dead, shot through the head.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,390. Was there any shooting going on there at the time?—Yes. Mr. Adney was up there on the Tuesday all day shooting away. I mentioned it to Mr. Davies, and Mr. Davies asked me if I had any proof of it. I said, "No." Then he said, "When Mr. Adney is about shooting you must follow him about, and if you "can find him shooting your animals and get "proof of it, of course you will get compensation." I had a colt, a valuable colt, that I have now; he was a yearling then; he was shot right across the brisket; he was discharging for about a fortnight.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

50,391. Did you ever claim compensation for it?—Well, you see, we had no proof who did it. Oh, it has been a dreadful affair altogether.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM PHILLIPS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

See 50,454 –50,481.

50,392. What is it you wish to state?—I had a holding in the district of Crickhowell from 1892 to this time—12 months ago. I rented a farm in January 1892. I took possession of my occupation in February 1892 following, and I removed certain stock. I brought two teams of horses and two carts to haul manure, and put down the land for spring crops. Two men were occupied in ploughing daily, except the Sabbath, while the weather would permit, and the land was sown with oats barley, and seeds. In May, when it began to grow, I saw to my sorrow that the crops were eaten up by rabbits. In June I made a complaint and asked the good people to bring their friends and take a few of them away as they were spoiling my crops after I had taken the greatest care to clean the land, which was in a very indifferent state when I took it. Finding they were consuming the young crops daily to my sorrow, and that they were not killed any of them at that time, in July, a fortnight before my half-year's rent was due, I went and made a complaint to my owner and said that my turnips were now being spoilt. I had made a fallow of six acres, and also bought some bone manures and sown them with the best seeds that I could procure of Mr. Wilson, of Brecon, and also of Mr. Tucker here, and the men were hoeing them—as good plants as I have seen in my time. As soon as they were hoed in a portion of that field the single turnips were eaten up near the woods up to near the middle of the fields. Having made my complaint he said that I was very foolish to stay there, and that I ought to give the place up, whereas I had removed my teams, my men and myself 25 miles.

50,393. This did not happen at Presbely?—No, it happened in the parish of Llangattock near this town, and also in a portion of the parish of Llanelly. My son was inclined to take it after two years that I had prepared it for him. I told the owner, "My rent is due this "day fortnight or thereabouts, and I wish to "meet my dues; I have a very bad prospect of "how to do it, inasmuch as my crops are consumed." On the 2nd of August (it was a Candlemas taking), I sent my cheque for the half-year's rent. Matters went on the same and the corn was consumed. Just before beginning to mow the corn I thought it my duty for myself, my wife, and my family to send for a man to look at the corn. I asked one valuer from the county to come there some day and make a reasonable valuation as to the damages. On the same evening I told the agent that I had done so. Matters went on about the same till next spring, when I ploughed up the land ready for sowing. I thought it my duty to go down and ask the owner how about the damages again, as to which I had made application before—how about the damages for the past year, and how about the current year, as I had got the land ready, and the seeds prepared for it, but that I had no heart to put them in the ground, inasmuch as my crops were consumed to such an extent the year before. He said, "I have no remedy, I have "nothing to help you, but you can give the "place up." I had a dozen two-year-old steers at the place. Cattle were at a very low price and I was in a very straight dilemma how to do. Finally, not knowing what to, she asked me to go and tell the agent.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

50,394. Who do you mean, the landlady?—The landlady.

50,395. Who is she; what is her name?—I do not know whether it would be as well to give the name, "the owner," I will put it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,396. Have you any objection to tell us the name of the owner?—I do not wish to mention the name personally.

50,397. You are not obliged to say if you do not wish it?—I have every respect to everyone, and I do not wish to be personal. I wished my stock to remain there till the end of May, because I had no provision for them in any other way, and I had plenty of keep for them there.

50,398. I think you said that your landlady told you to go to the agent. Was that right?—Yes; that day.

50,399. Did you go to the agent?—I did.

50,400. What happened then?—Finally it was arranged, or rather I was pressed in the office in this town to leave at the 1st of May, and not at the end of May, which was very much against my will, and to my loss, because of my stock and crops which were unconsumed, and there being no provision for them. I understood the same day that reasonable compensation would be allowed for the damage by the game, but it has not been done even to this day.

50,401. How long ago was this? Was it last year, did you say?—It was in March 1893.

50,402. You understood at the same time that reasonable compensation would be given to you for the game, but you have not had any money yet?—No.

50,403. Have you had any further correspondence upon the matter since?—Yes.

50,404. Are you still under the same impression, that you were going to have that reasonable compensation?—I have not had any favourable reply. Still, I made a claim.

50,405. Have you had any reply that is unfavourable, or is it still a matter of discussion between you and the agent?—It is silent rather, but I made a claim.

50,406. You think there is a dangerous silence. Is that it?—Yes; while it is remaining unsettled.

50,407. Very well, we will put it in that way?—It was further arranged that whatever fodder would be unconsumed on the 1st day of May, they should take by valuation. The same person afterwards saw the fodder on my behalf, and made his valuation, but they refused to give but one-half of it, but gave me the privilege of removing it if I wished, although the time was so very short, and being 25 miles away which was not very convenient at the time, I had an opportunity of making the best of it, within such a limited time. The last application was made by a registered letter on the 25th of April.

50,408. This year 1894?—Yes. (The witness handed in the receipt for the registered letter.)

50,409. Was there anything else?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,410. Why did you not kill the rabbits yourself?—I had no desire to do that, and I had not been used to do it. I never had been used to do it, and I had no desire to.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

50,411. You knew you had a right to do it?—Well, I was told so, but I never exercised it.

50,412. You never exercised that right?—No.

50,413. Did you understand that it would not be pleasing to your landlord if you did do it?—Yes, I understood that.

50,414. Although you knew it legally was yours, you did not like to make that claim?—I did not like to make that claim until July, after the refusal, when the turnips were consumed.

50,415. You had a valuer to value the damage?—Yes.

50,416. What was the amount of that valuation?—62*l.*

50,417. Did the landlord, on the other side, send a valuer to see the damage?—Not at the same time. I told the agent the same evening.

50,418. Did he send a valuer to see the ground?—I do not know.

50,419. Was there any game that did you damage besides rabitts?—There were pheasants on the ground.

50,420. A great many pheasants?—Yes.

50,421. Any hares?—No, I did not see any.

50,422. What was the amount of this claim that you made for the fodder?—13*l.* and some odd shillings.

50,423. Then there was no valuer sent by the other side to meet you, was there?—The agent came on the 1st of May.

50,424. Did he value it?—He offered 5*l.*

50,425. And you would not accept it?—No.

50,426. And so the matter stands to this day?—No, I was allowed to do the best with it in a very limited time.

50,427. And you sold it, I suppose?—So the fodder was finished with in that way.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,428. Were you aware that you could authorise someone else to kill the game if you did not like to?—In July I found that out. I had never seen the Ground Game Act till July 1892. Seeing the turnips begin to go after the corn, I found that out, and then I authorised a person in my occupation under the name of John Swaine to do it.

50,429. Was it really through ignorance of the Ground Game Act that you did not destroy the rabbits at once when you went there, or was it because of a sort of timidity on your part to exercise your rights under the Ground Game Act?—Well, it was both.

50,430. Did your landlady preserve game rather highly upon the estate?—Yes.

50,431. A good deal of winged game?—Yes.

50,432. To such an extent as to damage your crops?—Yes.

50,433. But you suffer chiefly from rabbits, I suppose?—Chiefly at that time.

50,434. Did the agent dispute the claim that you made for damage done by the rabbits?—He had nothing to do with it—that was the reply.

Mr. Grove.

50,435. Are you still on that farm, Mr. Phillips?—No.

50,436. Why did you leave the farm—because of this damage to game?—Yes.

50,437. You were driven away from the farm because there was so much damage by game?—Yes.

50,438. That is, you elected to leave it at any rate. What was your claim against them for the damage done by game?—62*l.*

50,439. That was the valuation for the damage?—Yes

50,440. And for that up to this moment you have had nothing at all?—No.

50,441. What was your rent?—90*l.* a year.

50,442. So that the valuation of the damage extended to about two-thirds of the rent. What was the acreage of your farm?—About 121 acres.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,443. You are a Merthyr Cynog man, I think?—I have been residing there for 34 years.

50,444. Have you been farming in this neighbourhood for any length of time?—No.

50,445. For how long were you here?—I took the farm in January 1892.

50,446. Then I did not misunderstand you before. I wished merely to clear it up?—That is when I came here.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,447. How many acres had you under corn?—13½ under one and 14½ under the other—barley and oats—I would not be sure which now without referring.

50,448. Was the man you employed a professional valuer?—Yes.

50,449. Was he competent to value this?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. IRVINE BLENNERHASSETT recalled and further examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

See 50,378.

50,450. What do you wish to state?—I have a document which you wished for with regard to the last evidence I gave. Shall I read it?

50,451. Yes, will you kindly read it?—"This "is to state that I, Robert Probert, of Ysgyborr- "newydd, do of my own free will give and tender "up to J. Howells, of Moor Park, Llanbedr, the "whole of the afore-mentioned farm as from "this date, excepting the pasture land, which "said land will fall into J. Howells' hand on "on the 30th November 1893, excepting the "boozy pasture and the house, which will be "retained by me until the 1st May 1894. The "said J. Howells in consideration of the same "rendering to me the sum of 125*l.* sterling value, "and taking over the said farm, from the 29th "September 1893. The said J. Howells further "undertakes to take at a fair valuation between "two valuers chosen by each party the barley "straw, oat straw, and the turnips and man- "golds. Signed this 12th day of October "1893."

50,452. It does not say anything about compensation for laying down arable land into pasture?—No, it does not mention it in the document, but it was understood at the time that that is really what the 125*l.* covers more or less.

Sir John Llewelyn.

So far as that goes it substantiates what the first witness said, and nothing more.

Mr. Grove.

50,453. But if it was understood, why was it not included in the document, because you seem to have entered into some details. Why was that particular thing omitted?—Possibly it was an oversight at the moment, because this was drawn out on the morning of the sale. The sale commenced at midday, and this was drawn out early in the morning.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,454. Now you wish to say something with regard to the last witness's evidence, Mr. Wm Phillips of Presbely?—I wish to state that Mr. Phillips, Presbely, gave up Penpedr-heol farm at his own request. He came to his landlady, who is Mrs. Sandeman (there is no reason why the name should not be mentioned), and asked her would she take the farm off his hands. She said, "You had better go and see the agent and "I will talk it over with him." He came and saw me and the same morning I went to Mrs. Sandeman, and she came up to my office and met Mr. Phillips in the office, and we settled there and then that Mr. Phillips should give up the farm to her and that Mrs. Sandeman would pay him some small claim which he asked for. At the time that this settlement was made no claim was entered into at the office with regard to damage by game at all. I admit that a claim had been made previously by Mr. Phillips for some, I think it was 64*l.* I have not got a copy of it, but he showed it to me and he said he had had a valuer to see it and would I go and see it. So in company with Captain Sandeman I walked up to the farm and we did not consider that there was anything he could feel very much aggrieved at, more particularly as a greater portion of the ground had wire netting around it and he was perfectly at liberty to use his concurrent right with regard to the hares and rabbits.

The claim of 13*l.* that Mr. Phillips made for fodder was not acceded to simply because the fodder was of a very, very inferior character.

With regard to the question of the preserving on this farm, it is not unreasonable in comparison with other farms in the neighbourhood, for the very simple reason that until Mr. Phillips took it the landlords had retained the farm in their own hands and had worked it for all agricultural purposes, and naturally it would have been as much against their interest as that of everybody else to have allowed an unreasonable amount of game.

Professor Rhŷs.

50,455. I do not quite follow that last answer exactly. It might have suited the landlady to have game and she might not consider it in exactly the same light as the tenant would?—Precisely, but in this particular instance the landlady kept the farm in order to cultivate her own grain and to have her hay and turnips, and she had a large quantity of stock kept.

50,456. You mean to say that she did not wish to preserve game to any great extent upon that?—Not on that particular farm, because they had their home preserves, which are walled in within about a quarter of a mile.

Mr. Grove.

50,457. Was the game they preserved near to his farm, or adjoining in any way?—Yes, there were plantations, but these plantations had wire netting, so far as was practicable, around them to prevent the game, any more than we could help, going on to his land.

50,458. Was there much game about that part?—No more than there is in the adjoining neighbourhoods around—not then; there is more now.

50,459. Did you see any traces of damage by game when you went to look over the place?—Yes, but nothing to the extent that one would consider unreasonable.

50,460. Then when you made that arrangement with Mr. Phillips you say that no allusion was made there to this damage by game?—Not in the contract that was carried out that morning between his landlady and himself.

50,461. You say that you paid him some small claim that he asked for?—I think I have a copy of it in my letter-book. I have sent for that letter-book. (Letter-book produced.) I have a copy of the agreement that Mr. Phillips signed on the morning when he gave up the farm. I will hand it to you if you would like to see it.

50,462. Would you state what amount you agreed upon as compensation?—The amount is there; I did not look into it then.

50,463. It is as follows:—"I, the said William "Phillips, do herewith accept the sum of 12*l.* in "full discharge for all ploughing, hedging, and "other improvements carried out"?—That is so.

50,464. But it seems rather strange, does it not, that a claim of 12*l.* should be dealt with, and a much larger claim of 62*l.* should not be dealt with?—That claim was not entered into that morning at all.

50,465. Is it not a strange thing, as the claim was existing, and was known to you and to Mr. Phillips, that no reference was made to it?—The claim was never acknowledged by us. It was never acknowledged that there was any justification for a claim.

50,466. Then even to-day you do not acknowledge it?—No, we do not acknowledge it.

Mr. Grove.

Then that alters the position.

Professor Rhŷs.

50,467. He said, I think, that he had the damages valued. Were you aware of that? Did he tell you by whom they had been valued?—Yes.

50,468. Was the man he had to value an experienced man?—I should say he was.

50,469. He was?—I should say so.

50,470. So that his valuation of 62*l.* might be right?—It might be, but one naturally must allow that in all probability he had put it as high as he possibly could.

50,471. Yes, but then if you had a valuer to meet that, he would put it as low as he could?—Yes.

50,472. That would bring you to 40*l.* perhaps; but you say now that you do not acknowledge any claim at all?—No, we do not.

50,473. You see there is some little difference between 62*l.* and nothing?—Yes, precisely, but at the same time we do not consider that the claim was justifiable.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,474. When you say that probably this person would value the damage as high as he possibly could, what do you mean by saying that?—I think it is general in business if you are employed by an outgoing tenant to get as much as you possibly can for that tenant, and I naturally presume that this valuer was not an exception to the rule.

50,475. Then according to your process of reasoning, supposing any question of dispute arose between a landlord and tenant, you think that a disinterested person should be employed to settle the dispute?—Our usual custom is that we appoint two valuers, and the valuers appoint an umpire, and if the valuers fail to agree the umpire is called in and his award is accepted as final. That is our practice here.

50,476. You would not consider it a just thing for a landlord to go and employ his agent to value his farms for the purpose of adjusting the rents on the farms: possibly being employed by the landlord, he would try to please his employer, as you say?—To a certain extent no doubt he would, but at the same time he would allow his own judgment to support him in assessing them. I do not think that that applies as directly as it would to the question of value for compensation for damage by game or anything of that sort.

50,477. The principle is much the same—that he would try to please his employer of course?—To a certain extent he would.

50,478. You, of course, dispute this claim, because you consider that the tenant should have destroyed the rabbits himself?—Precisely.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,479. One question: Did you take this other gentleman to see this ground before the crops were harvested?—At the present moment I do not remember exactly when we did go. I could not possibly tell you that at the moment.

50,480. Do you not remember whether the corn was on the ground or whether it was harvested? Surely you ought to remember that?—I think, Sir, it had been harvested.

50,481. If it had been harvested how could your valuer assess the damage done by the game?—Simply that there was not in our opinion a sufficient amount of game and so forth about the place to justify such damage being done.

Mr. Griffiths.

But you could not see what damage had been done then. It would be impossible.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Brecon.

FIFTY-NINTH DAY.

The Shire Hall, Brecon, Breconshire, Tuesday, 8th May 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHŶS, M.A. LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary
Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Miss GWENLLIAN E. F. MORGAN called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,482. Where do you reside?—At Buckingham Place, Brecon.

50,483. You wish to give us some information, I think, with regard to the hiring and pleasure fairs?—It has been suggested that I should bring before your notice a reform which has been initiated in the hiring fairs of this town, as it is a subject closely connected with the agricultural interests of this county, and with the life of the people most affected by this inquiry. I shall, therefore, if you will allow me, read a paper I have written, which deals fully with the practical details of the reform we are trying to carry to a successful end.

"The country fairs of to-day are in the main very much what they were two hundred years ago, when Bunyan's dream of "Vanity Fair" so faithfully reproduced what he had seen in the neighbouring towns, and Henry Vaughan, The Silurist, the poet-physician, living in Brecon, wrote a description of these gatherings of the Welsh country folk. The narrow streets of that little town are still crowded with booths, shows, and cattle—the swings and steam-horses being an addition of later years. The air is tortured with the blare of brass instruments and barrel-organs worked by steam; shrill whistles from the engines mingle with the harsh shouts of the vendors of cheap wares and rival showmen, and the looker-on is overwhelmed and bewildered by the general hub-bub and confusion.

"It seems strange that civilization and the board schools have made so little alteration in the way the people take their pleasures. That these fairs are a pleasure to them no one who has lived amongst labourers and farm servants can doubt. We have heard much of late of the dullness of their lot; there has been no exaggeration, and it is quite easy to realise the eagerness with which they look forward to these half-yearly fêtes; the music, the lights, the brilliancy and sparkle, even though it be the sparkle of tinsel, the wonders to be seen form a striking contrast to the monotony of their daily lives, and upon consideration, it is not difficult to understand the charm these varied attractions have for them. This being the case, it must occur to all thoughtful people that the wisest way of meeting the evils and dangers of these fairs is not by agitating for their abolition, against the popular feeling in the country, but by trying to improve and purify them; for, though the amusements of the fair may be considered rough and unrefined. there is not much that is wrong (apart from the temptations to drunkenness) supposing the law is in all respects enforced.

"The great danger here, as everywhere, comes from drink! If it were not for this the pleasure fairs would be comparatively harmless. As it is, many a promising young life is blighted, though the teetotallers rarely date their ruin from the fair. Young men and women who, probably, never taste alcohol at any other time, are induced to "treat" or be "treated," and it is a common sight on a rainy fair day to see the up-stairs windows of the public-houses (where the large club rooms are) crowded with lads and girls drinking spirits or wine.

"The disastrous consequences of such a custom—even supposing it does not lead to drunkenness, which, amongst the girls at least, is rarely the case—must be apparent to all. It is not only on a fair day that a note of warning should be raised. The villages act on the towns, the towns re-act on the villages, and it is the training which goes on week by week which will influence the young people of our country to love "whatsoever things are pure; whatsoever things are of good report." So much might be done if an appeal were made from a small central committee in the town where these fairs are held, to the clergy and ministers in every parish within ten miles radius, imploring them to bring the matter before the teachers in their respective Sunday schools, who in turn would wisely, judiciously, prayerfully warn the lads and girls of the dangers and temptations lurking where they may be least expected.

"One very simple way of guarding them from peril would be, to ask them—if not already teetotallers—to sign the total abstinence pledge for the Fair week, with a promise that neither for business nor pleasure will they enter a public-house during that time. In most towns good coffee taverns are now established, where refreshments can be obtained and business transacted, so it is never absolutely necessary to adjourn to an inn. The young people may also be reached through the Girls' Friendly Society, the British Women's Temperance Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Young Men's Christian Association, and the various temperance societies in the neighbourhood.

"But, whilst fully recognising the dangers to be encountered and avoided, there is cause for deep thanksgiving in the great improvement on the past, open and disgraceful drunkenness amongst the crowds, which gather on these occasions, being much less common than it used to be. The temperance movement, coffee taverns, and the early departure of the trains have all tended to lessen this evil.

"Old customs linger amongst us, though all the conditions which created them may have passed away and no need remains for their continuance. One very curious custom still obtains in some parts of Wales—and possibly in England also—the hiring of servants in the streets is carried on in the present day, and, whilst the fact is accepted as a perfectly natural harmless thing by many, those who are working amongst young women and girls, and are anxious for their moral and spiritual welfare, have had the consequences of this system brought before them in a manner that has made silent acquiescence an impossibility.

"In the little market town of Brecon, in South Wales, the centre of a large agricultural district, this habit of hiring farm servant girls and lads in the street had existed for generations. In the most public part of the town, where four streets meet, a large crowd of young women and girls of respectable character and parentage, mixed in and out with farm men and lads, stood waiting to be hired. For many weary hours, through rain, cold, or heat, they remained, patiently standing until they were engaged, being jostled and crushed by each other, and the passers-by, within hearing of coarse jokes, of bad and improper language, listening to songs and ballads in Welsh and English, unfit to be heard, and in some cases this went on for days.

"On the first Fair day the adjoining streets were rendered impassable by cattle driven there for sale, to be succeeded on the following days by human beings waiting to be hired!

"It had long been felt that such a state of things was hardly consistent with modern feeling, that, in fact, it was a relic of earlier and more barbarous times when the serfs stood in the market-place for sale.

"In the autumn of 1890, by request of the vicar of Brecon, Rev. Prebendary Herbert Williams, a committee of ladies was formed to consider what could be done to make a change for the better at the approaching November Fair, and it was decided that a large room should be taken, where those who required farm servants (for it is only amongst the agriculturalists that this system of hiring prevailed) and girls, who were waiting to be hired, might meet and carry on negotiations.

"The matter was laid before the Mayor of Brecon, Col. Morgan, who at once warmly supported the proposal, and issued an order for the removal of the hiring fairs from the streets to the Guildhall, the council chamber of which he placed at the service of the ladies' committee. This is a large, warm room on the ground level, with entrances from two of the principal streets of the town, where rest and quiet can be obtained, and matters settled more satisfactorily for mistress and maid than in the noisy, crowded thoroughfare.

"Notices of the change were inserted in all the local papers for three weeks before the Fair; leading articles in sympathy with the new movement appeared in each; and a letter from the secretary appealed to the public for support. Handbills, leaflets (addressed to young men and women, printed in Welsh and English, and issued by direction of the Bishop of the Diocese), and a reprint of one of the editorials, were sent by post to upwards of 200 of the farmers in the neighbourhood (their names and addresses being obtained from the Electoral County Register), and to 60 of the clergy and ministers, asking them to inform their congregations of the change, and to distribute the leaflets amongst the young men and women.

"On the Fair day every effort was used to the farmers and their wives to come to the Guildhall, where a very responsible woman had been appointed registrar to the Free Registry. The ladies of the committee were present to welcome the girls, and to bring the employers and servants together. A bookstall was provided with Bibles, Prayer Books, illuminated texts, and cheap, good literature, which was so popular that more than 1*l.* worth of books and texts were sold in pennyworths. A coffee stall, with refreshments at a cheap rate, was contemplated, but this proposal threatened to interfere with two coffee taverns close at hand, and so was abandoned. The ladies also worked in the streets, by personal persuasion inducing the girls to break through the old custom, and come to the warm comfortable room which had been provided. A Church Army nurse came for the Fair week, and was most efficient and successful. She visited the show people in the mornings, giving them books, texts and papers, and in the evenings held open-air meetings in the street. The people thronged to hear her, and came night after night to listen eagerly to her words. Hundreds of copies of the "Church Army Gazette," "Temperance," and other tracts, were given away to the people frequenting the Fair, and the supply was not equal to the demand. At the hiring fairs held in Brecon in May and November of each year since, the work has been carried on in the same way and successive mayors have given the movement their sympathy and support; there is no doubt the old system had received its death blow. At last November Fair, 49 mistresses applied to the Guild Hall Free Registry for servants, 54 girls were registered, and of these 32 obtained situations. At the May Fair held last week, 63 mistresses applied, and 38 servants, of whom 29 procured situations. These figures speak for themselves. Old customs die hard, and the prejudices of centuries are not overcome in a day; still, it is hoped that a new era has dawned on the hiring fairs in the Principality, for no crowds of girls are to be seen in the old standing place, and, though a few may be found lingering round, nearly all the mistresses and most of the young women prefer meeting at the Guildhall.

"There are demoralising influences in a fair, which come from foreign sources. It is a well-attested fact that decoy men and women make a practice of frequenting fairs, to pick up young country girls who have come to be hired. This is another reason for doing away with street-hiring, as the registrar would always make inquiries as to the kind of situation to which she sent girls. It is also well to look after any young women who may lose their trains, and to have respectable lodgings ready, where they may go for the night.

"The shows and art galleries, the pamphlets, books, and photographs sold in the streets require very careful supervision. It is not necessary to enter into details, as the less said on this matter the better, but evils in this direction do exist to a much greater extent than is generally supposed; and the fact that young girls, boys, and children frequent these places, makes it imperative that the law should be brought to bear in its full power. The law on the point is very clear. The exhibition or sale of anything that is improper renders the exhibitor or vendor liable to be arrested at once as a rogue and vagabond, under the Vagrant Act (5 Geo. IV. c. 83. s. 4.)

"Ignorance is not innocence, and in this, as in most cases, knowledge is power. It is well to delegate this matter to the Town Vigilance Society, if there is one, and every step should be taken with great care and discretion. The exterior of these shows is so apparently innocent and harmless, that it is not easy to believe that anything is going on inside which should be suppressed. It must be remembered that policemen in uniform, or any who would be regarded by the exhibitors as "suspicious," would not be shown any of the objectionable pictures, &c., so, to ensure an arrest, detectives in plain clothes or respectable working men should be employed.

"Full information on all legal points is contained in a very valuable little pamphlet published by the National Vigilance Association, 267, Strand, London, W.C., called 'Statute 'Fairs. Their dangers, and the legal methods of 'dealing with them.' Price 6*d.* per dozen—it should be read by all interested in the reform of pleasure fairs.

"It is hardly possible to conclude a paper on this subject without mentioning the wonderful work being carried on by Miss Millington, Layerthorpe, York, amongst the travelling showmen. This lady formed, in November 1880, the Travellers' National Total Abstainers' Union, which now numbers upwards of 7,500 members; its quarterly journal, 'The Caravan,' has a large circulation."

50,484. I hope you are satisfied with the progress of your movement?—It certainly has improved very much since the beginning. At first there was great shyness of coming to the hall, but from the figures I have quoted, I think you will see that to a great extent has passed away.

50,485. A great reform, as you say, is not carried out in a day; but you consider that progress is being made?—Yes, decidedly.

50,486. You think that there is greater sobriety now than there was?—I hope so, certainly more than there was years ago, but it varies.

50,487. Do you think, on the other hand, there is greater facility for obtaining servants, on the one hand, and obtaining places, on the other?—Oh, certainly. But I should mention that there is a certain amount of prejudice against the movement, and it has been said that it has tended to lessen the number of the servants who have applied. I do not believe that to be the case. There is a change coming over these fairs; servants engage at other times; fewer girls go to service, the greater number preferring to go to dress-making or shops. There is not the supply for the farm service that there was in former years.

50,488. Can you give us any reason for that diminution?—I am afraid I cannot. I think there is a general tendency that way, but I cannot account for the reason. I do not know whether education has anything to do with it, or whether the balance will be regained when technical education has gained more ground—I mean when there is more instruction in dairy work and so on.

50,489. Do you think that the servants who apply for places require better surroundings in the farmhouses?—In Brecknockshire the surroundings on the whole are good.

50,490. I think I may say this is breaking new ground. There has been no evidence of this nature before us hitherto, and I think it very much to the point and very interesting?—Thank you.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,491. What is your experience on this point; are there more contracts made at home between master and servant now than formerly?—I think there must be.

50,492. That is the experience in our county; hiring fairs are not what they used to be?—As I have said, there is a decided change of late years come over the hiring fairs, and fewer servants are in the fairs. I imagine the contracts are made before the fairs open.

50,493. You say that the servants at the pleasure fairs follow the same course, go to the public-houses and drink there, I suppose?—A certain number. Of course, very much depends upon the weather; a rainy day would drive them in.

50,494. It is an impossible thing to fix a fine day for a pleasure fair a year beforehand unfortunately?—Quite so.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,495. Do they produce testimonials when they meet in this hall?—They give their references, but we have nothing to do with that; we leave that between the mistress and maid.

50,496. Do they take them at random, or do they generally inquire particularly into their characters?—I do not think they are very particular about inquiring, I think they inquire afterwards probably, but they get into communication in this room.

50,497. Do they sign any agreement?—No; no agreement is signed, but 1*s.* is given, as a rule, as "earnest" money.

Mr. Grove.

53,498. Do you think this new movement which has been inaugurated is on the right lines for ultimate success?—With regard to hiring servants?

50,499. Yes?—I think it is more reasonable that they should be hired in a room than in the street. That is our object.

50,500. Can you suggest any further development of that movement which would be more likely to be successful?—We have tried everything which would be likely to be successful. We have been at it four years and improved each year I think, but I do not know that there is anything further I can suggest.

Mr. Grove.

As a Commissioner I should like to express my appreciation of the very great efforts you have made in that direction. It is quite a new feature for us, and one of great importance.

Lord Kenyon.

50,501. I suppose in this part of the world the farm girls change their places every year?—Yes, I think so, sometimes every half year. Our great fairs are in May and November, and they generally engage from one fair to the other for the half year.

50,502. They very seldom stay in the same place more than that time I suppose you find?—I think some do, but a great many change.

50,503. What is the reason that they change so frequently?—I do not know.

50,504. Simply the wish for a change?—Yes, and the hope of higher wages, I suppose.

Lord Kenyon.

I am sorry I did not hear the first part of your evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Owen Price called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

50,505. Where do you live?—Nantyrharn, Cray, Brecon.

50,506. Are you a farmer?—Yes.

50,507. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes, I am a tenant farmer.

50,508. And a freeholder as well?—Yes, and a freeholder as well.

50,509. How many acres do you farm?—About 1,500.

50,510. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—I am a farmer, and occupy about 1,500 acres of land, the greatest portion of which is my own property, but I pay rent for about 300 acres to four different landowners. I am a member of the Breconshire County Council, a member of the Board of Guardians of the Brecknock Union, Vice-Chairman of the Devynock Highway Board, Chairman of the Cray School Board for the last 22 years, secretary of the Devynock Agricultural Society for 30 years, and Justice of the Peace for the county of Brecon. As a valuer of many years standing, I have gained experience and knowledge of the customs of tenure existing in this county. As far as I know there are no copyhold tenures in this county and no recent enclosures, and very few squatters' cottages. In my opinion it would be a great advantage to the occupiers of the adjoining farms if the unenclosed commons in this county were enclosed and cultivated. The expense of surveying and obtaining Acts of Parliament is now so much, that in many cases it blocks all improvements in that direction. Usual date of entry on farms 29th September, but the old tenant grazes the land as a custom to 30th November, and occupies the house and farm buildings, for consuming his crops, up to the 1st of the following May. Farms are mostly let from year to year, and leases are not desired by tenants. I know of several leases given many years ago, where the rents have been reduced before the expiration of the leases. Landlords would readily grant leases, but tenants are not anxious for them if they have a good landlord. Rents are generally fixed at a gross amount for each farm, and there are no other services rendered. The right of commons are always included in the rents, but in the majority of cases it is never exercised. Any damage done by the hauling of timber or otherwise is generally allowed to the tenant. Agreements are made on many estates, and in some cases contain penalising clauses, but they are never enforced, unless the landlord and tenant fail to agree. The Agricultural Holdings Act does not go far enough. There are many things on a well-managed farm outside that Act for which a tenant should receive compensation on leaving. In some cases the rent is fixed by valuation, and in others by private treaty. The large landowners generally select the tenants which have most capital. Small landowners are not quite so particular, and often accept the highest bidder. I have myself acted as arbitrator in several cases of readjusting rent between landlord and tenants, within the past 12 months. No rates are paid by the landlord, except income tax. There are a fairly good number of small freeholders in this district. Some of them have purchased their farms recently at 30 years' purchase. Labourers are chiefly employed as farm servants, and houses are scarce in country districts, labourers are too much concentrated in villages, and it would be a great benefit to farmers generally if more cottages were built in the rural districts; old cottages have been allowed to fall down, consequently the country districts are somewhat depopulated.

50,511. Have you anything else to say?—There may be a few other things arising in the answers to the questions.

50,512. You say the rights of commoners in the majority of cases are never exercised?—I do not say never exercised, but in the majority of cases they are not exercised. I believe only those tenants who reside near the hill exercise the right of common at present, those that live at a distance never exercise the right of common at all.

50,513. I suppose those commons are of great value to the tenants near?—No doubt they are of great vale to the farmers near, but not of so much value to those at a distance.

50,514. I suppose you are conversant with the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

50,515. What do you suggest by way of amendment to it?—I think there are many improvements on a farm that a good tenant ought to be allowed for in addition to what is allowed under the Agricultural Holdings Act.

50,516. Would you say "the improved condition of the holding"?—Yes.

50,517. I mean the general improvement?—Yes; the generally improved condition of the farm.

50,518. Would you alter the schedules at all?—I think drainage ought to be made an open question, instead of that the tenant should give notice to the landlord.

50,519. He has only to give notice?—Quite so.

50,520. Would you take out any of those things in the first schedule, Part I., where the consent of the landlord is required?—No, I do not think I would, but still I think there ought to be something done for the general improvement of the farm.

50,521. Will you state further exactly what you mean on the drainage point?—Yes, I believe in the cases where a tenant has done some drainage on the farms, he ought to be allowed for it.

50,522. If he leaves?—Yes

50,523. Whether he has given notice or not?—Yes; I do not believe a tenant would go and spend money unless it was for his own benefit, and for the ultimate benefit of the landlord.

50,524. You think it ought to go into the first schedule?—No, I think it ought to be in the third schedule.

50,525. In fact no second schedule at all for drainage?—No.

50,526. Do you think that there is any hardship that the tenant has to give two months' notice before he claims? We have heard that in some cases?—No. I think there ought to be a certain amount of notice given, but at present the tenants in a great number of cases are thoroughly ignorant of the provisions of the Act.

50,527. Is there any other point in the Act which you think might be amended?—No, nothing particular; but I think the good tenants ought to be allowed for hedging and different things, which do not come under the third schedule at present.

50,528. You would enlarge these schedules?—Just so; I would give more power to the arbitrators.

50,529. How are the improvements mostly done in this part of the world?—The buildings are invariably done by the landlord, in almost every case that I know of.

50,530. I suppose the tenant hauls?—Yes, he always does the hauling.

50,531. And is the drainage mostly done by the landlord or the tenant?—The landlord generally gives the pipes and cuts the drains, and the tenant, as a rule, fills them up. That is the custom in our country.

50,532. Is there any rise in the rents in this neighbourhood?—In some cases there has been an increase, but in others there has not.

50,533. Any reductions?—There have been some permanent reductions, and abatements have been pretty general for the last three or four years, and in some cases for seven or eight years.

50,534. The rents are rather falling than rising, you think?—They have for some years, especially if you take the abatements in view, they have lowered a good deal.

50,535. I suppose that agricultural produce has been falling?—I should think at the end of last year it had fallen 40 per cent. under what it used to be, but times are improving a little at present.

50,536. Have you anything to say about rates?—I think the rates are less now than they were some years ago; at least they have not increased in our district.

50,537. How about the labourers; are they plentiful, or not?—Well, rather scarce, and wages have gone up nearly double what they were 30 years ago.

50,538. Is the labour good?—There are some very good labourers, but as a class I do not believe they improve.

50,539. Are they well housed?—Yes, in most cases the houses are pretty fair at present. I believe the houses are in very good order.

50,540. Is there a sufficiency of house accommodation?—No; I think it would be an advantage to landlords and tenants generally if there were a few more labourers' houses in country districts.

50,541. You think they would be taken?—Yes; houses are in great request, especially in our district.

50,542. Are there any vacant farms?—I do not know of any.

50,543. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—I think the farms are not cultivated now as they used to be many years ago, because less labour is employed, and there is a great amount of land being laid down to permanent pasture, and, as a rule, the labour employed is not more than half now to what it used to be 10 or 15 years ago; consequently, some land of course is allowed to go out of cultivation.

50,544. Is that what you mean by going out of cultivation—being laid down to permanent pasture?—Well, to a certain extent. In our country the land is improved by being cultivated in a certain number of years. Of course the upland district if it is to be improved requires cultivation every 10 or 12 years; I mean it deteriorates if you leave it without being cultivated for more than 10 or 12 years.

50,545. You think these commons should be properly divided up?—Yes. I think it would be a great benefit to the country generally if they were allotted, and each man had his share of them. At present the process is very expensive, and the value of the land nearly in many cases is spent in getting the Act and making fences and different things. I believe it would be very much to the benefit of the farmers generally if the commons were allotted and divided, each man to have his own share.

50,546. I do not see that you mention any remedies. Have you thought of any remedies beyond this addition to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—That is a very difficult question, my Lord. Better times would be the best remedy.

50,547. Would any legislation be of any use, do you think?—Scarcely, I believe. Legislation would not improve the condition of the farmers very much.

50,548. Do you think the marking of foreign meat and branding foreign articles to show where they came from would be of any value?—I think there ought to be some protection afforded to the farmers in that way, and that foreign stuff ——

50,549. Should be sold as foreign stuff?—Just so. Then railway rates are very high in some cases, and for short distances they charge very excessively.

50,550. We have heard a good deal about a land court, do you think that would be of any use in this neighbourhood?—No, I do not believe a land court would assist us at all.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,551. You, I think, told us that you have been called in to arbritrate occasionally?—Yes.

50,552. Have you ever had any difficulty in adjusting rents?—No. As a rule I think, in fact in all cases I have been connected with, there has been satisfaction, and a satisfactory issue has been arrived at.

50,553. Do I understand then that you were called in because landlord and tenant could not agree with one another?—Yes, in one or two cases recently.

50,554. What was the result?—There was a slight reduction in the rent.

50,555. Can you tell us to what extent—what per-centage?—I think it was about 8 or 8½ per cent.

50,557. You, I think, yourself told us that you rent about 300 acres?—Yes.

50,558. Do I understand that is under four different landlords?—Yes.

50,559. Are they large landowners or small landowners?—They are large landowners. Lord Tredegar, the Rev. Garnon Williams, Mrs. Gwyn, and Mr. Watkin Lloyd Downes.

50,560. They are all large landowners?—Yes.

50,561. Is the property in your neighbourhood very much broken up?—No, not very much.

50,562. It is rather a peculiar coincidence then that you should be under four different landlords?—Just so, but of course in two cases it is only accommodation land.

50,563. I was interested in your remarks about the Agricultural Holdings Act, and if I followed you correctly you thought that Part II. of the second schedule should be placed upon the same grounds as the third schedule?—Yes.

50,564. Do you not think it is reasonable that the landowner should have notice of the drainage by his tenant, so that he might have the opportunity of seeing that it is done in the best permanent way?—I quite agree that there should be an understanding between the landlord and tenant, but I know of some cases recently where notice was not given, and the tenant failed to claim for the drains. I do not believe any tenant would spend money on drains that would be worthless, but at the same time I think that there should be an understanding between the landlord and tenant upon the point.

50,565. Is it the custom of this country that the landlord finds the materials and the tenant the labour in draining?—I do not know that there is a custom, but still it is generally done in that way.

50,566. That is generally the case?—Yes.

50,567. If there was co-operation of that sort, I suppose the landlord would naturally exercise some supervision?—Yes, decidedly. I believe nearly all the landlords in this county pay for cutting the drains themselves, and give the pipes, but in some cases of small landlords they leave it to the tenants.

50,568. Then the usual custom is that the landlord does the whole of it?—Not the whole, because the tenant fills the drains, but some small landlords leave it all to the tenants, and the consequence is that the tenants are not repaid if they leave the farm.

50,569. Am I right then in assuming that you think the tenant ought to be protected against himself, because if he neglects to give this notice to the landlord he thereby forfeits his possible claim?—It is very often the case that tenants are ignorant of the requirements of the Act. That is how it is.

50,570. Quite so. I am afraid we have found that in many places?—Yes. I do not believe there is one man in a dozen that knows anything about the provisions of the Act.

50,571. Does the Act appear to you to be an honest attempt to rectify that evil?—Certainly.

50,572. But the tenants, as a matter of fact—the farmers generally—do not know its provisions?—To a great extent that is so.

Professor Rhŷs.

50,573. Which is your parish?—Cray is the parish I reside in.

50,574. What language do the people talk roundabout you?—Welsh principally.

50,575. Is there any difficulty on that score at all between them and their landlords?—Not the least.

50,576. They have the agreements explained to them?—Yes, as a rule, but in our country I believe there are more tenants without agreements than there are with agreements.

50,577. We have already heard what you say about the Agricultural Holdings Act; that they seldom know what is in it, or what it means?—Most of them are entirely ignorant of the Act.

50,578. There is another thing that we have found over and over again: there seems to be great reluctance on the part of Welsh farmers to insist on having everything in writing; they have a random talk with the agent, who perhaps goes away or dies, and then difficulties arise with the new agent; they understood that they were to have this and the other, and so on, and the difficulty arises from the fact of their not having things in writing?—It is so sometimes no doubt, but as a rule they understand one another upon that point.

50,579. They understand one another if they do not get separated, but supposing the agent dies or is removed, then difficulties arise. Is not that your experience?—Yes, it is quite possible, and in some cases they have a isen.

50,580. I put it down to the same sort of idiosyncrasy; they seem to have a reluctance to give notice to the landlord that they want certain repairs done?—Yes, it is sometimes so.

50,581. There is a sort of reluctance to give formal notice of anything?—Well, I do not know whether you can say it is reluctance.

50,582. Or shyness, whatever you like to call it?—Sometimes they are not able to see the agent and the landlord, but when they do see one another they generally tell them their grievances if there are any.

50,583. But in cases of that sort it would be well that it should be in writing, would it not?—No doubt things would be much plainer if they were in writing, but still as a rule tenants have a hankering against agreements.

50,584. But to give notice of an improvement I mean—it would be better if it was in writing, and if they got an answer in writing?—No doubt it would be better in many cases, but still it is very seldom done.

50,585. It is my impression that a great deal of the difficulties arising between landlord and tenant spring from this very fact?—There is no doubt about that, because if many things are arranged and settled beforehand there would be less differences afterwards.

50,586. Have you any suggestion to make as to how the Welsh tenant is to be cured of this reluctance to insist upon things being in writing?—No, not upon that point, but I think it would be very much better that there should be a clear understanding between landlord and tenant at the commencement, there would be less bickerings afterwards.

50,587. How can they be got to acquaint themselves with the Agricultural Holdings Act or with any other Act that may be passed to supersede it?—No doubt education is spreading, and the rising generation will be able to look after themselves better perhaps on that score.

50,588. Have you noticed any improvement in that direction?—Certainly. Education is spreading. The old race of farmers as a rule had very little education.

50,589. You think that things will improve in that respect?—Decidedly, so far as education is concerned.

50,590. How many servants do you keep at your homestead?—Six menservants and labourers. There are two labourers, and four kept in the house.

50,591. Do they all sleep in the house?—Four of them do, but the other two are labourers and they go home to sleep.

50,592. The accommodation of the servants to sleep in the house is the usual arrangement in that part of the country, I suppose?—That is mostly done. Of course those following the horses, and the cowmen, generally sleep in the house, but some labourers outside are employed sometimes.

50,593. We heard yesterday that the morals of Brecknockshire are pretty good. Do you know the statistics at all?—Yes, I think they bear fair comparison with the other Welsh counties upon that score.

50,594. You mean that they excel, they stand higher?—I believe so.

Mr. Grove.

50,595. Do you hold your farm under an agreement?—No, I have no agreement with either of my landlords.

50,596. Then you go on the custom of the country?—Yes.

50,597. I gather from your remarks that there is very little co-operation amongst farmers?—There is not very much.

50,598. You have an Agricultural Society for the county, I suppose?—Yes, there is one for the county, and there are several district societies as well.

50,599. Would it not be a proper thing for them through those societies or farmers' clubs to study such a thing as the Agricultural Holdings Act and get hold of the main provisions of it?—I have no doubt it would be very beneficial.

50,600. You are secretary to an agricultural society yourself, are you not?—Yes, I have been secretary for 30 years.

50,601. Then may I ask whether the members of the particular society that you are secretary to have made themselves acquainted somewhat with the provisions of the Act rather more than the general body of farmers?—I believe a great number of members of the society have done so, but not all possibly.

50,602. Would it not be beneficial if a very short summary of an Act of that sort were printed in Welsh, do you think?—I believe that nearly all the farmers now read English, with the exception of some of the older tenants. Those over 50 or so generally prefer the Welsh, but in all other cases with the young people they read English.

50,603. You speak of some farmers near to you who have bought their own farms, I think?—Yes.

50,604. Do you think that if farmers could get possession and buy their own farms, it would tend to a greater yield from the land?—I have no doubt they would have more confidence and security, and possibly they would treat the land better on that account, but the tenant farmers under the large landlords in this county are mostly quite as safe.

50,605. They are safe as long as the landlords live, but the landlords may die?—Just so.

50,606. Or properties may be sold. Have you had many sales of land about this part?—Not a great many; but in some cases several tenants in our neighbourhood have brought their farms at 30 years' purchase, which is very reasonable, but in other cases where they have to pay 35 and 40 years' purchase, of course the price is very exorbitant.

50,607. Yes, it is against them. Do you think that in some cases where they have bought their farms with borrowed money, they are paying more interest on the borrowed money than they would have to pay rent?—Yes; undoubtedly.

Mr. Grove—continued.

50,608. I suppose you consider that fixity of tenure by some means or other would be an advantage?—I believe it would be an advantage to the tenants and the landlords.

50,609. Do you think that a farmer should have full compensation for any improvements he effects upon the land?—Certainly.

50,610. I suppose you consider that there is great depression at the present time in farming?—There has been great depression for two or three years.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,611. You say that a tenant should be paid for the general improvement of his farm?—Yes; I believe he ought to be paid for the general improvement.

50,612. How are you to arrive at that. How are you to assess it?—Of course you must take the general condition of the farm into calculation.

50,613. Do you mean when a tenant enters a farm?—No doubt it would be advisable to take it at entry, but still at the time he leaves, anyhow.

50,614. If you do not make a valuation of the farm when the tenant enters, how do you know whether it is improved or not?—Of course it is quite possible that farms that are not in a very good condition when a tenant enters may be very much more improved than a farm which a tenant gets in good condition, and there is a disparity in that case, no doubt.

50,615. May I take it that in order to find out whether a farm is improved or not, it should be valued when a tenant enters it?—It would be most advisable, no doubt.

50,616. Because I cannot see any other way of carrying it out unless it is done?—Just so.

50,617. Do you think as a matter of principle that every farm should be valued when the tenant enters it?—I think it would be very much better if it were the case, because then you would be able to arrive at the exact position of the condition of the farm.

50,618. And if a tenant improved it he should be compensated when he left, and if it deteriorated the landlord should be compensated?—Yes, decidedly.

50,619. It would be a fair thing between landlord and tenant?—Yes. I say that the landlord ought to be protected from a bad tenant just as much as the tenant should be protected from a bad landlord.

50,620. With respect to the schedule, you suggest that the third part of the first schedule should be enlarged?—Yes, I believe there ought to be several things allowed for, which are not included at present.

50,621. Would you take anything out of Part 1 of the first schedule, the making of fences, for instance; I think you have suggested that?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

50,622. What about the laying down of land to permanent pasture?—I believe that should go into Part 3 of the first schedule.

50,623. Is there anything else?—I am not certain. I have not got the schedule before me, but so far as I remember I do not think there is anything else. (A copy of the Act was handed to the witness.)

50,624. Part 3 of the first schedule says, "Consumption on the holding by cattle, sheep, "or pigs of cake or other feeding stuff not "produced on the holding." Would you extend that so as to include horses?—Yes, decidedly. I think in most cases it is done. I know one or two cases where it was allowed.

50,625. Do you regard horses as cattle? What is your interpretation of that?—I have never noticed the exception taken before.

50,626. You say you have been acting as a valuer?—Yes.

50,627. Supposing horses had consumed feeding stuffs which had been bought?—We have always put them in.

50,628. You have?—Yes. I never noticed the exception till now, because I always considered them as cattle.

50,629. It is a clause which it is very difficult to interpret?—Yes.

50,630. Would you extend it so as to include also corn that is consumed on the farm, because I believe that Brecknockshire farmers as a rule consume all the corn they raise on the farm?—Yes, in a great number of cases.

59,631. What is your opinion with respect to that; should it be extended so as to include all the corn that is raised on the farm?—I do not believe that should be acted upon—all purchased stuffs I should say. I think there ought to be a distinction between corn produced on the farm and corn purchased, but still if a tenant improves the general condition of the farm by a large production of crops, I think he ought to be allowed something for it under the head of general improvement.

50,632. You think that the consumption of the corn produced on the premises should be included in the general condition of the farm?—Yes; I believe all the additional stuff produced on the premises improved cultivation, and extra labour employed should be included in the general improvement of the farm.

50,633. What do you say with regard to the two months' notice. Is there any complaint on that score?—No, I do not believe there is any complaint, but there may be ignorance. I do not believe there would be any improvement if it was altered; I think it would come to the same thing. I think certainly there ought to be some notice given, either a month or two months. Of course, that is not a very material point.

50,634. Do you think it hard on the landlord that he should not also send in a notice of claim for dilapidations?—But under the Act that is done.

50,635. But he cannot send in a counterclaim unless he gets a claim from the tenant first?—Just so. I quite concur that the landlord should be protected against the bad tenant exactly the same.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

50,636. You mentioned, Mr. Price, that tenants do not now apply for leases?—Very seldom.

50,637. What is the reason?—In cases of depression in trade, if they get a lease in a good time, the consequence is that it takes them over the bad times, and as a rule, all landlords made an allowance in bad times, and they are better without leases than they are with leases. There is another thing: I do not agree with leases because where leases are granted the first tenant generally improves the farm for the part of the lease, and generally takes out of it towards the end of the lease. I believe it is a general loss to the landlord and to the tenant, and I believe they are very much better without leases, especially on large properties.

50,638. In this present depression, I suppose they are rather afraid to take leases?—I know of several leases that have been broken through, and that the landlords have allowed 10 and 20 per cent. out of the rent specified in the lease four and five years ago. Of course, the leases would be broken in those cases.

50,639. Then you speak with regard to labourers going into towns and villages: what is the reason that they are inclined to go to the towns and villages?—In many cases the labourers' houses in the country were old-fashioned, and have been falling down. In our parish there have been, I daresay, 20 or 30 labourers' houses, straw-thatched houses, and they have been allowed to tumble down, consequently the labourers have migrated to the villages, and they are not so near to their work, and I think it is a loss to the landowners and the tenants that the labourers are not housed nearer, and are not consequently nearer to their work.

50,640. Are there any cottages newly built in the place of those that have been allowed to tumble down?—There are some few, but not many. In towns and villages they do build occasionally.

50,641. They build better cottages than there used to be, and cottages in which there is more room?—Certainly. The cottages are very good at present, and all the old-fashioned cottages have been allowed to fall down or are rebuilt.

50,642. Do you know of any labourers that keep cows?—Yes, in some cases.

50,643. How do they do as a rule?—I have a shepherd whom I allow to keep two cows.

50,644. It assists him to bring up his family, does it not?—Yes, I believe it does. Some labourers prefer having a cow, and I know other labourers that prefer having so much a week instead of the cow.

50,645. Does not that depend a good deal upon what sort of wife he has got?—Entirely; that is the secret of it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

50,646. How are these cottages let as a rule: are they let by the landlord or by the tenant?—By the tenants I think in nearly all cases.

50,647. How are they let; do they charge rent for them?—It is generally the case that the labourers get so much per week and the house, and sometimes the keep of a cow.

50,648. When they have that, does it not keep them rather more to the soil?—Yes, I believe so, and they are more attached to their masters and to their farms.

50,649. Are tenants always paid for hauling when they leave their farms; say that a tenant has done much draining, and has done hauling, and in a year or two he finds that the farm is too dear, and he is obliged to leave, is he always paid?—Not always. I believe on the large estates it is generally allowed, but on some of the small properties they sometimes have to leave without it.

50,650. I think you said that there should be a better understanding before anything of that sort is done?—Yes, I believe that if there was a better understanding there would be less disputes afterwards.

50,651. Do tenants get their rates reduced when they have abatements in the rent?—No, not in this union. The assessment committee have decided that it would not be fair to the other tenants that it should be allowed upon the abatements.

50,652. In some unions we find it different?—In the Brecon Union they have refused to allow upon abatements because they consider that those farmers would be favoured in two ways.

50,653. Would it not be well, where abatements are given for so many years, that the landlord should really make a permanent reduction on account of the rates?—I think it would be better. I know that some have given abatements for seven or eight years, but the rates are charged upon the old rents to the tenants.

50,654. Are the hedges, fences, and ditches kept in as good order as they used to be?—Yes, I believe they are, with the exception of some upland portions; on some upland portions of the farms the fences are allowed to fall out of condition, but I think the farming generally is quite as good.

50,655. And do you think the men are quite as competent to do the work as they used to be?—The farmers?

50,656. No, I mean the labourers?—Yes.

50,657. Do they do the hedging and thatching, and that sort of thing, as well as they used to, do you think?—General labourers for all kinds of work are getting a good deal scarcer now than they were 20 or 30 years ago.

50,658. The young men do not take to it the same as they used to?—Just so. They simply take up ploughing, or some other branches, and they do not pay proper attention to general work.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

50,659. When tenants give notice of any improvements, do you not think that the landlords would consider them rather tedious if they came often to ask them to have some improvements made upon the farms?—I do not know that it is the case in this county.

50,660. Is there much attention paid in this part of the country to the breeding of stock?—Yes.

50,661. Do landlords procure good sires—horses and bulls, and that kind of thing?—I know the landlords have assisted in this county to establish a stud society; but, I am sorry to say——

50,662. It has not been patronised?—I do not say that it was not well patronised, but, I am sorry to say, it did not pay, and it has been wound up lately.

50,663. I am sorry to hear that. I suppose you consider that the better stock a man has the more likely he is to pay his rent?—Most decidedly.

50,664. Do landlords generally put farms in repair on the exchange of tenancy?—You mean the buildings?

50,665. Yes, and the farm throughout—generally?—Nothing beyond the buildings, as a rule. They generally put the buildings in repair.

50,666. Because there the difficulty you mentioned to Mr. Richard Jones arises as to the value of improvements?—Just so. I do not know that the landlords do anything outside the buildings. But they give gates and posts, and things of that kind.

50,667. Then with regard to valuations, you have been called in as an umpire; do you consider that it is well to have more than one arbitrator to decide the value?—I think in all cases it would be very much better if there were only one. In some cases I have been engaged by myself, but in other cases there has been one on each side, and an umpire appointed to settle in case of dispute; but I think it would be very much better that there should be only one man employed.

50,668. That is, provided he is quite competent. There is an advantage on the other hand, in hearing both sides of the questions discussed?—Quite so; there it is. If a single arbitrator is appointed, he will try and do what is right between all parties, if he is competent of course.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,669. I am not quite certain whether I understood you aright, in reference to the question of compensation for improvements under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. Do you think the schedule of the Act is defective, because it does not allow any head of compensation for the generally improved condition of the farm?—Yes, I think there ought to be more latitude given to the valuers as regards general improvement.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

50,670. I will tell you what is in my mind. The Central Chamber of Agriculture have been recently considering what amendments ought to be made in the schedule of this Act, and my friend Mr. Channing told me of the suggested new schedule, that under part 3 a heading of this kind was put in, "Compensation for generally "improved condition due to a series of years of "good farming," or some words of that kind?—Yes, that is exactly what it should be.

50,671. Do you think that some words of that kind should be added to it?—I believe they ought to be.

50,672. Assuming that that were done, in what way would you proceed to assess such a compensation for generally improved condition?—Well, of course there would be a difficulty in going into particulars, but still I should take the general appearance and condition of the farm as it presents itself to the valuers.

50,673. Then supposing the only question were, we will say, on part 3, in a case where you were to value the improvements done by the tenant, I suppose that with regard to, say, boning the land, you would find out the definite and particular condition of things, not from the tenant's statement, but from what you yourself saw?—In every case of boning, or anything of that kind, the receipts would have to be produced.

50,674. Quite so; when you ascertain the amount expended from the receipts?—Just so.

50,675. And that applies to most of the other specific improvements mentioned under Part 3?—All the purchased stuff, of course.

50,676. Then I suppose the way in which you would give compensation for the general improvement of the farm would be by adding some kind of per-centage?—The difficulty is this: when a person by good cultivation improves the general yield of the farm, of course he must improve the general condition of the farm. The Act now, I believe, goes far enough with regard to the purchased stuffs, but the difficulty is with regard to the increased produce of the farm.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,676A. Quite so. I can understand your method of valuation in dealing with purchased stuffs, but supposing we got some words added to the schedule such as I have mentioned, what would be the actual process of valuation in your mind?

Mr. Richard Jones.

May I interrupt one moment to suggest that before you came in, Mr. Brynmor Jones, the very question arose, and in answer to a question of mine Mr. Price said that the farm should be valued when the tenant entered it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,677. I know he says that would afford a basis of comparison. Take it so, but still what method do you pursue?—I believe it would be of great assistance if the farm should be valued at the time the tenant entered—the condition of the farm ascertained at the time the tenant entered. Of course that would give you an idea of what improvement he had done on the farm.

50,678. In fact you say it is impossible to show what improvement may be due to the good farming of a good tenant, unless you know in what condition the farm was at the commencement of the tenancy?—It would be difficult, no doubt.

50,679. Though you speak, I think, for the western district of the county, for the parish of Cray, I think you said you know the county pretty well?—Yes. I reside in the parish of Cray. I know pretty well the upper part of the county.

50,680. I find in the evidence given before the Hon. E. B. Portman in the year 1867, that the Rev. R. L. Venables, with reference to the parish and to the county generally, said: "The farmers "being of the same class with the labourers, "and intermarrying with them, do most of their "own work, assisted by their children, and "where necessary by young persons of both "sexes living in the house. They live very "frugally, making their profits chiefly by cattle "and sheep, especially sheep. There are sheep "walks of immense extent on the hills in the hun-"dred of Builth. There are singularly few cot-"tages independent of land. There are very few "labourers not occupying land." That was in the year 1867. Do you think that those words are now true of the county generally?—I believe the dwellings have improved very much since then. He refers to the dwellings; I believe the houses have improved generally throughout the country very much since then.

50,681. Do the farmers live frugally in your opinion?—Yes, I believe they do in most cases.

50,682. What is the general condition of the farms now; do they find a difficulty in paying their rent, do you think?—In very many cases they do, with the exception of those that had provided a little in the good times. Those farmers that were not above water before have great difficulty in paying the rents, but as a rule I believe the farmers of the county of Brecon are quite as prosperous as those of any county in Wales if not more so. I believe they are better farmers than you will find in other parts of Wales.

50,683. In other counties we have been told that times have been so bad that farmers often have to borrow money to pay the rent from their children who had gone to the hills and to the coal districts to work?—No doubt it is so in some cases.

50,684. I suppose, taking it broadly, we may say that it is more a pastoral than an arable county?—Yes, I believe so. Of course there are great tracts of hills on the edges, on the outside of the county.

50,685. Are women, who are not members of the farmer's family, employed very largely in this county for agricultural work or not?—Very little in field labour; you scarcely get any women to do field labour now. About 20 years ago they used to do hay making and turnip hoeing and different things, but now it is almost a thing of the past.

50,686. Are children employed at a very early age for agricultural purposes?—Not as a rule under 12—not until they pass the standards.

50,687. Not under the school age, you think?—Not now, but they used to be employed when younger before.

50,688. Do you think, from what you know of this county, that small farms are desirable?—Yes, I believe so. I think there ought to be a mixture of small farms and large farms. I think it is very much better for all parties that there should be farms of different sizes, and as a rule you will find there are many more applications for small farms than there are for large farms. That shows they are more desirable, I think.

50,689. Mr. Portman in 1867 said in reference to this county, and I ought to say that he was also referring to Glamorganshire: "The evidence "certainly tends to show that these small farms "are by no means so desirable as many people "are inclined to think." Then he goes on to say how the farmer usually commences with a capital of 1*l.* or 2*l.* per acre, and then he says: "His house is often far worse than a labourer's "cottage; there is but little privacy and little "regard for decency in the arrangement of the "sleeping accommodation. He lives from hand "to mouth; he is too poor to pay for any labour, "and is consequently obliged to keep all his "children at home as soon as their little hands "can do any work at all, and so neglects their "education." Then he refers to the farmer being obliged to mortgage his crops and so forth. Do you agree with that evidence?—Yes. It may have been so in times gone by, but the buildings are much improved generally, and I do not think you will find buildings of that description now.

50,690. I take it that you consider that is too sweeping an observation in his report?—With regard to the buildings it is so, but still no doubt the small farmers do work hard, and sometimes they have to work outside their own farms.

50,691. Are mops—fairs—still held in this county?—I do not know what you mean exactly by mops. Fairs are held.

50,692. Hiring fairs?—Yes.

50,963. They are still held, are they not?—Yes.

50,694. In May and November?—Yes, in May and November—twice a year.

50,695. I should like to get a little further information from you such as we have been trying to get in the other counties. You are speaking for the parish of Cray, I think?—Yes.

50,696. Is that a Welsh-speaking parish?—Yes, almost entirely.

50,697. One of the parishes adjacent to it is Ystradfellte?—Yes, but there is a range of hills running between Cray and Ystradfellte.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

50,698. Then, keeping on the Cray side, there is Glyntawe. Is that Welsh?—Yes, it is almost entirely Welsh. There may be a few English people.

50,699. What I mean is, do most of the tenant farmers and their labourers there habitually speak Welsh for the ordinary purposes of life?—Almost all the labourers are Welsh, but there may be a few Englishmen introduced about the limekilns there.

50,700. As to Ystradgynlais Higher, is that Welsh?—That is principally Welsh.

50,701. And Ystradgynlais Lower?—Yes.

50,702. And Traian Glas?—That is entirely Welsh.

50,703. And Isclydach?—Yes. It is all Welsh practically above the town of Brecon.

50,704. All Welsh above the town of Brecon?—Mostly.

50,705. Where the people habitually speak the Welsh language, is it the same in this county as we were told it was in Glamorganshire with regard to religion that the people belong mostly to the Nonconformist body?—Yes, a large percentage. I could not say so as to all. They are mixed so far as religion is concerned.

50,706. You think that a definite per-centage of the tenant farmers belong to the Church of England?—Oh, yes. The Church is pretty strong in our neighbourhood, but still the majority are Nonconformists.

50,707. Do the tenants complain of the covenants that are in the agreements on the estates in this neighbourhood?—No, I cannot speak with any knowledge upon that point. I do not know of any instances, I have none in my mind at present. It is possible, of course, but I am not cognizant of it.

50,708. They do not complain that the covenants are too binding with respect to cropping?—Not to my knowledge. In most of the cases in our district there are no agreements at all, but still I know in some cases there are agreements, and there may be binding clauses. However, I cannot speak with any knowledge of them.

50,709. Have you made a valuation at all on behalf of a landlord for dilapidations of a farm?—I am not certain. I have acted in several cases, but I think, as a rule, I was on the side of the tenant.

50,710. How do you interpret the word "waste." Would you bring into the term "waste" a case of cross cropping by a tenant, that is provided that the land was clean?—Not if the land was clean, but still land would not be very clean if it was wasted; I mean if it was going out of cultivation it would not be very clean.

50,711. You may get the case of cross cropping, and yet the land may be clean?—If the land was clean I would not say anything, but as a rule we have more difficulty the other way. Of course it soon gets dirty.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

50,712. Do you think the tenants have sufficient liberty to cultivate their farms?—Decidedly. I have never seen that liberty curtailed so far as our country is concerned.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,713. Are you of opinion that in order to ascertain the general improvement of a farm a record should be kept of the state of each field, its fences and ditches, when a tenant enters upon a farm?—I think it would be advantageous if there was an inventory made of the general condition of all the fields.

50,714. Of the whole state of the farm?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

50,715. Would not that be rather an expensive process upon each change of tenancy?—No doubt it would add expense. There is no question about that.

50,716. Do you suppose that that would be shared between the landlord and tenant?—Yes, decidedly.

50,717. Would there not be a danger in regard to that clause with respect to the improved condition of the farm, of giving a man compensation twice over, first for the specific manures and, secondly, for the results of them?—Of course the valuers would have to see into that and try to make out what was specific and what general.

50,718. Your point is, more latitude to the arbitrator?—Yes, I believe there ought to be a little more latitude allowed.

50,719. I have some questions to put to you which are handed in by Mr. W. T. Lee: "What "is the condition of the dwelling-houses and "out-buildings generally?"—I think I have answered that before, my Lord. I think they are very fair and very good generally; there may be exceptions but taking the general view I think that they are in very fair order.

50,720. "Are tenants expected to haul ma- "terials for buildings and drainage free?"—Yes, I believe that is the rule generally.

50,721. "If so, is this regarded as a griev- "ance?"—I never heard any complaints in that respect, except in cases where tenants leave very soon after the improvements are done: in those cases I know of tenants that have been allowed for it, and in some cases they have not been allowed.

50,722. "Do any of the tenants object to do "it free?"—I have not known of any case; I believe tenants are only too glad to do so.

50,723. "Do tenants who refuse to haul get "their buildings erected as soon as others?"—I do not happen to know of any case of the kind.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. R. T. Bassett called and examined.

See 42,197 –42,246 and 50,793 –50,805.

50,724. You wish to rebut certain statements by Benjamin Maddy at Carmarthen?—I do.

50,725. Will you do so as concisely as possible?—My Lord, having regard to the charges brought against me and the remarks that fell from the chair, may I ask you if I may call witnesses to substantiate my statements.

50,726. We are not a court of justice and we are not here to try the case. We are very anxious to give you an opportunity of rebutting any statement made by any one impugning your character; we are very glad to hear any witnesses affecting themselves, but we cannot try the case as a court of justice. We can only hear those witnesses as far as their evidence affects themselves?—I understand that, but I have my witnesses here. May I read the evidence that those witnesses would give if you say I may not call them.

50,727. I think they should give their evidence themselves?—Oh, I would sooner they did.

50,728. Now, will you go on and may I ask you to confine yourself strictly to the rebutting evidence?—Certainly. I say that I have not directly or indirectly stopped or interfered with Maddy in his vocation as a rabbit catcher since the time of his giving evidence before the Commission. I recollect in the month of October last before the Commission sat at Cardiff writing to Loughor of Tregough Farm, the shooting over whose farm I rent from himself direct, telling him I proposed to shoot on the 2nd November (that was before the Commission sat at Cardiff) and that I should be much obliged if he would not let the rabbits be interfered with until after I had shot. This request was attended to. This is the only interference, if it be one, with Maddy which I can account for. I kept no copy of my letter to Loughor, but I recollect the substance of it perfectly, and I read the letter to Colonel Tyler, who is here, before sending it. It is not true that I ever gave instructions to my keeper, Alfred Groom, to ask Mr. Watts not to employ Maddy. I am in the habit of giving farmers' sons two or three days shooting at the end of the year, principally by way of acknowledging the assistance they give in the preservation of foxes, and what I told Groom, the keeper, to do was to tell Mr. Watts that his sons might either have a rabbit catcher and no shooting or have two or three days shooting in the coverts and no rabbit catcher. About March 12th I received a letter, which I did not keep, from Mr. Watts to the effect that he thought I was offended with him because he had employed Maddy, and I wrote him the following letter in reply, and which I now produce (handing in letter).

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,729. I think it ought to be distinctly understood that we are not inviting your evidence. Supposing when the papers are laid before the Public Prosecutor he should think there is a primâ facie case, it is possible that some statements you may make might prejudice the case?—I must chance that. I am only here to say what the real facts of the case were.

50,730. I know, but we only caution you against making any statement that may tell against you?—Thank you. Shall I read the letter that I wrote to Mr. Watts?

Lord Kenyon.

50,731. Yes?—"Crossways, Cowbridge, S. "Wales. Dear Sir,—You have not given me any "offence by employing Ben Maddy. You, of "course, have a perfect right to employ him, "and I therefore have nothing to say to it one "way or another."

50,732. What is the date of that letter?—March 12th, 1894.

Mr. Grove.

50,733. Is that the whole of the letter?—No. "With regard to the shooting party, a good "deal of what you state in your letter is news "to me, and I shall be glad to see you on the "subject. I may not see you tomorrow "(Tuesday) in Cowbridge, but I hope to do so "the following Tuesday, 20th, as I should like "the matter put right."

Lord Kenyon.

50,733A. Have you anything further you wish to say?—With reference to the visit by Maddy to myself at Crossways, the letter I wrote to Maddy is quite correct, and it was in consequence of an application I recived from Radcliffe, the tenant at Coed Hill he having informed me that rabbits were causing considerable trouble. I wrote to Maddy with a view of putting him on. The following is a copy of the letter he wrote me in reply:—"Craig, "Penllyne, April 9/94. R. T. Bassett, Esq. "I have been to Coed Hills and do not see that "there is many rabbits there to do damage, "and I think it would be a waste of time for "me to go as I am busy at present. I shall be "pleased at any time to oblige you if wanted." I think I shall bring conclusive evidence to show that Maddy never went to Coed Hills at all. I have been in the habit for some years of giving Maddy a present of a sovereign once a year, sometimes more, as I found him very good to me in the preservation of fox cubs which often got into his wires, and I had reason to suppose that they caused damage, whilst I believed that Maddy took care of and preserved the cubs. I therefore took the opportunity when he was seeing me of giving the usual gift, but I distinctly deny that a word was said about any evidence which had been given or was to be given at Carmarthen or elsewhere, or that the gift had the smallest reference to evidence given, or to be given. When Maddy came he said he had come at great inconvenience to himself, as he was working at Llanharran, about seven miles from my house (he told the Commission that he came a distance of two miles), where he had a job of fencing for Mr. Blandy Jenkins, and he said he had to return that day, that is, he had to return seven miles that day in order to pay his men. It never for a moment entered my head when I gave Maddy the 1*l.*, that it was otherwise than for the usual customary gift, and for services rendered by him in the preservation of the foxes. The last time I saw Maddy before this occasion was on the 20th March, when I happened to be sitting as Chairman of the Bench of Magistrates at Cowbridge, and his father had been summoned for not maintaining a daughter, and coming out I met Maddy on the road and said his father was not in court at the time, but he had better see his father and see that the order of the magistrates was attended to, or his father would get into trouble. I thought he seemed put out, and he said, "You were rough upon me at Chepstow, "and if I go before the Commissioners again, I "will lay it on hot and strong." I said, "All "right, as long as you tell the truth, you can "say what you like." In the month of January last, I was a candidate for a vacancy in the Glamorgan County Council, and I recollect one day when I was out canvassing meeting Maddy. In the course of conversation, the evidence given before the Commissioners was referred to in general terms, and Maddy told me he gave his evidence at the request of several persons who had written to him to say that if he did not come forward rebutting the evidence I gave at Cowbridge, they would not employ him. I am prepared with the following witnesses who are present to prove shortly, as follows:—Colonel Hobart Tyler will prove the arrangements for a day's shooting with Loughor.

50,734. Please refer only to your own case?—Yes, this is the case of Loughor, and Col. Tyler saw the letter that I wrote to Loughor. That letter has unfortunately been lost, and I bring him forward to prove what the contents of the letter were.

50,735. You wish to bring a witness forward to prove what the contents of the letter were?—Yes.

50,736. Cannot you give it of your own knowledge?—I know perfectly well. I only want him to corroborate.

50,737. We would rather you gave it of your own knowledge?—What I said to Mr. Loughor was this: I asked him if he would kindly postpone putting on a rabbit catcher till I had shot the covers.

50,738. You understand me, we are not trying the case, and, therefore, we do not want any witness to corroborate you; but cannot you continue with your own case without these witnesses which you propose to call?—I only ask you to let me call witnesses in order to strengthen my case.

50,739. But I have pointed out already that we are not a court of justice, and, therefore, we do not propose to call witnesses. If you will continue with your actual denial itself it will be quite sufficient for us?—It will?

50,740. Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,741. What I understand is this: Maddy made certain complaints against you. He complained that according to certain facts which had come to his knowldege you had interfered with his occupation?—Yes.

50,742. Well, we cannot try that question. If Maddy's statements are true then, as Lord Carrington said at Carmarthen, there may be a case under the Witnesses Protection Act, 1891, but we do not propose to try that case?—Then it seems to me it might go on for ever—my word against Maddy's.

50,743. Quite so. Therefore we must stop somewhere?—I bring witnesses to confirm my statements; I do not think he can bring one.

Lord Kenyon.

But you must bring your witnesses in another place.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

The matter must be threshed out in another place, if at all.

Lord Kenyon.

50,744. We are quite ready to accept your story from yourself?—Well, I have nothing more to say.

50,745. As far as we are concerned, it will be for us to consider in our minds which is the better man, yourself or Maddy?—My witnesses make my case very strong, and I only wish to clear myself.

50,746. We quite understand that you have these witnesses to prove these facts. It is quite sufficient for you to say that, I think, and to continue with your absolute denial yourself. Will you go on with your evidence as it refers to the transaction between yourself and Maddy. You say you did not write to Mr. Loughor asking him not to employ Maddy?—Certainly not. I asked him to postpone it for two or three days, and I would point out that I wrote that letter before Maddy ever gave his evidence at all—before you sat at Cardiff.

50,747. What was the date of that letter?—It was in the end of October. I shot my covers on the 2nd November, and Maddy gave his evidence on the 4th November.

50,748. What was the gist of that letter?—I asked him if he would kindly postpone putting on a rabbit catcher until we had shot the covers.

50,749. Is there anything further in Maddy's evidence that you wish to deny?—I deny that my keeper ever took such a message to Watts to ask him not to employ Maddy. I deny his statement where he says, "The tenant farmers "informed me that they could not put me "on, because they should offend their landlord, "Captain Homfray, who is Mr. Bassett's "cousin, because I had been giving evidence "before the Commissioners. This is the "general reply I have at all or nearly all "the farms where I used to be employed "constantly. The tenants say they are "afraid to employ me lest they should "offend their landlords. (Q.) I want to ask "you one question. You say the farmers in-"formed me that they could not put me on, "because they should offend the landlord, Mr. "Homfray, who is Mr. Bassett's cousin. Can "you give the names of any farmers who "told you that? (A.) Yes; in the first place, "there was Thomas Radcliffe of Greathouse farm "in the parish of Penllyne, the first man I went "to after I had been giving evidence"—that is untrue—"I have been catching for at least 20 "years regularly, only barring that I had given "a few days' ferreting to some outsider." Radcliffe has been in the farm only 14 years, and he has not known Maddy for more than seven years; so the statement that he had been catching for 20 years is absolutely untrue. I also wish again most emphatically to deny that I gave him the sovereign or anything else, except as a casual gift, in order to make him look upon the foxes in a more favourable light than he perhaps would do. I know the foxes do him some damage in his rabbiting; they take rabbits out of his wires and bite his wires through. I do not think anybody in his senses would give a man a sovereign to stop him, if he thought he was going to give evidence against him. I do not know, my Lord, that I can say anything more, unless I am allowed to read the statement of my witnesses.

Professor Rhŷs.

50,750. Were you in the habit of giving a sovereign in years previously?—Oh, yes; three or four times before.

Lord Kenyon.

50,751. Maddy says this: "(Q.) What was "the reason in your mind that Mr. Bassett gave "you a sovereign before you had caught any "rabbits? (A.) Well, I do not know, but it is "like this. I have been around there now since "the Ground Game Act came into force in 1881, "I believe, and I have never had an offer of "work or a sovereign so cheap as that." Do you deny that? Did you hear that?—Yes, I heard it.

50,752. "I have never had an offer of work "or a sovereign so cheap as that." You said just now that you gave him a sovereign most years?—I did give him money every year—the last four years, sometimes more than a sovereign.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS RADCLIFFE called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 42,231. 50,753. Have you read Maddy's evidence?—Yes.

50,754. Is there anything in his evidence that you wish to rebut?—Yes. I see in his evidence that he gave at Carmarthen he said that I was afraid of the landlord to employ him to catch rabbits. That is untrue, because I remember he came to me after he gave evidence in Cardiff, and in the month of November he asked me for a job to catch rabbits, and I said no, that I had another man at the present time catching, and then I could not employ two at the same time I did not think.

50,755. Had he been in the habit of catching rabbits for 20 years regularly there?—No, it is 14 years since I am living in the farm, and I did not know Maddy more than seven or eight years at the most. He had been now and then; since that seldom, not often; a week or a fortnight, or three weeks at the most at a time; he has not been in my employ now for 18 months or more.

50,756. Then I understand that you did not withhold this job from Maddy on account of the evidence which he gave?—Not at all.

50,757. It was because you had another rabbit-catcher?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

50,758. What was the name of that other rabbit-catcher?—Gabriel Munden.

50,759. Had you ever employed him before?—Yes.

50,760. How long before?—Now and then—well, I do not know; I was not particular about keeping the time, because Maddy was very often up in the works in the winter time, and I would employ that man who was living there always.

50,761. How long before this last time had you employed him—for a year or six months, or what?—Well, six months perhaps. I do not know. I do not remember exactly the time. He had been catching for me half-a-dozen times before that. Mr. Homfray nor the agent never told me a word about the rabbits, nor Maddy, for I to be afraid of him. I have been under Mr. Bassett 10 years. I went to Mr. Bassett to complain once about them; he told me then, "You need not come to me; they are yours." That is what Mr. Bassett told me, and I find Mr. Bassett a gentleman in all his doings with me in the 10 years.

Lord Kenyon.

50,762. Then I understand you deny that you withheld this job from Maddy on account of any evidence that Maddy gave?—Yes.

50,763. And that to your knowledge the other farmers have done the same thing?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I for one abstain from asking any questions on the principle that I have laid down, that where there is some side issue raised here which is outside the scope of our inquiry it is no part of our duty to inquire whether there has been an offence under the Witnesses Protection Act, 1891. Mr. Maddy has made these statements, and I think my Lord is quite right to receive your statement; but, having regard to the position, I for one am not putting any questions at all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EVAN LOUGHOR called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 42,210. 50,764. You have read Ben Maddy's evidence, have you?—Yes.

50,765. Is there anything in it you wish to deny or rebut?—Yes.

50,766. Will you kindly say what it is?—He said that Mr. Bassett stopped me from employing him in catching rabbits. Nothing of that was true.

50,767. Is that untrue?—Yes, quite untrue.

50,768. His statement is this: "I was asked "by Mr. Loughor of Tregough to come to his farm "to catch rabbits." Did you ask him to do so?—No, never.

50,769. He says, "Before I went I met Mr. "Loughor and he told me that he had received "a letter from Mr. Bassett who requested him "not to employ Ben Maddy"?—Yes, I did.

50,770. Did you meet him?—Mr. Bassett wrote to me and asked me would I be good enough not to employ him until he had had his few days' shooting.

50,771. Until after his shooting?—Yes; but Maddy has offered his services to me several times, but I never employed him.

50,772. You never employed him?—Never employed him.

50,773. Then he says, "Mr. Loughor said that "he was very sorry but he must ask me" (that is Ben Maddy) "not to go to the farm as having "received the letter from Mr. Bassett, he did "not like to offend him." Did you use those words?—I made use of the words that I should be sorry to offend Mr. Bassett not to employ him until he had the shooting. That was no reason why I should not employ him afterwards. Mr. Bassett never stopped me from employing him.

50,774. Did you use those words to Maddy; I am not quite clear what you mean?—Maddy asked me should he come and catch rabbits. I said, "Not until Mr. Bassett has had his shooting, "for I do not wish to offend Mr. Bassett."

50,775. Do I understand you were going to engage Maddy afterwards?—If I thought proper.

50,776. Is there anything else you wish to rebut?—No, nothing else. Mr. Bassett told me that he would rather for me to employ Maddy than an unexperienced man, I believe so. I believe Mr. Bassett is here and he can contradict me.

50,777. Mr. Bassett rents the shooting over your farm, does he not?—Yes.

50,778. Maddy says this: "I asked Mr. "Loughor on Tuesday last, and he told me and "four who were in the company that Mr. "Bassett had stopped him. I asked him just "like this, 'Mr. Loughor, did Mr. Bassett or "'yourself stop me from going to catch rabbits "'there after you had engaged me?' He said, "'Mr. Bassett stopped you. I should only be "'too pleased.'" Did you say that?—I never engaged him.

50,779. Did you use those words?—I never made use of such words. The man has offered his services to me several times, but I would not employ him. I fully made up my mind to have nothing to do with him because I was annoyed by him.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Thomas Alexander called and examined.

See 42,197–42,246 and next witness.

50,780. I believe you wish to rebut some evidence given by Ben Maddy?—My Lord, I am here in response to a notice sent to me by your Secretary that certain evidence was given at Carmarthen by a man of the name of Maddy which might be considered to be prejudicial to me if not rebutted. I am here consequently with the object, so far as I can, of rebutting that evidence. I do not know, my Lord, whether I may take it that the impression created in the mind of the Commission by that evidence was in the first place that I had endeavoured to prevent Maddy getting a living on account of the evidence which he had given before the Commission?

50,781. I cannot answer for any impression there may be in the Commissioners' minds?—I will accept your statement.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,782. Lord Carrington, after Maddy had given his evidence, used these words: "The "Commissioners having heard your statements "will consider them carefully, and will, if on "consideration your allegations seem to present "a primâ facie case, lay the matter before the "Public Prosecutor"?—That I shall have to deal with later on, and I intend to deal with it. I shall raise a question as to whether or not upon an ex parte statement of that kind that remark was justified.

50,783. You must not assume that we believe or disbelieve Maddy's statement. The only thing you are entitled to assume is that we are still of the same opinion as we were when Lord Carrington used those words?—Might I go so far as to ask how far the Commission were justified in arriving at that conclusion upon an ex parte statement made to them?—Ought they not first of all to have given me an opportunity as an independent person of rebutting that evidence before those remarks were made?

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Will you continue to rebut, please?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,784. You must not ask us questions?—Possibly not, with due submission, therefore, I submit the following, although this to some extent is subject to some little variation, because I say here that I regret that I had not had an opportunity of perusing the shorthand writer's notes of the evidence before preparing this outline. I, however, am informed that the report of the evidence in the "South Wales Daily News" for April the 23rd last is fairly accurate, and I consequently deal with the matter as reported in that paper. But, my Lord, I wish to alter that by saying that since I prepared that synopsis of my evidence, I yesterday morning got the shorthand writer's notes of the evidence, so that I am now able to deal with it. In the shorthand notes Maddy is said to have made statements which are supposed to reflect on me by an attempt to make it appear that I was endeavouring to prevent his getting his living by killing rabbits on account of his having given evidence before the Commission. With the object of placing before the Commissioners the true position of the matter, I think it will be best to read the correspondence in my possession relating to the taking of the shooting between Sir Joseph Spearman, myself, and Messrs. Williams and Davies, which, I think, will speak for itself. Now, while I am dealing with that, I may at once refer to Maddy's evidence in which he has put before your Lordship and the Commission the communication which was sent by me to Mr. Davies calling his attention to what was being done. At the same time that this is done, for a reason which can perhaps be better explained elsewhere than here, the previous letter, which contains the whole crux of the position, was not laid before the Commission at all. That letter I propose to deal with. First of all may I say that in this case the shooting was let by Sir Joseph Spearman to myself: that one of the conditions of the taking was that Hill, the gamekeeper, was to kill the rabbits and no one else except any of my shooting parties; if they had to be destroyed by trapping or wiring or netting they were to be killed by the keeper. Messrs. Davies and Williams, who took the shooting, did not confine themselves within the limits of this agreement, but employed a person to destroy the rabbits otherwise than the keeper. The keeper wrote informing Sir Joseph Spearman that this had been done. At the same time the keeper sent on to Sir Joseph Spearman the letters which he received from Messrs. Williams and Davies, and Sir Joseph wrote to me in these words on the 31st January 1894: "I have received the enclosed from Hill"—referring to Davies and Williams' letter notifying that they had appointed Maddy—"the keeper at Llansannor. You must please "see Mr. Morgan"—that refers to Williams and Davies—"and stop his employing Ben Maddy "to catch rabbits, as I will not have him on "my place, as he will clear all the game of "every sort on the place." I want to make clear to your Lordship and the Commission that that was a letter from Sir Joseph Spearman to me calling upon me to confine myself within the limits of the agreement. That was dated from "The Hall, Wem, Salop, January "31st, 1894." On February the 1st, 1894 I wrote to Mr. Davies in these terms—this is a copy of the letter, and the original can be produced if necessary:—"I have received from Sir "Joseph Spearman this morning a letter which "you were good enough to send to Hill, the "keeper, informing him that you had instructed "Ben Maddy to kill the rabbits at Llansannor. "I want to point out to you that the shooting "was taken upon the same terms upon which I "held it, one of these terms being that all "rabbits were to be trapped and destroyed by "Hill, the keeper. Sir Joseph has consequently "called my attention to this arrangement, and "requested that I should forthwith call upon "you to comply with it. I must therefore ask "you to be good enough to cancel your instruc-"tions to Maddy as Sir Joseph will not under "any circumstances consent to his going on the "ground." Now, I desire here to point out to you that I was simply, in doing what I did, confining myself within a contract which had been entered into in the ordinary course of business between business people.

Lord Kenyon.

50,785. You were carrying out Sir Joseph Spearman's instructions?—I was carrying out

Sir Joseph Spearman's instructions. I have a large quantity of correspondence which would throw a great deal of light upon the evidence given by Maddy in other respects; but while I am upon this point may I say at once that the great reason for his objecting to Maddy was that he had occasion to take out a summons before the magistrates for trespassing in pursuit of game on two or three occasions, and once he had been convicted at Cowbridge (I can give the date) for an assault upon his gamekeeper. I think, under the circumstances, Sir Joseph was perfectly justified in taking the course he did.

That is the statement of my case. There has been a great deal said in connexion with this evidence as to what the shooting was taken for, and that it was sold again for 5*l.*, and all such nonsense as that. I can, if the Commission think it within their province, go into facts and figures which will entirely dispose of that. There is nothing in it whatever. I admit the shooting was taken, although I deny that the facts given by Maddy are correct. I would refer you to his own evidence, in which he mentions 130*l.* I say with regard to that, that if the Commission should desire it, I am in a position to prove that the statements which he has made with regard to its being 130*l.* and then parted with for 5*l.*, clearly indicating that the gentlemen who took it got nothing more out of it, is entirely without foundation.

50,786. I understand you deny that you did not employ Maddy on account of evidence he gave?—Yes, I do entirely deny that, and I want to say in justification, if you will allow me; that I did not know the man; that I did not even know he had given evidence before the Commissioners at Cardiff. I see Mr. Maddy wishes to deny that, but I say I did not. You can swear me if you wish, and he has no right to interrupt me. I say, further, he came to my office and asked if the shooting was to let. I deny his statement with regard to what was said. I replied to him that we intended to let it with the house, if possible. He was then leaving the office. I did not even know him; and as he was going out through the door of the outer office, I turned round and said, "Supposing we do not "let it with the house, I shall be glad to know "for whom you want it." He said, "I am coming "to ask for it for Ben Maddy," and then I said, "You can go back and say he will not have it "at any price." He says he came in and represented that he wanted to take it up to May for a few months. I say emphatically he said he wanted it for the next season. As I say, I did not know he had given evidence before the Commission. I did not know the man. I did not know him when he was in my office, and I am prepared to prove by my representative, that it was not until after I had read the evidence at Carmarthen, that I knew the man I had been addressing. That is the evidence I wish to tender with respect to that. I daresay I may be excused for feeling a little bit warm over this matter, because I feel that as a private citizen, I have been attacked in an unjust manner by this man, and I do not think my position in connexion with it warrants that attack. I feel annoyed. I admit that I, as a private citizen endeavouring to do the best according to the lights that are within me, that I should be subject to this sort of thing, and I think it is a great pity if, as a Commission, you have the power, you do not make this man pay something towards the cost I have been put to in coming here to-day.

50,787. Have you anything else you wish to rebut?—I do not think there is anything more. There is one thing in which he refers to me as having given evidence in regard to the manorial rights of Lord Bute at Cowbridge. Well, my Lord, if all the other statements are about as accurate as that, I leave it to you to say what reliance can be placed upon them. I did not give any evidence at Cowbridge about Lord Bute. I was certainly in the room when you opened the Commission at Cowbridge for about an hour, and then I left.

50,788. You did at Pontypridd?—Yes, I did at Pontypridd, but that is not Cowbridge. I simply gave that as an evidence of his accuracy. I point out to you and the Commission that if there are inaccuracies with regard to these little matters there are also inaccuracies with regard to big matters. If he will deal with little matters in this way he will deal with the bigger ones in the same way. I should like to say this: I do not know whether it would be desirable that I should read this to you, but I now desire to say that the course taken by Sir Joseph Spearman against Maddy was not due to what he attributes it, but a want of confidence in him.

50,789. You have told us that before?—The rabbits were all in a warren properly fenced in.

50,790. I do not think that is relevant. We quite understand your contention is that you deny you have injured Maddy on account of the evidence he gave?—I have a letter from Sir Joseph Spearman here which I wish to read.

50,791. Is that relevant?—Yes. It is: "Your "letter received this morning"——

50,792. Does this letter from Sir Joseph Spearman refer to the instructions he gave you?—Yes, it does. This is dated The Club House, St. Andrew's, North Britain. "I gladly take all "the responsibility on myself with respect to "Ben Maddy being stopped at Llansannor. I "see in the papers that he stated before the "Commission that he had been stopped in con-"sequence of evidence he had given previously. "I have no knowledge what that evidence was. "I have instructed Huntley"—my agent—"to "go to Brecon on Tuesday and state my reasons "for objecting to Ben Maddy, and you are "welcome to give the same yourself. I was "convinced in my own mind that the result of "his being employed would be that every head "of game would be cleared off the property.—"Yours faithfully, J. L. E. Spearman."

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Benjamin Maddy re-called and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

50,793. You have heard the evidence of these witnesses, Mr. Bassett, Mr. Radcliffe, Mr. Loughor, and Mr. D. T. Alexander. Is there anything you wish to say?—Yes; I wish to rebut most of the statements of each of those witnesses. In the first place, Mr. Bassett says he met me at Cowbridge. Well, he asked me about my father. He was summoned that day to appear. Mr. Bassett was the magistrate, and Mr. Dunn, I believe, who is in court. The two magistrates were sitting, and the case was supposed to come on about half-past 12.

50,794. Do you deny the conversation?—I deny part of it.

50,795. Which part of it?—I do not know exactly the way in which he said it. I thought of putting the statement before you as it was between me and Mr. Bassett. I went as near as I can recollect at a quarter-past 12 to Cowbridge, and went up towards the police court. My father was supposed to be there, but he was crippled and could not arrive in time. I met

Mr. Bassett and Mr. Dunn as they came out from the police court. He says, "Maddy, what "is the reason your father does not pay to the "invalided child of his?" I said, "The poor old man is too old, he cannot keep himself." He said, "Why, Ben, don't you give something in-"stead of your father towards the mainten-"ance?" I said, "How can I give when you "are taking the bread and cheese out of my "mouth wherever I am going." He says, "Where did I take the bread and cheese out of your mouth?" I said, "In one or two places. "Only the other morning I went to Llan-"thrywyd to Mr. Watts, where I had an "engagement to catch rabbits; your keeper "was there, and he says he came from you to "ask Mr. Watts to stop me being employed." He says, "Do you believe all you hear, Ben?" I said, "No, but I believe that, and now," I said, "I have left off catching rabbits. I cannot get "a job catching rabbits, and Mr. Blandy Jen-"kins, Llanharan, has employed me, and only

"last night." I said, "I see you have been "trying to prove me a liar in Monmouthshire." He said, "I did contradict you"; but I said, "I shall meet you at Carmarthen, and I hope you will be there," and he said, "Mind and get your expenses paid." That is the conversation between Mr. Bassett and me. That is all. I cannot remember it word for word.

50,796. Is there any other statement you wish to rebut?—Only that his keeper met me at Mr. Watts at Tydraw. His son, I believe, is in Court. Old Mr. Watts was very bad on the couch in the room and his son came in for a jug of beer.

50,797. We do not want any irrelevant details. Confine yourself strictly to what you say Mr. Bassett has said which you say is not true?—His keeper said that Mr. Bassett had sent him to Mr. Watts to ask him not to employ me.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,798. That is exactly what you said at Carmarthen. He denies it?—I say it is right.

Lord Kenyon.

50,799. We do not want a repetition of what you said before. Now as to Mr. Radcliffe?—Yes, I have here the man that was banking at the edge of a field when Mr. Radcliffe came to me and told me I was to go off the ground as Mr. Homfray would not be willing for him to employ me as I had given evidence at Cardiff. Here is the man's own handwriting to witness it (handing a paper).

50,800. That is evidence in corroboration; that is not rebutting something now which Mr. Bassett has come forward upon. Have you anything to say with regard to Mr. Loughor's evidence?—I have to say this. He stated this to me in this public-house, and I have witnesses to come who heard it. He says he never did make the statement.

50,801. He said in answer to me that he was sorry he could not employ you, but Mr. Bassett did not wish him to employ any one?—He says he engaged me; he left word in several places in Cowbridge for me to go to his place.

50,802. Did you go?—I went and met him, and he said "I have a letter written from Mr. "Bassett not to employ you." He made this statement in the public-house before a room full of company.

50,803. He said the reason was Mr. Bassett did not wish it until the shooting was done?—I do not know how he could stop me without.

50,804. Have you anything to say with regard to Mr. Alexander's evidence?—Nothing; but I think you have had letters from Mr. D. W. Davies at Carmarthen, and he told me further that if Mr. Alexander came forward to rebut any evidence, he would come forward later on.

50,805. Mr. Alexander said you had been up for poaching?—I was never prosecuted for poaching in my life. They would only like to get the chance. I was convicted for insulting the keeper at Llansannor estate I do admit, and if I had a new trial and you went into the facts I think the keeper would be convicted. I was convicted shamefully by the Cowbridge magistrates against the evidence, and I think if it came on again I could correct that. If they get me before a Cowbridge magistrate they will give it to me hot at all times. I was never convicted except on that one occasion—never for poaching. I heard Mr. Alexander say I take all the game. I think no man on the face of this earth can prove me to have taken anything but hares and rabbits which I have a perfect right to do for the tenant farmers.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. F. W. A. ROCHE called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

50,806. You are a landowner, are you not?—I am.

50,807. You have a statement I think?—Yes.

50,808. Will you proceed with it?—I am a landowner in Carnarvonshire, Merionethshire, and Breconshire. I also farm in the latter county. I have lived in Wales and take an active part in the management of my property from the time I came of age. So far as I have observed there is no difference between the English system and Welsh system of estate management. Leases are probably less numerous in Wales. The Welsh farmer prefers a year-to-year taking. He also prefers taking by parol to a written agreement. It is usual for the landlord to provide the buildings and repair them, and generally do all improvements enumerated in Part 1. of the First Schedule, Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. As regards drainage the landlord either does it for nothing or does it and charges interest on the outlay or supplies the pipes, the tenant supplying the labour. Welsh landlords have been blamed because their rents have not gone down as much as those of most of the English landlords. Landlords cannot regulate rent. Natural economic laws do that for them. The reason why rents have gone down less in Wales than in most parts of England is because Wales is a stock-rearing country, growing very little wheat. Wales has an area of about 4,800,000 acres, of which 2,856,000 acres are in cultivation. Only 55,000 of this is devoted to wheat 110,000 to barley, 240,000 to oats, 2,316,000 is under grass; the remainder roots and miscellaneous crops. As not 1 acre in 50 is devoted to wheat, the fall in the price of that article has affected Wales very little. One acre in eight is devoted to barley and oats. Variation in the prices of these would therefore be felt so far as they were not required for feeding stock and sold. The chief factor which regulates the value of land in Wales is the price of the stock fed on its 2,316,000 acres of pasture and meadow and its 2,000,000 acres of hill and mountain. The appended tables give the variations in the price of meat from 1700, and in the prices of wheat, barley, and oats, from 1814. If you wish a verification of these tables I can tell you the sources from which I got them. I have drawn them up myself, partly from Government returns, partly from Thorold Rogers' "History of Prices" and from a valuable article in the last June number of the "Nineteenth Century," by G. F. Steffen, which carries on Thorold Rogers' book to the present time. I believe they are all correct prices. These are general averages in the case of the price of meat; a lower average might strictly speaking be taken for Wales up to the middle of the present century, and until the railways equalised prices by bringing Wales into easy communication with the large centres of population. It will be observed that during the greater portion of the last century the price of one pound of meat averaged from a fraction over 2*d.* to 3½*d.* In 1780 it rose to 4*d.* Then came the great war period, when articles of food reached a higher price than they had ever done before or have done since. In 1800 meat rose to 6¾*d.* In 1812 to nearly 9*d.* In 1825 it had fallen again to 5½*d.* In 1852 it had again fallen to 4½*d.* From that year a steady rise took place to 1875, when it nearly reached 7*d.* From that year to 1893 it gradually fell to a fraction under 6*d.* Meat has averaged higher during the last 25 years than at any time previously with the exception of the great war period. The last 10 years, although there has been a fall, averages higher than any similar period with the exception of the 10 years 1870–80 and the great war period. Taking the table for wheat, oats and barley it will be observed how the price of wheat, which in 1814 was 40*s.* per quarter dearer than barley, and 50*s.* dearer than oats, has gradually approximated to the prices of the two latter until now it is hardly dearer than barley. The relative values of barley and oats have been very constant, 10*s.* per quarter generally representing the difference between them. Although there has been a fall in oats and barley, it is a small one compared to the great drop in wheat. These figures show conclusively why Welsh rents have not fallen in the same degree as those of English wheat-growing plough lands—and why the agricultural depression has been felt in a less degree in Wales than in England. The depression caused by the English markets being closed to Welsh store stock, owing to the failure of last year's fodder crops, has been undoubtedly severe, but it is a temporary affair arising from temporary causes and will not last. Extraordinary remedies have been proposed. To introduce legislation on Irish lines, to rob Peter to pay Paul, to introduce fixity of tenure, free sale, and fair rents, that is to say, to take the freehold from the man who owns it and reduce him to the position of a rentcharger — the man who rents it to keep it as long as he likes, sell it to whom he likes, subject to an annual payment of less than the annual value. Under the working of the Irish Land Acts a fair rent means a sum considerably less than the real rent, generally 25 to 30 per cent. less. The loss to the Welsh freeholder by a confiscatory bill of this nature would be considerably greater than has been the loss to the Irish freeholder under the Irish Land Acts, because amongst other reasons land is worth more years purchase in Wales than it was in Ireland. Land is sometimes sold for over 40 years' purchase in Wales. The average may be taken at 30 years' purchase. For example, a man buys a farm worth 100*l.* per annum for 3,000*l.* (30 years' purchase). He lets it for 100*l.* per annum. An Act is passed embodying the three F's. Result —all that is left to him of his freehold is a rentcharge of some ⅔rds of the annual value, say 70*l.* A rentcharge is worth 25 years' purchase. He has now instead of a farm worth 3,000*l.* a rentcharge worth 1,760*l.* He loses 1,250*l.* of his 3,000*l.* If mortgaged, his position is still worse — the loss of the 1,250*l.* falls entirely on the margin left after payment of the mortgage. The three F's. would rob all freeholders who had let their land. Those who were mortgaged it would ruin. It would be disastrous to Wales. No country can prosper where property is liable to wholesale confiscation. Since the present agitation has been started there has arisen a distinct reluctance on the part of lenders to advance money on land in Wales and a demand for higher rate of interest. If the annual payment for land is to be regulated by a court, it logically follows that the price of the produce of that land and the wages of the labourers who till that land must be dealt with in the same manner. If the payment for the land upon which the thistles are grown is to be decided by a court so must the payment for those thistles, and also for the animal who eats those thistles. The economic laws which regulate the rent of land, the wages of labour and the prices of commodities can never be overruled by legislation, but the attempt to overrule them has often done much mischief. It is to be sincerely hoped that Wales is not going to be the subject of an experiment of this kind. It is important that the freeholder should be secure in the possession of his land. It is equally important that the same security should be given to the tenant farmers' capital, and that he should be repaid for any unexhausted improvements when he leaves his farm. The Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 is a fair attempt to solve this problem. If I may, I should like to make one or two further remarks?

50,809. Certainly?—I have noticed in the reports of your Commission that several witnesses in different counties (and also a witness here to-day) talked about a general improvement. Now a general improvement, if spoken of as a thing apart from particular improvements, is a logical fallacy as well as an agricultural heresy. All generals must be made up of particulars, and all particular improvements must be made up of general improvements. And as regards these particular improvements, no doubt every Act may be amended either for better or for worse; but speaking as a landlord who has managed to take an active part in the management of his own property, and has farmed 400 or 500 acres, I cannot help thinking that on the whole the Act of 1883 meets the case very, very fairly. The only point where, perhaps, alteration might be made in benefit of the farmer, would be, taking one or two things from Part I. of the first schedule, which requires the landlord's consent, to Part III. There is one point which I, as a landowner, should have no objection to see transferred from the first part to the third part, and that is the laying down of land in permanent pasture. Then, my Lord, with reference to remedies, it appears to me that legislation is needed, first, to remove the present grossly unfair amount of taxation on real property. The axiom that taxation should be so far as possible indirect, is recognised by all schools of economists. The present system of taxation is practically a bonus to foreign agriculturists at the expense of the British. The second point which I would urge would be to enable Government loans to be advanced to occupiers for the purchase of their holdings. I should like to add to that. There is no doubt that by the different Acts, the Allotments Acts of 1887 and 1890, and the Small Agricultural Holdings Act, 1892, and also by certain clauses in the Local Government Act of 1894, there has been an attempt to develop the freeholders by public means, by the Government advancing loans and by assistance from various local bodies, but at the same time that does not quite meet the case of the tenant farmer properly so-called. The case of the tenant farmer properly so-called requires an Act which is not at present in existence. It requires that Government should directly, without any interference on the part of local bodies, be prepared to advance loans on the same principle as that of the Irish Purchase Acts, direct from the Government to the farmer, loans of a fair amount of the value of his holding; say, as in the case of mortgages, one half to two thirds. It is a thing which in Wales, I am sure, would be of enormous advantage. An enormous number of the smaller tenant farmers, of the tenant farmers running from 50*l.* to 200*l.* a year in rent, would take advantage of it, and the money would be perfectly safe, because the tenant farmer in Wales, as a rule, is thrifty, is prudent, and is industrious, and the Government may be perfectly sure that it will get its money back. Then thirdly, to create a system of cheap and easy land transfer such as obtains in the Colonies. The expense and difficulty of selling and buying real property is always great, and in the case of small lots almost prohibitive. It is very much to be deplored that the present system of land transfer offers so serious an obstacle to the increase of the small freeholder. I should like if you will allow me to refer to personal concerns, which I believe you can do in this court. I had an instance of that occurring to myself in a sale which I had two years ago in North Wales. You held a court, I think, on my property at Portmadoc. There was a general wish—there has been for years—on the part of the leaseholders in the town of Portmadoc to enfranchise themselves and to become freeholders, and I was of the same opinion, that it would be a very good thing for them to do so. But the real difficulty which lay in my way and in their way is the enormous expense which cannot be avoided under the present system of land transfer. The only way I got over it in this particular case was as follows: There were over 600 lots, and I was able to make a special arrangement by which I myself paid considerably less in costs than would have been the case under the schedules of the Solicitors Remuneration Act of 1889, or rather under the General Orders made under that Act, and I was also enabled to arrange through the kindness of the lawyers whom I employed (they were very good about it) that every leaseholder who was a tenant of mine should get a free conveyance for 2*l.* in the event of the purchase money being under 500*l.* That enabled a great many of the leaseholders to become freeholders without having to pay more than 2*l.* legal expenses. At the same time that was an exceptional case: it is very seldom that so many lots are put up together; but in ordinary circumstances where there may be 12, 15 or 20 lots to be sold on a small scale the legal expenses are practically prohibitive. It is a most serious thing for the country. I would desire to refer the Commission to one personal matter. Statements were made by witnesses in Carnarvonshire that the landowners of that county objected to Nonconformists as tenants. So far as I am concerned this statement is untrue. Before I sold a portion of the leaseholds in Portmadoc the year before last, there were about 5,000 people on the Tremadoc estate, and out of these there were only 500 Church of England, that is to say, 9 out of every 10 tenancies were let to Nonconformists. My agents there are at the present time also Nonconformists. I wish to make that statement here, my Lord, because I was unable to attend any meeting of yours in North Wales, and I felt deeply the statement being made, as I am one of the principal landowners in Carnarvonshire, that I should be guilty of favouring my own religious denomination at the expense of others. I felt very much about it, and I wished to make that statement here. I should like also to make one remark with regard to this county, which I know the best in Wales. I would like to say one word as to this county. I know it well, and I know its people well. I can bear witness to the good feeling which exists between all classes. The squires and farmers of Breconshire have lived together good friends and neighbours in the past, and I think I am giving utterance to the unanimous voice of both classes when I say they have every intention of doing so in the future.

50,810. Are there many freeholders in this county?—In this county?

50,811. Yes?—Yes, there are a great number. In the part of the county in which I live—I am a Talgarth man myself—I should think nearly every second man in the village of Talgarth is a freeholder and there are a great number of freeholders owning small farms in the parish.

50,812. Are they as well off as the tenant farmers or not, do you think?—Well, I should not like to give an opinion which, like all general opinions, would be probably wrong. It depends so much entirely upon the man.

50,813. Upon the man himself?—Yes, so much entirely upon the man.

50,814. And possibly upon whether he has borrowed money at a high rate of interest?—Of course if a man has bought his farm on mortgage he would not be as well off as a tenant farmer, but assuming that a tenant farmer has bought his own farm with his own money I take it he would be in a better position than a man who rents from another man. The only thing is this, that in the case of the small freeholder he is more apt to leave his buildings to get in a state of bad repair than the large and rich landowner. That is the only difference between the two.

50,815. You suggested that Government should advance money to enable the farmers to buy their holdings?—Quite so.

50,816. That is a most important thing. It would have to be at a very low rate of interest, I suppose?—Well, I think the Government advance money to various local bodies at about 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. I think under the Irish Land Acts also the rate of interest is 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. which goes on for about 40 to 50 years until in due time it is paid off.

50,817. Until the capital and interest are paid off?—Yes, I think so. I know it is done in this country to a great many local bodies.

Mr. Grove.

50,818. You think 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent., including redemption, would be a reasonable figure, do you?—Well, of course, as you know, you must get your money at the lowest possible figure, and I take it that the Government at the present moment advance to local bodies at the lowest possible figure they can afford. I believe that figure is 3½ per cent., that 3½ per cent. continuing for 50 years—forming a rent charge for 50 years. I think the tenant farmer if he bought on those terms would get on very well indeed.

50,819. Then would you include in the Government loans those who have bought their own farms at a higher rate of interest?—Yes. I think it is a most important thing—I do not say from a purely economic point of view and from the point of view of keeping farms in the highest state of cultivation and repair that either small estates or small freeholds are so good as the very large estates where the landlord happens to be a very rich man, but even in the present state of things that only occurs here and there. The importance of having a large number of freeholds is simply from a political and social point of view. If you do not increase your freeholders in the present political and social state of the country there is great danger that property will be rendered insecure, and the only chance for this country in future under its present state of Government would be to endeavour to follow—I do not go so far as to say the French state of things, but to follow in that direction by having a large number of occupying freeholders. That is for the sake of the country apart from the sake of the freeholder. But I think also that a freeholder is in many respects a man that is to be certainly considered in a better position than the tenant farmer for sentimental reasons, and sentimental reasons are often very strong, particularly in Wales. Welshmen are a particularly sentimental and musical people and they go by sentiment; and I am perfectly certain that one of the best things that Government could do for Wales would be to offer every facility to the tenant farmers to purchase their farms.

50,820. But apart from the sentimental view of it, would not a man be likely to make more of the land if he were the owner of it?—I think so. I certainly think so, taking it as a general rule, I think he would distinctly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,821. Can you tell us whether the Agricultural Holdings Act is well known amongst farmers in your neighbourhood?—No, I do not think it is very well known. I think—at least that is my experience—that matters are mostly arranged by custom between outgoing and incoming tenant.

50,822. Then, in your opinion, is the custom in your neighbourhood better than the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Well, I do not know about that, no, I should think it comes very much to the same thing. Of course the Agricultural Holdings Act possibly covers ground which custom does not. I mean the old customs of Breconshire would more or less cover questions of clovers and that kind of thing.

50,823. Can you give any reason why the Agricultural Holdings Act is not well known?—Well, if you ask me as to Brecon, the reason why it is not so well known is because it is not wanted. The people have always got on very well here by the ordinary higgle of the market between man and man, but I think it would be well if it was thoroughly well known. It seems to me to be a very sensible Act.

50,824. Your part of the county, I think, is English speaking?—Yes, entirely.

50,825. Therefore it is useless to suggest that if the Act were printed in Welsh it would be better known?—Oh, no, it is entirely English.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I would only suggest that it would be a very good thing that it should be discussed at agricultural meetings and farmers' clubs.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,826. One question occurs to me. I was interested in your statement that the difficulties and expense of land transfer do hinder transactions in land?—Undoubtedly in small cases.

50,827. What is the form which you suggest the remedy should take?—The form that I suggest is one that has been discussed over and over again and people always say that it is almost impossible in this country on account of the present state of land tenure, but I cannot see it; it seems to me a very simple one. It is simply taking a wrinkle from our own colonies. It is to have a simple system of land registration. Of course it is an expensive thing at the first go off, but when once it is thoroughly done throughout the country it is done once and for all, and for ever afterwards land can be sold like a horse or a dog—quite as easily.

50,828. Do you mean by that registration of titles or registration of conveyances?—Registration of title.

50,829. Once and for all?—Once and for all, yes.

Lord Kenyon.

50,830. Would you afford any help to the landowner to register his title?—Well, that is a question, my Lord, which has been discussed, and I think it is one which should certainly be taken under notice because no doubt it would be a very serious thing for a great many of the landowners who are mortgaged and charged to have to bear a special expense of that kind; and as it is for a public object, and for an object which, in the long run, must be of incalculable benefit to the whole country I think it would be quite right on general principles that the Legislature should make a special grant.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,831. Do you mean the Legislature, or local bodies—the county councils, for instance?—No, I think not. I think these kind of general things should be done in a general way, I think it should be done by the Parliament.

Lord Kenyon.

50,832. I have one question to put to you by Mr. W. T. Lee: "Have you had any application "for allotments on your estate? If so, to what "extent"?—As regards my property in Breconshire I have not got any property where allotments, except just to my own workmen, would be of any use; but up in North Wales I have had considerable experience in allotments. I own several thousand acres round the town of Portmadoc, and a great deal of that for many years past, in fact, ever since my grandfather reclaimed it from the sea, has been held in small holdings. I myself, about 10 years ago, endeavoured to increase those holdings, and I did it in this way. There were large tracts of rough ground which run from 100 to 200 acres which were generally held with farms, but which were not necessarily adjoining those farms, and one of which was very close to the town. I took one of those: I put up fences and put down roads, and divided it into holdings of all sizes; I think it was 150 acres that I took in and I divided it into holdings from 18 acres down to 3 and 4 acres. I had not the slightest difficulty in letting them. There were any amount of people desirous of taking these small holdings, but they were not necessarily agriculturists. They were generally people in the town, tradesmen who had another occupation. I also found that there was a system there of sub-letting, in which those who rented from me let out perches and quarters of acres to workmen for potato grounds, of course, charging very high rents. I thought I would see if I could let directly at a lower rent to the workmen. That was not successful, and I found the reason was this. There were a large class of workmen there not always resident; they were to a certain extent peripatetic, and they did not like to bind themselves by taking land for a long period, whereas by the system which obtained there they hired the ground, manured and ready for putting their crop in, and then they could go after the crop was off; but I think that as regards small holdings you will find, and I believe that has been so all through England, that by degrees a great portion of these small allotments will gravitate to townspeople with other occupations and not to the agricultural labourers properly so-called.

50,833. A great many of these would be quarrymen, I suppose?—Well, a few would be quarrymen, but a good many people would be tradesmen and also people connected with shipping, especially carpenters and so on. I am sorry the experiment did not succeed. I was in hopes they would all of them have taken their quarter acre.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Morgan Hopkin recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See previous examination at 454!.

50,834. You are Mr. Morgan Hopkin, of Swansea, and you are secretary of the Swansea and District Butchers' and Cattle-dealers' Association?—I am.

50,835. What do you wish to give evidence about?—Last year I was one of six of the meat traders of England who were summoned before the House of Lords to give evidence upon the marking of foreign meat. Since then I have taken a very great interest in the Bill which is now before the House of Commons, and I desire to submit to the Commission now the fact that at the present moment large quantities of foreign butter are being consigned to various parts of Carmarthenshire, and there re-manufactured into pounds, and put into tubs and sold as Welsh in Swansea and the Rhondda Valley.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,836. To the detriment of the Welsh farmer?—Without a doubt, and a fraud upon the public.

Lord Kenyon.

50,837. Have you a statement you wish to read?—I desire to make only a general statement, and it applies to one individual in St. Clears. With your permission, I should not like to disclose the name publicly; I could write it down for your Lordship. Shall I write the name down?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,838. As a sign of bona fides you will hand it to us if we wish for it?—Without a doubt, certainly.

Lord Kenyon.

50,839. Very well; we do not ask for it at present?—This individual is a butter merchant, residing in the parish of St. Clears, and during the months of November and December, and up until April, he receives weekly consignments of foreign butter amounting from 20 to 30 cwt. a week. He manufactures that into pounds, and prints the name of his farm upon those pounds; he also puts it into tubs with the name of himself and the farm, and then it is sold in Swansea and the districts of the Rhondda Valley as best Welsh butter.

50,840. What remedy have you got for that?—I ought to make one statement to you, my Lord, that that butter is bought in London at the rate of 70*s.* to 90*s.* per cwt. It is sold, when he sells it during the winter months in Swansea, at the rate of 1*s.* 3*d.*, 1*s.* 4*d.*, and 1*s.* 6*d.* a lb.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,841. What price did you say?—The price of that butter at the present moment is about 70*s.* a cwt.

Lord Kenyon.

50,842. What is a cwt. of butter?—112 lbs. The dearest price it touches is 90*s.* to 95*s.* a cwt. You can buy it to-day at 65*s.* a cwt.

50,843. And it is retailed at what?—It is retailed at 1*s.* 3*d.*, 1*s.* 4*d.*, and 1*s.* 6*d.* a lb. I have paid 1*s.* 6*d.* myself for it. My suggestion to remedy that evil would be this. I think it would be desirable that you should suggest to Mr. George Lambert the desirability of including in his Bill the labelling or marking of foreign dairy produce. He has got a Bill which has just been amended, a Bill introduced on March 20th; and I suggest that it should include the marking of foreign dairy produce.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,844. Your point is that this is butter which is no colourable imitation of true better, but is a foreign butter sold as Welsh butter?—It is foreign butter sold as Welsh butter.

50,845. Therefore, the Margarine Acts do not touch that?—Not at all. The fraud comes in in this manner: this man resides in St. Clears; he is known to be a farmer residing in St. Clears; he labels on that pound of butter the name of his farm; I buy it, and other people buy it, as Welsh butter, and he trades upon the reputation of Carmarthenshire to make a better price of an article which may or may not be inferior, it is not for me to judge, but as a matter of fact he trades upon the reputation of Carmarthenshire, and gets a high price. The effect is this, that the farmer in Carmarthenshire, or residing in the parish of St. Clears, loses the sale of his butter by the reason that this man purchases in those enormous quantities, and, therefore, the Carmarthenshire farmer cannot find a market for the sale of his produce. On the other hand, the consumer in the Rhondda Valley is imposed upon by paying for what he supposes he is getting—Welsh butter—whereas, as a matter of fact, he is buying foreign. If this Bill of Mr. Lambert's was amended to include the marking of dairy produce, the result would be, that this man would be prevented from selling this butter.

50,846. But how far does Mr. Lambert's Bill go: I have read it, but I have forgotten its terms?—May I read you one clause of it. One clause of it is rather stringent, and I always complain about it:—"Every person who either "by himself or by any agent, servant, or other "person employed by him sells foreign meat shall "deliver with such meat to the purchaser an "invoice stating that such meat is foreign meat, "and the non-delivery of such notice shall have "the effect of warranty that meat sold without "such warranty is not foreign meat within the "meaning of this Act; and every person who "acts contrary to and who does not duly observe "and keep the provisions of this section shall be "guilty of an offence under this Act." I submitted to their Lordships in my evidence that that would be impracticable in dealing with small quantities of meat, and I suggested that there should be a label—a kind of a sign—over the parts for selling meat. So in the case of selling butter I would suggest that a label should be fixed over the tub of butter denoting that that is New Zealand, Australian, or American butter, so that any person who came to purchase might see at a glance that he was buying foreign butter.

50,847. But your point is that that bill does not touch dairy produce?—It does not touch dairy produce.

50,848. And you think that provisions analogous to the provisions which that Bill provides in the case of foreign meat, might be enacted in respect to dairy produce?—Undoubtedly.

50,849. And in your judgment it is quite as necessary?—Quite as necessary. In fact it has been admitted that this kind of trading has been going on for years past in Cardiganshire. It was only a few days ago I was informed by a man who sent down to a person in Maesycrugiau, near Pencader, 28,000 Hungarian eggs in the winter months. This individual in Maesycrugiau, took the eggs out of the receptacle—out of the boxes that he had there, and repacked them into his own boxes and sent them to the Rhondda Valley, and sold them as Welsh eggs. I think it is right that these things should be made public so that the public may know to what extent the fraud is being committed and perpetrated, and how the farmers suffer in consequence.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,850. May I mention a point upon which I have already asked you privately. Can you prove that this butter is foreign butter, and not English butter?—Undoubtedly.

50,851. You supplied me with some of this information when we were down at St. Clears, and the reason I did not bring it out in cross-examination at St. Clears was that I had no proof that it was foreign. I was informed there that they did import English and Irish butter. They considered that to be a legitimate operation and I could not find that there was any proof at all then that this was of foreign origin. That is what I want you now to explain to the Commission—what proof you have?—I think you refer to the factory at St. Clears.

50,852. I do?—I do not refer to that at all.

50,853. Quite so. I understand that?—Why I am so positive about it is this. I have seen one consignment myself sent off from the Great Western Station and they were consigned to this man, and the butter was contained in boxes bearing the name "Auckland dairy, New Zealand." It was consigned from an individual in Swansea, who was a butter importer and sold nothing but foreign butter. He has admitted so himself, and consequently there is no doubt about it. There is the fact staring us in the face. But where the fraud comes in, and where I think it should be publicly denounced, is that the man takes that butter out of those boxes, uses a churn that he has as a butter maker in his own place, and re-tubs it into Welsh tubs, and into pounds.

50,854. Are you aware that any is sent from Newcastle-on-Tyne to St. Clears?—I am not aware of that.

50,855. I think you said that some was sent from London?—This person would have them consigned from London. London is the chief import centre for Australian butters or New Zealand butters.

50,856. Then do I understand that some is sent from London to St. Clears?—Not direct from London to St. Clears. This man would import 10, 20, 30 or 50 tons into Swansea, and then it would be re-transferred.

50,857. I suppose when you talk about a ton a week, that would be in the winter months?—From November to April. Might I suggest one remedy? I had a conversation with a large merchant this morning and he stated this fact; that it is a general custom in the trade to sell Australian butters, and it has now become a fact that it is preferred by the Welsh people to our own Welsh butter because it is of an uniform quality and a very superior quality as well. At one time in many districts in the valleys here Welsh butter was exclusively used, but now this butter has been sold by merchants and it is preferred. I ought to suggest in my opinion that I think it would be well that we should establish butter factories in the different counties.

Lord Kenyon.

50,858. They are rather expensive things to establish?—But I think it would be to their advantage to have them established.

Mr. Grove.

50,859. I suppose you do not say that the Australian or New Zealand butters are inferior in quality?—I only know this. I am not in a position to say so, but I only know this, that I should infinitely prefer eating Welsh butter to Australian butter, and if I knew I was buying Australian butter I should not do so—in fact at the present moment I have refused to buy a single pound of butter this last month from this individual. I buy butter that is made in Tanlan Cidweli.

50,860. Do you know whether any foreign butter is sold in Brecon?—I do not—no.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,861. By Welsh butter do you mean butter that is made in casks?—By Welsh butter I mean butter made in pounds—that is what I eat generally—pound butter.

50,862. Does the habit prevail in South Wales of putting butter down in casks—it is made in the summer starting perhaps in June and they keep on making butter and putting it down in casks until October and sell it in February?—That is so. That is a custom.

50,863. What price does that butter fetch in February?—It varies. Some farmers have got a good reputation for making good butters and they fetch an uniform price, something like 1*s.* or 13*d.* a lb.; but sometimes they depreciate in value and since this practice has been going on they have considerably reduced in value, at this time going down as low as 9*d.* a lb.

50,864. Is the demand for that kind of butter now equal to what it was about 15 years ago?—I think it is—yes, I think so; it is sold very generally in our place at Swansea, but of course now that pound butters are obtained so well I think pound butters take precedence; it is sold more generally.

50,865. That is my experience, that really butter in casks is getting driven out of the market by fresh butter?—Yes, I think so too.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,866. Why do you recommend establishing butter factories? What do you mean by that?—For this reason: there are 20 farmers living in a parish and they may make butter, and they will be 20 different qualities, and oftentimes one quality is worse than another; but if the cream was brought to one centre there would be an uniform quality. That is my reason.

50,867. Yes; I believe it is the only way we can get uniformity?—Certainly.

50,868. You know it is the fact even at St. Clears that it is almost a failure?—I am not aware of it.

50,869. The farmers cannot be induced to send their cream and milk to the factory?—I will make inquiries when I go to St. Clears next fair.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

50,870. You think it would be a good thing if they were established generally in every district?—I do think so.

50,871. That is to say, near the large centres where the butter could be sold?—Quite so. It has proved successful in Denmark.

50,872. And why should it not be successful in this country?—Why should it not be done in this country—exactly.

50,873. Do you think it would be well if the landlords were to come to the assistance of the farmers in establishing butter factories?—I am sure it would.

50,874. I have not made much inquiry here, but the dairies as a rule are not very efficient in most districts?—Do you mean the machinery they have for manufacture?

50,875. No, the dairies themselves. They are not sufficiently large to enable them to use their present implements for butter making?—Quite so.

50,876. And the dairies are very often fixed in the wrong place?—Quite so.

50,877. Do you think it would be better if the landlords were to pay a little more attention to establish factories in the different districts?—I do think so.

50,878. And even would you go so far as to say that Government should come in and assist to get them established?—Well, I think we are imposing too much upon Government already.

50,879. Yes, but you know how slow Welsh farmers are to adopt anything new?—Well, yes, they are very slow. I hope and trust that the means of railway communication will enlighten them upon it.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. John Lloyd called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

50,880. You are a Justice of the Peace for the county of Brecon?—Yes. I was born in the county, and have lived the greater part of my life here.

50,881. Are you a landowner in the county?—Yes, and also interested through my wife in other landed property. From the year 1855 to 1875 I was agent for my father's estates in this county. During that period upon that property there was no increase of rents. About that time, in 1854 and 1855, the times were very good for Welsh farmers, and in 1860 I remember they did very well, and up to 1865. Their chief complaint was the high amount of the tithe which then ranged up to 110*l.* and 112*l.*, or rather 10*l.* and 12*l.* above par. It seemed to me then that the tithe was fixed much too high when it was originally fixed, and I still think it was fixed too high, and that the tithe is greater in proportion to the rent of the farm than in my opinion it ought to be. In 1865 especially the times were remarkably good. Farmers were really making money and putting by money fast at that time. About that year a rather remarkable event happened in this county. Sir Charles Morgan as he was then—the late Lord Tredegar—caused his Brecknockshire property to be revalued, and he sent up a valuer from Newport of the name of Treharne Rees. He found then that Sir Charles Morgan's farms were low rented, and he raised them very much, and the example that was then set by that estate was followed throughout the county, and most of the chief landowners followed suit and employed valuers who valued their estates afresh. They employed on one large estate Mr.

Apperley, of Hereford, and it became the rule to re-value the large estates throughout Brecknockshire. The result was at that time a great increase in the rents in Brecknockshire. It was rather an unfortunate time to have had a re-valuation then made, because times were exceptionally good. Since then rents have gone back a good deal and there have been reductions made. That is about what I know of the position of the properties in this county as regards the way they have been treated by the owners. I do not know that rents have gone back again to what they were before 1865, but they were put up a very great deal at that period of time.

Turning to the point of manors and waste lands I may say I have studied a good deal the subject of manors and waste lands, especially in this county. The court may be aware that Brecknockshire contains nearly the largest extent of common land in any county in England or Wales. I think Cumberland and Northumberland are about equal to it, and perhaps Yorkshire, but there is hardly any county in South Wales that contains as many acres of waste land or common land as Brecknockshire, and it is a very important question in this county both as regards the ownership and the management of those common or waste land. I can if the court wishes give them a list or hand it in afterwards of the manors in the county approximately, and I think it would be very desirable if the court would, as they go through the counties of Wales, endeavour to obtain a list of the manors and common lands so held. At any rate I shall be happy to help the court so far as Brecknock is concerned, and hand in a list, so far as I am able to make it, of this county.

Of enclosures there have been a great many made in the years 1855 to 1875, when they were more or less stopped by, I think, one of the Commons Preservation Acts. Those enclosures took place in this way a great deal, we generally find there was a surveyor and a solicitor who worked together, and they found little commons about, and it was generally thought a good thing for business, and so on, to enclose them, and they enclosed a large number of these commons. I do not know that it was very desirable, but still they have been enclosed. There have been none of recent years enclosed in this county, I think. In the Parliamentary Returns of Enclosure Acts reaching from 1760 to 1820 in the counties of England and Wales you find that for Brecknockshire the entry is "nil." It is said that there were none, or that there was no record of them, but we know as a matter of fact that there were a good many private Enclosure Acts passed during that period, and I daresay they can be found in the private Bill Office in the House of Commons. What I am coming to now is, however, one enclosure scheme of vast magnitude which happened in the years 1815 to 1819. With regard to the manors generally of Brecknockshire they were nearly all held by the Crown of England, and they have been parted with from time to time by various sales. Where the Beacons range of mountains run here was part of the castle of Brecon lordship, and that is now possessed by Lord Tredegar, who purchased it, or whose ancestors purchased it, from the Crown. The most part of the manors in this county were owned by the Crown, and indeed, as the court will hear, also in the neighbouring county of Radnor, and a great deal through Wales. But in this particular county they had one manor, or rather what was known as and called the great forest of Brecknock, and that lay about here—it is within sight of this town, a portion of it. It contained 40,000 acres of waste land. That 40,000 acres of waste land was enjoyed, and the right of usage and grazing over that 40,000 acres of land was enjoyed by 500 farms or more stretching over a large extent of country, over 12 or 40 parishes, and to which large extent of common land they sent their sheep and young cattle in the summer time, and the sheep throughout the year. It was a great grazing ground through the whole of this district, and, I suppose, was used from the time of the ancient Britons, and all through the Norman rule down to the years 1815–19. But those years, as the court may know, were years in which the Crown of England was very much pressed for money in various ways, and amongst other means of raising money they came to Brecon to see what they could make of this great forest which then produced to them only 20*l.* a year or so, which it was farmed out for, and they thought they could turn this into money as they had turned into money the Delamere and Exmoor Forests and other forests in England. Accordingly they got an Act of Parliament passed for the enclosure of this common land. Down came the valuers, surveyors, and commissioners, and I hope the present court will not be so costly as that was, they came down and inspected and surveyed, and so on, and apart from the immense expense they put the people to, to prove all their titles and claims to common rights, and the law suits which they had to maintain in order to keep certain rights that they had—one law suit was taken to Hereford and tried there at immense expense—apart from all that, the cost of the Commission alone for dealing with this 40,000 acres of land was 16,000*l.* of money in those days. To provide that money they sold 8,000 acres of the land, the best parts and the slopes of this great tract of land. That produced about 15,000*l.* or 16,000*l.* to pay for the work. I may say that the effect upon the whole of that district was almost like a convulsion of nature; it changed the whole character of the industry there. I may mention, in order to explain the matter, that this 8,000 acres was some of the best land that was taken. Then the next step was as part of the bargain that the Crown was to take their half, and the commoners were to have their half. Accordingly that was done, and the Crown took 13,860 acres of the middle portion, and the best portion, and the commoners had some little more than that, viz., 17,000 acres of land, but a good deal of the worst of it, some of it being hardly worth anything at all. The acreage was a little bit more for the commoners than that which the Crown had, and so it was divided. I should say that the effect of that upon the agricultural industry of that district must have been fearful at the time, and its effects are visible even to-day. A farm which we have now in our family is a bye-take —no tenant living there—it is held by the Scotchman who holds other farms in the neighbourhood in the same way, and who is a tenant of a part of the hill which was then enclosed.

I have no doubt that the effect of that enclosure upon a very wide range of district was disastrous in the extreme, and probably ruinous to scores of farmers, and the effect is now visible upon the agriculture of that district. Anyhow it was done by the force of the English law, and perhaps because of the farmers in that district not having any power at all to deal with it, and the whole features of the country and the industry of the country were changed by it. It was cruelly carried out and ignorantly conceived, and anything more disastrous than an act of that sort I cannot conceive.

My Lord, the procedure then came to this, that the Crown took their half, they sold it and away they went and never troubled more with Brecknockshire. Our half came to us, but it came to us in a state which has given us to this day great trouble and difficulty. It came to us in this state as an allotment to and for our benefit. The Crown when it was allotted to us still reserved the right to the mines and minerals, and unfortunately in a deed (see Appendix) which I can say is no credit to those who drew it—a deed of which I have a copy here—when they conveyed away the mines and minerals, they used some general words and they included rights if they had any, and all that sort of thing, in tithe lands and other things of which they really were not possessed. It was a deed which I was very sorry to see that any body of persons could ever have tried to convey property by, so indefinite and unreal in its character was it. By that deed they used general words which when it is conveyed to a third party the third party acts upon, and then that third party who happened in this case to be a powerful lord, endeavoured again to put his hand so to speak upon what had been allotted to us, and he said, "It is my land and my freehold." We lost 8,000 acres to begin with, which was taken to pay for the expenses of this job, and then one half the land was taken by the Crown, and then someone comes again in the name of the Crown and puts his hand upon our half, and says, "That is mine too."

We tried the year before last to put that matter right, and we, the commoners or allotment holders of this land, went to Parliament to ask them to give us an Act of Parliament in order to give us the power to act as a corporate body in this matter. We prepared the Bill, and we did all we could possibly to get such a body established. We were met by fierce opposition, especially from Lord Tredegar, who claimed himself the freehold, as the grantee of the Crown, and who employed able counsel against us, who did their best to beat us. Eventually they did beat us, and I may say that although we were before that tribunal of Parliament, and I speak advisedly, we got no intelligent decision from them; we went to a court from which we really got no assistance; they simply sent us away after three days hearing, and, in the words of our Parliamentary agent, we got no intelligent decision at all. It cost us 500*l.*, and we are still in that state of confusion as regards this extent of land. I may say that the want of government over that 17,000 acres of land is such as to produce very considerable public mischief. The small people are driven out by the bigger ones, various diseases affecting sheep and ponies are prevalent without there being any restraint put upon them by public law, and some unfortunate people whose sheep get sent there—small people are said to have their sheep driven down into the wet places, in order not that they may thrive, but that they may be got rid of. I was assured the other day by the evidence of one man in Ystradfellte, which I can believe, that in that district he could prove, or that he was prepared to swear, that 1,000 sheep in his time had been either lost, stolen, or destroyed through want of some care in that district, It is left to this day in that unsatisfactory state, and I do trust that the Court will make some recommendation that these common lands of Wales may be put under some proper protection. (See Appendix for an account of the history of this enclosure.) It might be said that the lords of the manor are sufficient. In this particular case of the forest we have no lord of the manor; we are ourselves a body without any form, and we owe no allegiance to the lords of the manors. But where there are lords of the manors I do not feel much respect for them. I had to do once with the case of the lord of the manor of the hundred of Crickhowell, and at last the matter was put right, but it was for some time in abeyance; there was an encroachment of 50 acres being made there, and I had that stopped. I asked assistance of a neighbouring lord of the manor, who was a commoner of the Crickhowell manor; I see him in court now—when I asked his assistance he told me that for private reasons he could not interfere, and I found that these lords of the manor hang very much together, and that what one does the other does not object to, and I think that there is no safe protection for the public unless these common lands of this country are put under the control and management of the county councils of the district. I think they should be acquired and put under their management, and then I think they will be safe from enclosures, and when various water companies or various towns come for water, and so on, that someone will be there to protect the interest of the commoners; at present there is nobody. The other day in the Elan district the lord of the manor declined, I think, to take any interest in the commoners; he would look out for himself, but as to the commoners they were no concern of his. In my view the true position of the lord of the manor is that he is trustee for the public —trustee for the commoners—but I do not think they regard it quite in that light. I think the public council of the county should be the trustees for the public interest in these commons, and I believe that great safety would be obtained by that. One witness has recommended the hills being enclosed. I differ from him there; I do not think it is practicable to enclose these hills, but I should rather prefer the system of a common shepherd and the flocks being herded together in common, and I think that there would not be the driving and the disputes, and so on. I think that might be easily arranged by good management. I do not agree with the enclosing of them.

These rights of the lords of the manors, so far as I am able to learn, are not assessed to any rates or taxes; they pay nothing; shooting rights and so on are never assessed to anything. It is a small point, but it is a fact, I believe, that they do not pay. They are considered very valuable rights, but yet they are not assessed for payment of any rates.

Then to come to the recommendations; my own view generally as regards the farm lands of the country is that a land court should be established to fix a fair rent between landlord and tenant where it cannot be otherwise arranged, that is to say, I am assuming both landlord and tenant are willing, that is, that the landlord does not wish to part with the tenant, and the tenant does not wish to leave the landlord, but wishes to retain the farm—that then in that case if they cannot agree as to the rent there should be some court or some arbitrator who should decide between them what should be the fair rent to pay, I cannot go so far as to be in favour of any fixity of tenure. I cannot see my way to that. There is no doubt there is great danger in the present system—large estate owners are not always of the same class, and of the same kind heart, and when they are good men and they die their estates may be involved in various ways, and there is no doubt that these year-to-year friendly arrangements that go on at present well in Brecknockshire are liable to serious interruptions. As I pointed out just now, there is that case where Mr. Treharne Rees came here in 1865 (it is not so very long ago) and disturbed the whole arrangement of the rents in this county. That is something to remember; I do not think his memory was blessed for many years after; it may be forgotten now, but it was remembered with much pain for many years, and that sort of thing may happen again any day. Therefore, there is not that security for the tenants that I should like to see, but how to obtain it, my Lord, is a very difficult question. I should certainly go so far as to suggest that an arbitrator should be appointed who would decide the question of fair rents, and also decide what would be compensation for improvements of various kinds which have been made by the tenants.

Then as regards common lands, I think that a return of all the manors and common lands should be ordered as a Parliamentary Paper. I think that all manors and common lands should be acquired and vested in the County Council, and either that the County Council or the Land Court should be empowered to deal with disputes like that of the great forest case, and to determine boundaries in respect of which there are numerous disputes in this county. There are many disputes in this county as to parish boundaries, and as to which are the boundaries of the manors. Each lord comes to a certain point and says: "That is my manor," and the other man comes and says, "No, it is not; that is mine," and so they go on for years; they never fight it out; but they always keep up these disputes as to the land, and treat it as a kind of doubtful no man's land between the two. People who are present now know it just as well as I do. They dispute where the boundaries overlap one another, and they never fight, but they each claim it. All those things only produce worry and discomfort in the county, but they should be settled, and they should not go on as a matter of dispute always.

I would certainly suggest that the parishes should be enabled to frame byelaws for the management of their common lands, and appoint common shepherds who would look after all the sheep on the common. On one range of hills in this county they do employ a common shepherd, but he is only employed in a kind of semi-official way, and I think that the same thing might be done in a more regular way and with more authority, and that then the sheep and cattle would be much more protected; at any rate the management of common lands in this county is very important having regard to their great extent in comparison with the land that is tilled or in pasture.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,882. Have you read the evidence given by Mr. J. Russell Sowray before this Commission on the 25th of January 1894?—Yes, I had the pleasure of hearing him give it. See 27,577 9; 27,631 5; 27,691 9; 27,753 27,780.

50,883. Do you complain of any inaccuracies in his statement of the dealings in reference to Brecknock Forest?—I think he takes a view of the law, which is to my mind totally wrong What we hold is this, that the land was conveyed to us, to and for our benefit, free from all claims of His Majesty whatsoever, for forestal rights, and all other claims save such rights as are expressly reserved; then the express reservation is only of mines and minerals. But Mr. Sowray says: "Do not forget clause 19, which says, 'Save all rights of owners or bodies corporate 'and ecclesiastical and everything else,'" and, therefore, he makes out the general exception to be a kind of special exception. I think that is a bit of special pleading which will not hold water at all, and that it is only a trick: I think it is not fair play. The special reservation was the mines and minerals, and that we do not dispute at all, but to say that the Crown has first of all given everything, and then taken back everything I do not hold with at all.

50,884. Let me follow the effect of that; he says the minerals within the whole forest were reserved to the Crown?—Yes.

50,885. And then in the Conveyance under the second Act; by the Act of 58 George III., Chapter 99, in the parcels in reference to the commoner's shares there are these words: "Save "and except such rights and interests as are "herein-before expressly excepted and reserved "to His Majesty, his heirs and successors?"—Yes.

50,886. With regard to that reservation which included all other His Majesty's memorial and other rights, royalties and privileges in and over the several allotments respectively, am I to understand that you complain of the way in which that reservation has operated?—Yes, but the express reservation only included the mines and minerals.

50,887. That is to say, instead of reserving the minerals simply, the Crown reserves all other rights, royalties, and privileges. It then sold the land, and, as I understand, the effect of your evidence is this, that when the Crown sold to divers persons the interest which the Crown had, the persons who claimed the reserved rights of the crown, have used them in a way detrimental to the interests of the whole locality?—Yes.

50,888. That is your point, is it?—They are setting up again a right which we contend the Crown had parted with, and which I think the Crown would never have dared to set up.

50,889. I submit this to you as a lawyer, that is to say, I submit it to you as a lawyer yourself, not because I am a lawyer?—Yes.

50,890. The Crown does not part with any legal rights. Do I understand you to suggest that the grantees of the Crown are exercising legal rights or simply ordinary manorial rights?—They are claiming in the name of the Crown the freehold and the manorial dominion over this allotment land of ours, not only mines and minerals, but they claim the shooting, the water, and the freehold.

50,891. Quite so, but are they claiming anything that an ordinary lord of the manor does not claim?—No.

50,892. That is what I think. There is no trace, of course, of gold about here, is there?—No. The express reservation we say has perfect force to-day. What we say is that the general reservation at the end cannot over-ride those words of the express reservation.

50,893. The last question which Lord Kenyon asked Mr. Sowray before the adjournment was Question 27,579: "The Crown has washed its "hands of all responsibility in connection with "Brecknock Forest now." Mr. Sowray said: "Yes; of course we cannot be responsible for what we have no interest in"?—Yes.

50,894. Your complaint is that the Crown should have entertained such a transaction at all, as I understand?—What I complain of is, that first of all they came in the past and did a very ignorant, cruel and merciless act towards Brecknockshire, which was particularly dependent upon their mercy, and then left it in an unsettled and unsatisfactory state, and by a deed which conveys all interest in tithes and all sorts of things which they never possessed, as well as what they did possess they have left it in a state of difficulty and dispute, and have left it as the birthplace of law suits which you may say are now before us, and no man living can tell the true legal position of these lands at present. What we believe is that the true state of things is this, that all beneficial use is in us, while the abstract legal title may be somewhere else. That is just the position in which they have left it, but the result is that it is confused and unsatisfactory, and it is as if it were no man's land so far as regards government and proper system.

50,895. What were the assertions in the preamble of your Bill of 1893?—Do you mean the general powers asked for?

50,896. Yes. You have before you, I daresay, the Bill of 1893?—Yes, here is the Bill. It is generally to make byelaws for the better protection of the flocks.

50,897. No, the preamble. I asked Mr. Sowray what he thought about the assertions in the preamble, and he said, "I would rather not "go into the assertions in the preamble. I "really do not know whether good or injury "has been done"?—It recites the various Acts of Parliament which allude to the case, and then it goes on to say that "the orders and regulations directed by the last recited Act for "stinting the commoners' allotments do not "appear to have been made, nor was any "authority given for enabling the commoners "by any common action to protect their allotment land or lime quarries from trespass, "damage or encroachment; and whereas disputes have arisen and are likely to arise as to "the access to the public limestone quarries and "the right of working the same, and as to "trespass on the allotment lands and encroachments generally on the boundaries of the "allotments, and the commoners have suffered "and are likely to suffer much inconvenience "and loss thereby: And, whereas the commoners' allotments extend over 17,106 acres of "mountain land containing many streams and "springs, the surplus water from which might be "collected and impounded, and made available "for the supply of large towns and populous "towns: And, whereas it is expedient that the "commoners' allotments as defined in the said "award, together with the limestone and other "quarries, watering places, and roads should be "vested in some authority empowered to protect "and improve the same." (See Appendix for a copy of the Bill.) I may mention upon that point that these limestone quarries which are under our control are unworked to-day, simply because we have no unity amongst ourselves to work them, and through the middle of one of these the Neath and Brecon Railway runs, and there the place is in a state of decay to-day so far as regards all the lime quarries.

50,898. Did the original Bill come before the House of Commons first, or the House of Lords?—The House of Commons.

50,899. What did the committee do?—The Committee were very favourably disposed to the Bill at first, and took great interest in it, and I thought we should carry it through. Sir Richard Temple was chairman. What it was that stopped us I do not know, but Lord Tredegar's opposition was very bitter indeed. Mr. Littler tried to upset us upon every point, and the Cardiff Corporation joined with them with regard to the water. Madame Patti, because of the lime and smoke I think, or something affecting Craig-y-nos, opposed us, and Lord Camden was unfavourable because we would not give him plural voting; he wanted 25 votes for 25 farms, and I said I would not give him more than one. He opposed us on that ground, and between all of them we broke down.

50,900. Why do you say the Committee gave you no decision. I suppose they simply cleared the room, and after calling you back, said that the preamble of the Bill was not proved?—Yes, and we do not know the cause of it now—there was no reason given.

50,901. It is not usual to give a reason. I cannot recollect any case in which a Committee of the House of Lords or House of Commons have given a formal reason or part of their decision?—We put it down that they wanted to get away for the Easter holidays.

50,902. I do not think that is a very good reason after all?—Nor do I either.

50,903. It would simply mean that they would adjourn over the Easter holidays, and I expect Sir Richard Temple and his colleagues were in this position, that they did not care which Bill they were sitting upon, as they had to sit upon some Bill or other?—Sir Richard Temple, the Indian Judge, was the chairman, and he knew nothing about Wales. He hardly knew where it was, I think.

50,904. Do you think, from your experience, that Parliamentary committees are not satisfactory tribunals for this kind of decision?—I think they are not.

50,905. There is one point that I see Mr. Sowray was taking. I asked him about the policy of these transactions, and he said it was done, the policy being then pursued of enclosing all waste lands, with a view to their better cultivation?—That was only a figure of speech. The real thing was to put money in their pockets.

50,906. That is what you say?—Yes.

50,907. Has any considerable part of the land been reclaimed?—As to that, some portion of it is now producing good grazing land. A good deal of it was planted with larch trees, and they produced some good trees, but I should say upon the whole it has never paid the people the money expended on it. Mr. Storey Maskelyne was the man who spent a great deal of money there. It has never paid for the money spent there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

50,908. Do you think it is important with reference to any of the possibilities of using it for the water supplies of the great towns of South Wales?—Certainly.

50,909. In what way. Mr. Sowray said he did not think it made any great difference in that respect, because either Cardiff or any other great town that might be concerned would have to pay somebody or other in any case—they would have to pay the Crown if the Crown remained the lord of the forest. What difference does it make whether you have to pay the Crown or whether you have to pay A., B., C., or D. That was Mr. Sowray's argument. What do you say about that?—I think the question you asked upon that point was whether it was not a pity that the Crown ever parted with it.

50,910. My suggestion by way of argument to him was this: "Do you not think now that you "see the great burthen of the Corporation going "to Radnorshire for water, and seeing that the "town of Cardiff, or some other great city besides "might want to tap the place for a water supply "—do you not think that the Crown should not "have parted with these rights to private "individuals," and his answer was, "It does not "matter: the people who wanted it would have "to compensate the Crown if the Crown were "the owners of it, and whether they com-"pensated them or some other individual, does "not much matter?"—Probably it would be looked at in that way now, because the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are sworn at the present time to make the very best they can of the Crown property. Sir Nigel Kingscote told me himself, "I am on oath to make every "penny I can of the Crown property."

50,911. But what answer do you suggest there is to Mr. Sowray's argument?—It is as broad as it is long, I think, whether we have it or they have it. I think the Crown would ask to be paid for taking any rights there, and we should ask to be paid for it.

50,912. What struck me was this—this is more a suggestion for you as to what occurred to me after I heard Mr. Sowray's answer—that it is always easier to deal with one big proprietor than with a dozen small proprietors?—Yes, perhaps it would have been better if it had been retained. We wish it had been retained as it was at first, common open land, but then the thing has been done long ago now.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,913. You told me that there was a general re-valuation in this part of the country in 1865?—Yes.

50,914. What was the effect of that valuation?—I think they went up 25 or 30 per cent. quite.

50,915. Did the rates follow in proportion?—Undoubtedly. I believe there is one remarkable instance where the farmers themselves raised the assessment. Mr. Penry Williams himself said, "I found the farmers raising the assessments "and so I raised the rents."

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

50,916. Then with regard to this land that was enclosed in 1815. Did those people then that had the rights of pasturage upon the farms have their rent reduced when they lost it?—That I do not know. It is so long ago, but I should think there must have been a sad tale of woe told at that time by a great many. Of course, the sponge has passed over it now.

50,917. You do not know anything about that?—Except that we see the farmers to-day with the right lost, and the whole value is gone and also we see what farms were now bye takes, that is to say, the hill has been cut off from them, and they are left high and dry, and they are now let as bye-takes to the Scotch people who hold the hill. The industry of the country has been destroyed and dislocated in a way, and entirely changed.

50,918. It has been quite a calamity in the neighbourhood?—I should call it a great Welsh calamity.

50,919. That is the way you express it—that the face of the country was changed completely?—The character of the industry of the country was changed. Those places are both on the Ystradfellte side, and the Ystradgynlais side, and also on this side, because it is a great range of hills. I think you ought to perhaps see the map of it, and you will see what the Crown took, and where the whole range lies. Of course 40,000 acres of land is a very large extent indeed.

50,920. Do you think that the present depression is worse now than it was before 1865?—I think in 1854 and 1855, the times were all good, and they were good up to 1865, and 1865 was about the crowning point, I should say.

50,921. But I am speaking of before that, do you consider that rents now should be even lower than what they were then. Wages have advanced you know?—Yes. We find in Breconshire, on a farm I have, and a farm that my wife has, that the tenants are pretty well satisfied with the rents. We have never changed the rents, and we have never had ours re-valued. They do not grumble with the present rents.

50,922. Did they ever have any abatement?—We gave them 5 per cent. in one year, but our farms are moderately rented, and I think we gave them 10 per cent. one year, or 5 per cent.—not more.

50,923. Is that sufficient in your opinion, to meet the present depression?—They are quite satisfied so far as we know. Of course it depends upon whether the rents have been pitched high in the first instance.

Mr. Grove.

50,924. You think that the County Council would be a proper party to have the control of land of this character?—Yes, I do. You must have some authority, and that is the best I can devise.

50,925. What about so-called manorial rights; how do you propose that those should be acquired?—They must be compensated for, but as I said before, they are not assessed to the poor rate; they pay no poor rate now, and what their value is it is difficult to imagine; they are a kind of something in the air which flourishes over people's heads. It is practically the remains of the old Norman rule here to-day; that Castle Hotel, which we have been staying at last night is the centre of the old Norman rule, which extended over a wide expanse of this country, and whether that manor is worth 50*l.* or 60*l.* a year. I do not know, but it is worth very little; it is more the name of the thing than anything else.

Mr. Grove—continued.

50,926. You think it would be fair to compensate them, but in your opinion, compensation for a matter of that sort would be very small?—Yes, very small.

Lord Kenyon.

50,927. You mentioned fair rents in your evidence as one thingthat a land court would have to bring about?—Yes.

50,928. How would you arrive at a fair rent?—By an arbitrator.

50,929. How would the arbitrator arrive at a fair rent; I mean what do you call a fair rent?—Of course he would take into consideration what the tenant had really done in the matter; I mean that would come in distinctly; supposing a man came to a new farm entirely.

50,930. Yes, exactly?—They would go round the land and and look at it, and say what it was worth, and then the man would say, "I do not think it is worth so much," and the landlord would say, "It is worth so much, in my opinion."

50,931. Exactly the way in which it is carried out now, you think?—Only there should be some referee by whom the prices should be decided.

50,932. If you come to the question of fixing rent on commercial principles, I suppose a fair rent is the highest rent you can get for your land?—Yes, always acting in my opinion on the principle of live and let live. I do not think a Jew's bargain ever quite pays with happiness to anybody.

50,933. "Fair rents" is a very indefinable term?—It is like a fair price for a horse, or anything else.

50,934. You buy your horse in the open market?—We speak of a fair living wage, and it is the same sort of thing, on the market value of a farm, some sort of thing which is undefined.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,935. There is one question which has occurred to me about this matter of the common lands, in order that we may understand the case better, and have the facts fully upon our notes. In this plan you handed in different allotments are coloured in different ways?—Yes.

50,936. What is the general state of this land now; is it nearly all mountain land, or are there any fertile valleys, or is there any land in the valleys?—There is not a single acre ploughed at the present time, to the best of my belief. I am told by someone in court that there is some ploughed.

50,937. There may be some few acres, but I will take it practically from you that the whole of this common land consists of unploughed land?—Yes, practically the whole. I am told there may be a little which is ploughed.

50,938. The whole of what is the Forest is still practically unploughed?—Yes.

50,939. It is very much in the same condition then as it was in the years 1815–19?—Well, the lower portions are improved, where you see upon the map the yellow mark No. 4, at the foot of the Loscoed Lodge or the Forest Lodge. That has been improved a great deal, and also the other side where the yellow is at Glasfynydd, that has been improved a great deal, and also probably a little about Mr. McTurk's land at Cnewr, a little has been improved, and some of the other perhaps; but very little of it has been improved much. A portion of it was ploughed I notice where you see "a, a" and "b, b" upon the map in the corner; those two pieces were put down in turnips and ploughed, but they have gone back into the rough land again; they have tried to do that, but it is above the limits where corn will grow well—it is too high up.

50,940. The reason I am asking that is this, that Mr. Russell Sowray said that the Crown had justified its action in parting with these valuable rights for a comparatively small sum of money by reference to the general policy of the thing—that it would be well to put land into private ownership so as to encourage cultivation?—That was a kind of reply of an official clerk in London more than anything else. Perhaps they were taught that there, but the real object was to get money.

50,941. Do you think that if anybody in London really had known what this land was like and had really known thoroughly the condition of the area of the Forest he could reasonably have hoped that in a reasonable number of years there would have been any substantial reclamation or cultivation?—No, he could not.

Lord Kenyon.

50,942. You said you would put in a list of the manors, I think?—Yes.

50,943. Are many of those manors, manors which you referred to in questions which you asked Mr. Sowray in London?—Yes.

50,944. He knew nothing about them, I think?—No. He said he could find out, I think, if you gave him a little time, but that he was unaware he would be asked the question.

50,945. He said that would take a long time and he would have to go through every grant?—Yes.

50,946. Would you put in the list of the manors which you have offered to give us?—Yes. It will be an approximate list—to the best of my ability, but still it will be fairly accurate.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,947. Are the manorial courts still held properly?—Yes, nearly all the manorial courts are held.

50,948. Are there many Crown manors now?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

50,949. I have a question to put to you handed in by Mr. Owen Price: "Would it not be a "benefit to the country generally to allot and "divide the small commons of this county?"—No, I do not think so now, in fact there have been quite enough of them divided.

50,950. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Stephen:—"Can you name any estates "on which the rents were raised 25 per cent. in "1865?"—Yes. I should certainly say that all Lord Tredegar's were, and there was the Maesllwch estate, and the Penpont estate; they were all raised in 1865, I should say.

50,951. "What was the acreage of such estates?"—They are large estates.

Lord Kenyon.

"What was the amount of the rent before it was raised?"

Lord Kenyon.

50,952. You mentioned some other estates besides Lord Tredegar's?—Yes, I mentioned the Penpont estate.

50,953. Whose is that?—Mr. Williams's and I believe Maesllwch estate was valued at that time. Mr. Appleby was over here, and also Mr. Treharne Rees, and I should think a great proportion of the county was re-valued at that time. I was an agent then in Brecknockshire, and know about the state of things perfectly well. The exact amount of each farm, or what it was raised to I do not know, but my impression is, and my belief is, that there was a very considerable rise indeed which is well known, and which can be tested one way or the other and the people were fairly staggered by the rise all through the county at that time. Treharne Rees was remembered well for many a year after. See 51,2–3.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Henry Edgar Thomas called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

e 50,881. 50,954. You are Mr. Henry Edgar Thomas, and you are a solicitor, I think?—Yes.

50,954A. What do you wish to rebut?—Simply as to raising rents on Lord Tredegar's estate in 1865, which Mr. Lloyd has spoken of.

50,955. They were not raised in 1865?—No.

50,956. 1865 was the year which he mentioned, when they were raised 25 per cent. according to him?—They were not raised 25 per cent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,957. How much were they raised?—Not at all.

50,958. At any time, earlier or later?—No, since 1885 a rebate of 10 and 20 per cent. was given on the old rents. I think 1856 was the last time that there was any rise so far as my knowledge goes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

50,959. That was the last general rise in rents?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

50,960. Was there a re-valuation?—In 1856 there was. It was in the beginning of 1885, that a rebate on the rents was made to the tenants.

50,961. Mr. Lloyd asks, "What was the year "that Mr. Treharne Rees came to re-value the "estate?"—1856.

50,962. May I ask, was the result of the re-valuation in 1856 a raising of 25 per cent.?—I could not answer that, I did not really expect to be asked that question, I simply heard that statement of Mr. Lloyd's, and wished to say it was utterly wrong.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Howell Powell called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

50,963. Your address is Chapel Villa?—Yes.

50,964. What parish are you in?—Llanfihangel Fechan.

50,965. Is that a Welsh-speaking parish?—Yes, chiefly.

50,966. Have you any statement to make?—I have no personal grievance of my own, but farmers in general have, though they are not inclined to come forward to give evidence, and the reason in my opinion is that they are afraid of the landlords and agents.

In my parish land is in general too highly rented; it little matters how well a farm may be cultivated; if a tenant asks for a reduction in the rent, it is hopeless for him to expect to get it, as there are many poorer farmers ready and willing to take the farm for the sake of the improvements and unexhausted manure which is in it. I would advocate (1) a Land Court, security of tenure for valuation, and full compensation for improvements, (2) enclosure of commons. Those open commons cause great unpleasantness between neighbours, and as a rule it is the strongest man, that is, the larger farmer, who has the heaviest stock, who has all the advantage of those small commons, (3) abolition of fishing and game laws. There is a great deal of trespass by fishing. Fences are often broken down between corn and pasture fields, and tenants have no control whatever. With regard to game, that is a great nuisance to the farmers, and often have their dogs been destroyed near preserves, which causes great loss to a farmer; a dog for a farmer is of more value very often than one of his best men.

There is another thing which some landlords are very reluctant in giving, namely, necessary repairs and sufficient buildings upon the farms and repair of buildings and gates and things of the kind which are necessary for a farmer. Unless he gets those things of course it incurs a great deal of expense and extra labour for him, and causes a great deal of inconvenience. Another thing to be considered is the supply of water to homesteads, which I consider very important for a farmer. Where there are four cottages which are grouped together they are called a village, and wherever there is a village there is generally a supply of water, at least there will be some applications for it, and it is generally provided for them. There are a great many farmers that have to send for their water a quarter or half a mile distant, some much more than that, even for domestic purposes, which I think is a great inconvenience to a farmer.

50,967. Do you know of any specific instances with regard to water having to be sent for from some distance?—Yes.

50,968. Has the attention of the owners been drawn to the lack of water?—I cannot tell whether the tenants have applied or not, but I have known of such cases.

50,969. Have the sanitary authorities interfered in such cases?—Not in those I know best of.

50,970. Would it be sufficient to warrant their interference?—Possibly. I know of some places where the farmers have got the water supplied cheaply to their homesteads whether the landlords have given them any compensation or not I cannot tell; possibly they may have, but it is the tenant who has done it.

Mr. Grove.

50,971. Do you think there is a general disinclination on the part of the farmers to come forward to give evidence. Do you think that the farmers hesitate to come and give evidence before this Commission?—Yes, I do.

50,972. Do you know that from personal contact and conversation with them yourself?—Yes.

50,973. As to game, have you suffered much from damage by game?—Not at all myself.

50,974. Does it lead to unpleasant relations between the landlord and the tenant so far as you know?—Yes, it does.

50,975. When claims are made for damages are they not met in a reasonable sort of way?—To some extent they are, I believe.

50,976. What is the acreage of your farm?—I am not farming at present.

50,977. Because you spoke of farms being dearer. Could you give us any instances of high rents?—I have been farming about 40 years.

50,978. What was the rent of the farm you had?—I farmed my own property.

50,979. Do you think it is advisable for people to buy their own holdings if they can conveniently?—If they can I think it is.

50,980. Do you think they can make more out of the land. I take it what we want is to make the land produce as much as it will give us?—I believe so.

50,981. Do you think a man possessing his own property would make more of the land than a man who is only a tenant of it?—I believe so.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,982. You say you are not a tenant farmer at present?—No.

50,983. That is the reason why you have come forward when the tenants have not?—Oh, I could have come before so far as that goes. I have been farming under other landlords besides my own farm.

50,984. But still you were not afraid to come forward?—Not in the least.

50,985. Do you think there are many farmers who are afraid to come forward on several estates?—There are.

50,986. And you consider that rents on the whole are too high at present?—I believe so.

50,987. We heard this morning that there was no difference between the farming in England and Wales. I understood that repairs in England were always done by the landlord; you say that the tenants here cannot get the repairs done in several instances. Is that the case?—Not satisfactorily. Some landlords repair very well, others do not and they are very reluctant in giving the repairs.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,988. How many farms are there of considerable size in Llanfihangel Fechan, your parish?—Really I cannot answer that question because it is only recently that I have gone there to live.

50,989. You recently purchased your holding?—No, I live in another district now to what I did live in when I was farming.

Lord Kenyon.

50,990. Was that in this county may I ask?—Yes, in this county.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

50,991. How long have you been in Llanfihangel Fechan?—Going on for two years.

50,992. And you purchased your holding, did you not?—There?

50,993?—Yes?—No, it belonged to my wife before.

50,994. What is the size of it?—It is only a cottage or a villa, call it what you like. There is no land attached to it.

50,995. Have there been no meetings of the tenant farmers in that parish to consider whether they would come forward and give evidence before us or not?—I do not think there have been.

50,996. Have you heard of any meetings anywhere?—Yes, we have had meetings here in Brecon.

50,997. And what was the result. Did you find that the men were ready to come forward or not?—Oh, it fell to the ground. There were none who would come forward to give evidence, at least very few.

50,998. Have the landlords given any encouragement to tenant farmers to come forward and give evidence before us?—I do not think they have, not as far as I am aware of.

50,999. Have they done anything to discourage people from coming forward?—I cannot say that from anything I have heard from landlords themselves.

51,000. No, but do you hear it said on apparently credible authority?—It has been rumoured but I cannot prove it.

51,001. Which parish were you in before?—Llanfihangel Nant Bran.

51,002. That is the next parish but one?—Yes.

51,003. That is a completely Welsh parish, I suppose, too?—Yes.

51,004. Are there many holdings in that parish?—Yes, there are a great many.

51,005. In your opinion during the 40 years that you have been there have the tenant farmers been hard-working and industrious men?—Yes.

51,006. Have they ever been in your judgment prosperous—enabled we will say to save money after paying the rent, and paying all the outgoings connected with their farm?—Yes, many of them.

51,007. Up to about what year did you find some of the farmers able to save?—It has been worse these last eight or ten years.

51,008. Worse than ever you remember it?—Than ever I remember it.

51,009. Do you think the farmers had difficulty in meeting their rent now even where any abatements are given?—Yes, I know they have a difficulty, a great many of them.

51,010. I suppose most of the farmers there do a great deal of the work themselves with their children, do they not?—Yes, those that have children at home.

51,011. The farmer himself works, does he?—Yes, in that district altogether.

51,012. Then I may take it there is not a very great difference between the tenant farmer and a labourer?—They do the same work, in fact the tenant farmer I think is the hardest working man, because he has the longest working hours.

51,013. How do they live, I mean in the way of food?—Oh, very common.

51,014. Do they have fresh meat generally?—Very seldom.

51,015. Have the children to work as a rule at an early age?—Yes.

51,016. What is the general condition of the farmhouse and the farm buildings?—I do not think they are bad in Llanfihangel.

51,017. Whose estate is that on chiefly?—There are a great many landed proprietors.

51,018. Several owners?—Yes.

51,019. Then practically the parish consists of several small estates, does it?—Yes, a great many.

51,020. Is there a difficulty in getting labour there?—Yes, rather of late years.

51,021. I suppose the labourers' wages are much higher now than when you began farming?—Much. A servant that we might have for about 10 guineas then, we now have to give about 26*l.* for.

51,022. Are the tenants chiefly Nonconformists?—Yes, chiefly.

51,023. What proportion of them are Churchmen, do you think, in that parish?—I do not know indeed, it might be $\frac{1}{10}$ of them, or not so much.

51,024. You do not think it would be more than 1 in 10?—No, it would not be more—I should think not.

51,025. Do you know whether they have held any meeting at all there, or did any of them come to the Brecon meeting?—Not so far as I know. Do you mean in the parish?

51,026. Yes. Did any of the Llanfihangel Nant Bran people come to Brecon?—I do not think any of them did.

51,027. Do you know whether any of them are going to give evidence before us. I am asking about that parish, because I assume you know a great many of them as you have been there 40 years?—I believe one of them that has been living in Llanfihangel is coming forward. He is not living there now.

51,028. Have most of the families of these people been farming the same holdings for a great many years?—Yes, I think they have.

51,029. There are not very many newcomers?—Not very many in Llanfihangel.

51,030. During your time did you find that many people went towards England—towards Hereford or Worcestershire, or down south towards the Rhondda?—No, there is too much inclination in the Welsh to stick where they are, even if they drop there.

51,031. Then in fact your statement is very much what has been told us about other parishes, that the people like to stay upon the land that they have been brought up upon?—That is too much so I think amongst the Welsh.

51,032. What is the usual size of the holdings in this parish?—I should think they would average somewhere from 80 to 100 acres.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

51,033. Are there none smaller than 80, do you think?—Oh, yes, there are some.

51,034. But the average would be from about 80 to 120 acres?—Yes, I think so.

Lord Kenyon.

51,035. You said game caused a great deal of feeling between landlord and tenant Do you not think that sometimes it promotes good feeling between landlord and tenant?—I do not think so, I have not heard of it.

51,036. You know Sir John Llewelyn's property. Is not that near Upper Chapel?—Yes.

51,037. Does he not go up there to shoot, and is not most of the game preserved for him on his farms?—Yes, I think so.

51,038. Is not his gamekeeper a farmer's son?—No.

51,039. He told me himself that he was?—His gamekeeper?

51,040. Yes?—I never saw him farming anyhow. A farm labourer he has been.

51,041. A farmer's son, I said, not a farmer himself?—Yes; I cannot tell whether his father was farming or not, because he was dead when he was very young.

51,042. I mean, do you not think that it should encourage a landlord to go over his property when he can go for a bit of shooting?—Yes, no doubt.

51,043. He sees his tenants in that way, and goes about among them?—Yes. I should not like to say that it is very encouraging upon his property for his tenants.

51,044. You have every right to your own opinion?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,045. I should like to know this, as you seem certainly to be very well acquainted with this parish; in your time has difference in language, or difference in religion and in politics done anything to influence the relations of the landlords in that parish with their tenants?—No, I do not think it has.

51,046. You do not remember any eviction for anyone of those reasons?—No.

51,047. Or resulting from the fact of there being a difference?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

51,048. The following questions are handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Can you mention any "case in which a landlord has exerted any "undue influence upon a tenant, to prevent his "coming forward?"—No, I cannot.

51,049. "Do you think that tenants have any "cause for fearing to come here?"—I do not know what the cause may be, but I believe that is the cause.

51,050. Do you think they have any cause for fear yourself?—I do not know what it is.

51,051. Do you yourself think they have any cause?—They may have, I cannot tell for that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,052. Would you have come if you had been a tenant from year to year?—Yes. I have been a tenant of different landlords before and after, when I was farming my own property.

51,053. I know, but would you if you had been a tenant from year to year, still have come forward?—The very same.

51,054. You would have come forward?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

51,055. Therefore, you think that their fears are groundless, I suppose? You are not afraid anyhow?—That depends upon the courage of the man, I think, a great deal.

Mr. Griffiths.

51,056. May I ask were you not rather in a different position to an ordinary tenant farmer?—I consider I was.

51,057. If you had been no more than a tenant farmer yourself, do you think you would have come to give evidence?—Perhaps I should have been afraid of offending my landlord if that had been the case, but I could fall back upon my own property even if I lost the other that I had.

Lord Kenyon.

51,058. Do you think that this was the reason? Do you think the tenants thought that the result of this inquiry would probably be disadvantageous to the landlords, and that, therefore, the landlords did not view it with pleasure?—Yes, that is the view I take of it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Price called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See evidence of next witness and 73,790–73,838.

51,059. You are Mr. Thomas Price of Cefnwern?—Yes.

51,060. Is that in Llangorse parish?—Yes.

51,061. Have you some statement you wish to make?—I have been farming 180 acres of land.

51,062. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Thos. R. Jones, Plas Llangorse.

51,063. You received notice to quit in September last. Is that so?—Yes.

51,064. You say that no reason was given?—Nothing, only that they wanted an advance in rent.

51,065. What is your rent?—140*l.* it is now, and he wants 30*l.* more.

51,066. He wants 170*l.*?—Yes.

51,067. Did he say that the farm was very cheap or not?—Well, he means to say, I suppose, after I have improved it. It was not so when I took it 13 years ago. I have farmed it 13 or 14 years and after I have improved a lot on it—it is looking a good bit better than when I had it—and now he gives me notice to quit and wants an advance on my improvements.

51,068. You offered him 10*l.* more, did you not, if times continued to improve. When was that?—I offered him 10*l.* That was last Christmas. I only paid him that half year's rent. I wanted to settle with him to keep it on. He was saying that the times were getting better, and I said, "Well, if the times are going to "continue better I will give you 10*l.* advance; "but if they do not I cannot pay you more than "I am paying now."

51,069. Do you think the times were getting better last Christmas?—Well, he was telling me the times were getting better and I know they were getting better at the time—that was last November and December—but they got worse again until this spring; now they are getting a bit better this time again, but I know these last two years I should be 200*l.* better off if I had left it two years ago instead of now.

51,070. You are a Nonconformist, are you?—Yes, I am a Nonconformist.

51,071. And a Liberal, and you say you are boycotted in the parish?—I am, I suppose.

51,072. Are the Churchmen in a great majority in Llangorse parish then?—Yes, the Churchmen rule with a high hand in our parish.

51,073. There are more Churchmen than Nonconformists at Talgarth, perhaps, then?—Well, I cannot say perhaps that there would be more Nonconformists than Churchmen if they had fair play, but as it happens our vicar has great influence in our parish and he influences a lot whether they are Churchmen or no. He owns several farms and looks after other farms, and a good many relations have been brought up in the parish and they have a lot of influence there. By that he is a high-handed man in our parish.

51,074. Did I make a mistake: is it Talgarth parish or Llangorse?—Llangorse parish.

51,075. That is next door to Llangorse. Is it a Welsh-speaking parish, then?—Well, it is mixed. They are all Welshman bred and born I may say, but there is more of the English language spoken than of the Welsh.

51,076. I suppose Talgarth is more an English-speaking than a Welsh-speaking parish, is it?—Yes, in the speaking of it. They are all Welshmen, but there will be more English speaking.

51,077. You say you take a prominent part in the parish affairs?—Well, I look to see how the parish money is spent and by that Mr. Bowen wants to have his influence carried out as a rule. I will give you an instance. At the last parish meeting to appoint overseers this year, there were overseers appointed at the beginning of April last and we gathered there all together a good many of us parishioners. The accounts were not ready before that night, but we had only to appoint four overseers—only to name them and send them to the magistrate to be appointed. Mr. Bowen named one and I named one and Mr. Bowen named two after and we sent them in in that form to the magistrate at Talgarth to be appointed. Against the magistrate's day there was a letter sent from Mr. Bowen there to say it was the wish of the parish for him to have his two men appointed. That is an instance for you now and that cannot be turned back. The clerk of the magistrates had a letter from him that morning and he read it in court.

51,078. You consider that that is the reason why you are under notice to quit, do you?—Well, that is the principal part of it, I believe. That is my belief of it, because my landlord told me his own self it is not his own fault. Then I can only after that calculate what is the reason to a certain extent anyhow.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,079. I still do not quite understand your case. What did your landlord mean to suggest in your opinion by the statement which he made to you that it was not his fault?—The improvement in rent, do you mean?

51,080. No. I understand you to say that your landlord said to you, "It is not my fault that you are going away"?—Yes.

50,081. What did he mean by that?—I mean he was influenced by others because my landlord is a Churchman and is first cousin of our vicar, and I believe that they are combined together and influenced by Mr. Bowen to get me out of the parish because I am a Nonconformist and I am not a Tory either.

51,082. Then I understand you are one of those citizens who take an active interest in the local affairs of your parish?—Well, I am always in the parish meeting as a rule and I say my opinion there whatever it may be, and it does not happen always to be the same opinion as the other side.

51,083. How many years have you been in the habit of attending the parish meetings and taking an interest—a very proper interest—in your parish concerns?—Thirteen years. I have been farming all that time and I have taken an interest in the parish business since I was there.

51,084. And also taking part in other affairs, such as County Council elections, Parliamentary elections, and so forth?—Yes, altogether, and I have always exposed my mind without pilling any eggs as they say about here: I do not carry one face and do another thing.

51,085. Then it has been the fact that you have been in opposition to the parish all this time?—Well, I think that is not far wrong.

51,086. Have you had any dispute with your landlord at any time?—No, never a word; we are on the best of terms now.

51,087. Which of the vestry meetings was it that this churchwarden transaction took place at; was it the vestry meeting this year or last year?—The vestry meeting this year was about appointing the overseers that I gave an instance of.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

51,088. But you had received notice to quit then, had you not?—Yes, but we had a guardian's election a twelvemonth last April. Of course I took a prominent part in that.

50,089. Were you a candidate?—No, I was not, only I supported one candidate, and the vicar and his party supported another one.

51,090. When was it first suggested by your landlord that there should be an increase of rent?—When I went to ask him what was the reason he gave me the notice.

51,091. But did he give you the notice before asking for an increase of rent?—Yes.

51,092. In September last you got a notice to quit?—Yes.

51,093. And nothing had passed between your landlord and yourself?—Nothing, not to this day, no grievance, but I have asked him many many times for it and offered him, as I said before, the 10*l.* advance if the times got better.

51,094. You asked him many many times for what?—Many times to try to come to a settlement to keep it on.

51,095. Then there has been a talk about September last of your getting notice to quit?—No.

51,096. Then the notice to quit was quite a surprise to you?—Yes.

51,097. And there had been no dispute of any kind between your landlord and yourself?—No.

51,098. And no excuse was given at the time he gave it—no statement or reason by the landlord?—No, no statement at all I had with him—nothing.

51,099. What did you do when you received the notice to quit?—I went to the landlord and asked him what was the reason of it.

51,100. What did he say?—He said that my farm was too cheap, and he wanted 30*l.* advance.

51,101. Was your farm cheaper than the other farms on the same estate?—Not so cheap as some adjoining me, and cheaper than some others that are down below me running down to Llangorse Lake—cheaper than some of them.

51,102. Is Mr. Jones' estate a big estate?—No, about four farms. Mine is 180 acres and the one he farms himself—at least he lets it out to grass anyhow—is about 100 acres.

51,103. Has he given you any abatement at all?—Not a penny—half-a-crown for my dinner sometimes.

51,104. Then at the interview you had with your landlord he simply said that the farm was too cheap and said the rent was to be raised by 30*l.*, otherwise the notice to quit must stand?—Yes, I asked him yesterday last if that was good and he said it was—that he would not let it me under 30*l.* rise no way.

51,105. Then you honestly believe that this notice to quit has been given because of the disputes which occurred between yourself and the vicar?—Yes, that is my opinion, but I did not have that from my landlord.

51,106. But you think that the raising of the rent is an excuse. Whether it is well founded or not, that is the impression left on your mind?—Yes, and that is the belief of the neighbourhood altogether entirely. I will give you one instance what our vicar has said. That was the beginning of last September. I have two witnesses to what he said on Tal-y-llyn platform coming to Brecon on a Friday. It happened to turn up the talk about the last guardian election in the parish of Llangorse, and it was said that it was a tight match between the two candidates, but the candidute of Mr. Bowen did happen to come in. Oh, says Mr. Bowen, the landlords of Llangorse yet have not finished with that election. That was last September—the beginning of September.

51,107. "The landlords of Llangorse have "not yet finished with that election?"—Yes, "the landlords of Llangorse have not finished "with that election yet." I was the only one that had notice from one of the landlords of Llangorse. That is a proof from that side to my opinion.

51,108. What is Mr. Bowen's Christian name and what is his address?—Mr. William Bowen, Llangorse Vicarage.

51,109. That is the only sense in which you say you have been boycotted, is it?—Yes.

51,110. That is what you mean by what you say in your evidence-in-chief?—Yes, concerning my farm, but I have been boycotted concerning the school besides that.

51,111. In what way?—Concerning the school.

51,112. What school—the board school?—No, the National school.

51,113. How were you boycotted about that?—Well, we had a National school there, and years ago I was appointed one of the managers. I attended for some time till I could see it was no good for anybody to attend there only church people. Two or three others along with me were of the same opinion, and we left at the same time. We had then a voluntary rate coming out, and it was collected for a while. About six years ago I should think they did print a statement of their balance sheet in March, and they put on the back of the balance sheet, that there were four refused to pay their voluntary rates. I was the first one, I suppose, that was put on that sheet, and the rate was never asked of me; the collector never called at my house—never left his demand note there. When I saw that I told Mr. Bowen then that he was abusing my name—"Oh, the collector told them so." Well, I told him the collector had never been at my house. To cut it short anyhow, I said I should not pay the voluntary rate any more, without they would withdraw what they published about me—that was that I had refused to pay it, or never had offered to pay it. Well, he said, perhaps we can carry on the school again for all that, if you won't pay. I never paid any more the voluntary rate. The next thing done was to send up a notice to me if I would not pay 9*d.* per head per week for my children, they would not be admitted to school. I have got that in Mr. Bowen's handwriting now.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

51,114. Have you got the letter here?—I think I have (handing same).

51,115. What were the ordinary school fees in this school?—It was according to the standard: 1*d.* for standard 1; 2*d.* for standard 2; or something of that kind.

51,116. Was the rate demanded in respect of your children an excessive rate having regard to the standard?—The voluntary rate.

51,117. No, the school fees. They wanted 9*d.* a week you tell us?—Yes, that is what they were demanding of me.

51,118. Was that in excess of what was demanded from the children of other parishioners?—Only for me personally.

51,119. Was nothing charged to the children of other people in the parish?—Oh, yes, the ordinary fee was charged of them according to the standard.

51,120. That is what I mean. Then this 9*d.* was higher than the proper fee according to the standard. Is that what you mean?—Yes, 1*d.* was on one of mine; 2*d.* on another, and 3*d.* on the other. It only amounted to 6*d.* altogether.

51,121. Was this school in 1889 in receipt of a Government grant?—Yes.

51,122. This is the letter you hand up of April the 15th, 1889:—

"SIR, Llangorse National School.

"I HAVE been requested by the managers of this school to inform you that as you refuse to pay the small rate required for the necessary expenses of the school, weich rate has been paid by nearly all the parishioners, that in future you will be required to pay a fee of 9*d.* per week according to Article 3 Education Code for each of your children and the managers have authorised the schoolmistress not to admit any child whose parents or guardians refuse to contribute the small amount of rate necessary to keep the school up to the standard required by the Education Department without their paying the legal fee of 9*d.* for each child every Monday morning. A list of those who had refused to pay the rate has been placed up in the school for the guidance of the mistress.

"Yours truly,

"(Signed) WM. BOWEN."

What was the legal fee?—1*d.* one, 2*d.* the other, and 3*d.* the other at that time, making up 6*d.* altogether.

51,123. But the contention of Mr. Bowen in this letter is that the fee was in accordance with Article 3 of the Education Code?—That was to keep the school up to the requirements of the Education Code: as I would understand it.

51,124. No—"To pay a fee of 9*d.* per week "according to Article 3, Education Code"?—The Education Code gives power to make a charge of 9*d.* on school boards if you let the Education Department know, but our fee was made according to the standard.

51,125. Your point is this, that a higher fee was charged for your children than for other children simply because you refused to pay a voluntary rate?—That is right.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

51,126. Which you were never asked for in the first instance?—Never asked before they published it.

51,127. Is there any other incident that you would like to bring to the notice of the Commissioners?—Well, to finish that I had to write up to the Education Department and I had an answer from them. I have the answer here now.

51,128. What did the Education Department do?—They told me to keep on at the ordinary fee and they sent a letter down to Mr. Bowen that he was not to charge me.

51,129. Did he comply with the orders of the Education Department?—They were supplied to me and supplied to him.

51,130. Did he comply with the orders of the Education Department?—Yes, he was obliged to.

51,131. This was a dispute you had with him in 1889?—No.

51,132. Then were there subsequent disputes besides those that you have mentioned at the parish meeting?—No; well that is not exactly disputes, but we have had cross opinions many times in parish meetings. There was an election there of assistant overseer. That was two years ago. Of course it happened to come to a party then, the Church party and the Nonconformist party.

51,133. Are the Nonconformists in the majority in this parish or not in your opinion?—If they had fair play they are, but they are screwed down, you see, by threats.

51,134. Taking the question of church accommodation and chapel accommodation, is the church full as a rule?—Well, it is very seldom that I have attended it, so I cannot say for the church: I do not suppose it is.

51,135. But you hear; you are a man about the parish and you are pretty well known?—There are two chapels there and one church and the majority are in the two chapels at every service. I think that is enough of a proof anyhow.

Lord Kenyon.

51,136. What is the seating accommodation of the chapels?—The chapel I go to will seat 120.

51,137. And the other?—The other I should say is some little smaller, perhaps 100.

51,138. And the church?—Well, I do not know; perhaps the church will seat 200 or 220; somewhere like that I think.

51,139. And the chapels are always full?—Well, as a rule on Sunday evenings the chapels will be well seated.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,140. Do you think that anything is done that ought not to be done to force people to go to church? Are we to understand that? I am not expressing any opinion of my own. I only want to ascertain your belief and the reason for it?—So far as this is concerned: as it happens our vicar has been bred and born in our parish and he has got great influence there. He has got a great many relations, he has got farms of his own there, and looks after some of his relation's farms, and he has got either direct or indirect influence on a good lot in the parish and there are several of them who used to be Nonconformists there go, after they come under his influence, to church. I think that is an unfair influence.

51,141. Then taking into account all these circumstances connected with the parish you wish us to understand that the notice to quit has been given in order to get rid of you from the parish?—That is the principal motive of it, I suppose, and the landlord wants his advance. He undoubtedly wants it; but that is no matter now.

51,142. When you took this farm what amount of rent did you pay?—140*l.*

51,143. Did you continue paying that for 13 years?—Yes, for the first five years I paid 160*l.* but I have changed my landlord since I had a reduction to 140*l.* I had that change under the old landlord. I changed my landlord now about five years. His brother held it before. Then his brother died and he comes in after his brother.

51,144. What improvements do you say you have made on the farm?—The most part of the farm was gone filthy. It had not been well farmed and the fences had gone to a shocking state. There were splendid fences there, but they had been neglected. I put the fences into order the principal part of them, and I had farmed the land so that I could get something off it now where I could get nothing off it but filth and thistles the time I went there, and now when the farm will produce a good crop I have notice to quit.

51,145. Then you consider you have improved the farm generally all over?—I have; a general improvement I consider.

51,146. Then with regard to this vestry and the appointment of overseers, were there many present at that vestry?—Yes, at this last one I should think. It is on the minute-book; I should think there were about between 25 and 30.

51,147. Did you sign the minute-book?—The chairman was obliged to sign the minute-book, and all our names are down on it.

51,148. He signed the minute-book on your behalf—all of you?—No, the chairman signed the minute-book on our behalf and the names of all that were present are down on it.

51,149. But these four names were submitted to the vestry, were they?—Yes.

51,150. And approved of?—Well, they were not put to vote, but they were named; they were named there and the four names were sent before the magistrate to be appointed.

51,151. Are you sure the name you suggested was put second on the list?—Yes. They were put down in the way they were named in the vestry and sent before the magistrate by the assistant overseer. He took them, and if we had them as they were named the parish would be all satisfied, but Mr. Bowen did write this letter to the clerk of the magistrate at Talgarth to say that it was the wish of the parish to appoint the two he named, and they were not according to how we did name them.

51,152. Was not this coming from the vestry direct sufficient? That was the wish of the parish of course without anything else?—Of course as we put them on the list that is what we thought was the wish of the parish, but he said it was the other way, and they believed it the other way in Talgarth.

51,153. Then do you think that he influenced the magistrates?—He must have, because they appointed the two he mentioned, and they were were not given in rotation.

Mr. Grove.

51,154. You suppose that the magistrates appoint the names in the way in which they are given on the list, do you not?—The ordinary rule is to take the two uppermost names, and that was not done in this case.

Lord Kenyon.

51,155. I have some questions handed up by Mr. Stephen: "How many acres does your "landlord own?"—I cannot tell you exactly, I should think it is 350 or somewhere about that. Perhaps a little more or less, I cannot say exactly.

51,156. When did you first get notice to quit?—Last September.

51,157. "Had not the remark of Mr. Bowen, "which you have mentioned to us, reference to "a proposed increased number of persons qualified "to vote for guardians as owners?"—I do not understand that question.

51,158. "Had not the remark of Mr. Bowen "which you have mentioned to us, reference to "a proposed increased number of persons qualified to vote for guardians as owners?"—I do not know.

Lord Kenyon.

What remark was it, Mr. Stephen?

(Mr. H. L. Stephen.) The remark was Mr. Bowen saying that the landlords of the parish had not yet finished with that election.

Lord Kenyon.

51,159. Had that any reference to the number of persons qualified to vote for guardians as owners?—I take it in another light, because I was the only one who was noticed following that remark, and I took it directly it was a remark towards me: that is how I understood.

51,160. "Have you ever seen the letter which "you allege Mr. Bowen wrote to the magistrates?"—No, I have not seen it.

51,161. "How do you know its contents?"—Our assistant overseer was there on the day, and it was read publicly in the court of the magistrate at Talgarth.

51,162. You have heard its contents from the assistant overseer?—Yes, and by more than one who was there at the present time, besides me, and it was done publicly in the magistrate's court at Talgarth, and there is no secret about that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM POWELL PRICE called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See evidence of preceding witness.

51,163. You are solicitor for Mr. Thomas R. Jones, I understand?—Mr. Jones is my client.

51,164. You heard the last witness's statement?—I did, and I had no intention of giving evidence, until I heard his statements.

51,165. Is there anything you wish to rebut?—Yes. Some years ago Mr. Jones employed me upon the death of his brother when he came into possession of this property of Cefnwern. He had it considerably embarrassed, and he told me at the time that the tenant Price had promised his brother 18*s.* an acre, but that he had never paid him more than 140*l.*, that he considered it was worth 180*l.*, and I at that time gave him notice to quit—I prepared a notice to quit for him which I believe he served.

51,166. When was this?—Well, I should think it would be about four years ago; I cannot say; I really do not remember exactly; and it was a sort of matter that I did not make an entry in my diary about I am sure; it was a sort of friendly matter. I prepared a notice to quit for him, and I subsequently gave him the form of agreement which is very much in use in the counties of Radnor and Brecon by certain estate agents. It is a perfectly fair agreement. It provides most fully for any unexhausted improvements. There were two reasons for the notice. The one was that the tenant Price was exhausting the land and treating it unfairly and the other was that he was not paying 18*s.* an acre but 15*s.*, and he was taking advantage of a previous proprietor because he happened to be married to a sister of the proprietor. All he did was to pay 140*l.* and say, "I cannot pay any more," notwithstanding the verbal agreement to pay 18*s.* an acre. Notice to quit was therefore, I believe, given to him. It was certainly prepared by me. An agreement was prepared by me; at least this blank form was filled up, and he was left in possession with the expectancy that he would sign the agreement. He called upon me once or twice and I thought he was going to agree to it. However, he did not do so. Mr. Jones hesitated to put the notice in force and he was allowed to run on.

51,167. Do I understand that Mr. Jones succeeded his brother?—He did.

51,168. And that Mr. Thomas Price married the sister?—He married the sister of the wife of the previous proprietor. There was consequently an intimacy between them and there is no doubt that Price took advantage of his intimacy and did not pay him the full amount he promised; at least that is the instruction of the present proprietor to me.

51,169. Do I understand you that Mr. Thomas Price had some conversation with you about the rent previous to last September?—We discussed the question over the agreement I should say about four years ago and he came in several times; certainly of course he said it was too dear and he could not afford to pay it, but his chief objection was not the rent, but he said he would not agree to the clauses. I went through the clauses very carefully with him and individually he could not object to a single clause. I pointed out to him that the grand clause for the tenant was a most favourable one; it provided for the payment for manures for something like seven, or eight, or nine years according to their value on the production of the receipts and also for payment of compensation for any feeding stuffs used on the farm.

51,170. But what I want to be clear about is this. You had some connection with Mr. Thomas Price as to the rent he has to pay?—Oh, certainly, I must have had a conversation.

51,171. And that related to a rent of what?—That related to a rent of 18*s.* an acre which was claimed in lieu of the rent of 140*l.*

51,172. Would that amount to 170*l.*?—I cannot say at this moment. I cannot tell you because I had no intention of giving evidence here as to this until I heard this witness give evidence 10 minutes ago.

51,173. I may be wrong, but I understood from the previous witness that the first intimation he had of a rise of rent was after the notice to quit?—But this was a wholly separate notice. This was a notice years ago. And then he was allowed to continue. The proprietor's position is one that necessitates his getting a fair value for his land, and I may tell you that he also was advised, and he himself, as an old farmer considered his land was improperly treated. He instructed me to prepare him a notice to quit. I had nothing to do with its service again. I simply prepared a form of notice and filled it up for him and sent it to him. This notice I believe was given. The next thing was that Mr. Price the tenant I believe threatened, contrary to the custom—the moral custom anyhow of this country—to plough up swards, to plough up ancient pasture, and do everything, unless he was paid some reasonable compensation. I do not know what it was. I believe arbitrators were appointed and the result was that an agreement was entered into between landlord and tenant, and the landlord agreed to pay the tenant 50*l.* for not breaking up swards. So far from there being any bad feeling on the part of the landlord towards the tenant, I have reason to know that even the last fortnight he hesitated to make any arrangements with the new tenant without again having further conversation with Mr. Price.

51,174. Do you say that there was no ill-will on account of Mr. Price being a Nonconformist?—Mr. T. R. Jones is by no means a strict Churchman, and I have an old reason to know it from his relationship with me as solicitor and client: he certainly never mentioned it to me. The two subjects mentioned to me were these. First, as to exhausting the land. The fact is, I believe the land was farmed in the old time by the present proprietor's brother, and as owner of his own property it was, I believe, farmed very well. I am told it is not now in nearly the same state of cultivation as it was then.

51,175. Mr. Price said it was a mass of thistles?—I know very well there is a difference of opinion on that point.

51,176. Did you tell Mr. Price that he was farming the land out?—I told him years ago that he was accused of not treating it fairly.

51,177. You did?—Yes.

51,178. You did not give him notice to quit?—I did not give him notice to quit. I never gave him notice to quit. All I did was simply as between solicitor and client to prepare a notice.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,179. No letter was sent before the notice to quit was sent, was it?—No, no communication whatever by letter.

51,180. How long before the last notice to quit was the former one?—As I have just stated I cannot exactly remember. I should think it would be about four years—three or four years, and he continued in possession.

51,181. Then Mr. Price is right in saying that this notice to quit came to him without any formal reason being assigned for it?—I know nothing about that. I tell you I only prepared the notice; but I do know that representations have been made to him that he originally took the land at 18*s.* an acre, and was only paying 140*l.*

51,182. There seems to be no dispute at all about what has taken place after the notice to quit was given?—No; I am speaking before the notice to quit. I am speaking of years ago. He knows perfectly well that there is an open sore about the question that he originally took the farm for 18*s.* an acre, but he has never paid 18*s.* an acre.

51,183. But the whole question appears to have been in abeyance for four or five years?—Yes, it does, for the reason I have told you—the relations that existed between the deceased brother and himself.

Mr. Griffiths.

51,184. Have you the agreement by you that you prepared?—No, I have not. In fact it was given to Mr. Price, and he would have it. I do not think he has ever given it me back.

51,185. In which way do you explain that he exhausted the farm?—I do not explain it at all. I only explain that he was accused of it. I believe it was by over-cropping, contrary to the usual custom—having two successive crops instead of having a green crop between.

51,186. He had no agreement, had he?—He had no agreement, and he took advantage of having no agreement.

51,187. Did the landlord pay him the 50*l.* you mentioned?—The agreement is that he is to be allowed it out of the September rent.

51,188. But according to his own account, I should say that he has got that in general improvements that he has made?—No, certainly not. It is simply a question of not ploughing up sward or seeds, which he might do, because there is really no custom in this country which can be enforced It used to be supposed that there was a custom here, but really and truly you cannot enforce a custom, and a man may absolutely ruin a farm if he likes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

51,189. Were there any valuers at any time appointed?—Well, I do not know. I do not know that there was any formal valuation. Friends met them on both sides, and it was an arrangement come to mutually.

51,190. Are you in a position to say what was the rent of this farm before, when he took it?—I could not be in a position to say, because it was farmed by the landlord himself. It was in hand.

51,191. How long ago was it?—Oh, 50 years.

Lord Kenyon.

51,192. There is a question by Mr. Stephen: "Do you believe that the Reverend Mr. Bowen "exercises any improper influence over his "parishioners?"—I am quite sure he is wholly incapable of it. There is not a better man in the Church in Wales than the Reverend Mr. Bowen.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined, 54,242.

Mr. WILLIAM MORGAN called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

51,193. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

51,194. In what parish do you reside?—Llanfrynach.

51,195. Which direction is that in?—South of Brecon.

51,196. Is that a Welsh-speaking parish?—Oh, there is a good bit of English there too.

51,197. About half and half?—Half and half, yes.

51,198. How much land do you farm?—134 acres.

51,199. Under whom?—David Morgan, Llandaff, Cardiff

51,200. Have you any statement you would like to make?—Yes. My father farmed Caecrwn in the parish of Battle from the year 1831 to the year 1854. He took Caecrwn in December 1831 and he kept it along to the year 1850. In the year 1850 he took the land belonging to Battle End in addition to Caecrwn. There is a little gentleman's seat belonging to Battle End, but he had nothing only the land as a yearly tenant. In three years after he took the land a clerk of Mr. Ernest, a gentleman under Colonel Watkins, came up to my father one day in the month of October; we were sowing wheat. He told my father that Mr. Ernest was very wishful to see him in Brecon on the following Saturday. My father went and what he said was that he had let the gentleman's seat and the land to a gentleman and he wanted my father to give it up at once without any notice. My father refused unless he should have a twelvemonth's rent. In the meantime father went on again and he sowed another field of wheat; he sowed five acres there, I think; but some time in November he came to terms; he had 30*l.*, a half year's rent, for giving up the land. The following 25th of March he had notice then for Caecrwn because he took those 30*l.* for giving up the other land. He was a great loser by giving it up, because if he had only taken the custom of the country to take the custom crop of wheat he would have been very much better than the 30*l.* Wheat in the year 1854 was 72*s.* per quarter. He would have made instead of 30*l.* something about 37*l.* out of the crop of wheat. So he should not keep on Caecrwn any longer, not if he could pay double the rent for it, so he had to leave.

51,201. He left in 1854, did he?—Yes, he left in 1854.

51,202. And the farm was raised 13*l.* a year?—On my father's improvements.

51,203. To the next tenant?—Yes, he had grubbed up six acres of land there.

51,204. I thought the land was let with the house?—Yes, but that was Battle End, but he lived at Caecrwn 18 years before ever he had Battle End.

51,205. Have you anything in your own case to mention to us?—No, nothing.

51,206. Have you any remedies?—Well, I believe that land is too high according to the times and according to labour. I pay now double the wages that my father paid 36 years ago. My father paid 11*l.* then to a servant boy. I pay 22*l.* now. My father paid 7*l.* for a servant girl, I pay 14*l.* now.

51,207. You say you know several farmers who are afraid to come forward to give evidence?—Yes, I have no doubt. I know the first meeting we held here in Brecon several attended, but by the next they all disappeared.

51,208. Were they full of grievances on the first occasion?—Oh, yes, several of them.

51,209. Why did not they come to state them?—Oh, they were afraid that there would be a following day.

51,210. Afraid of what?—There would be a snowy day some time and that the landlord would come down upon them.

51,211. Do you not think that that fear is ill-founded: you are here yourself, I see?—Oh, no, I am not afraid myself.

51,212. I say you think that fear is ill-founded, do you?—Yes.

51,213. Do you think it would be better that landlords should issue a notice to say that their tenants may come forward if they choose?—Oh, certainly; if they did that may be people would have been more free.

51,214. Is not it rather an interference with the liberty of the subject?—Yes, certainly.

51,215. I mean giving them leave to do what they can do—is not that rather an interference with the liberty of the subject?—I do not know.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,216. Did you hear Mr. Howell Powell's evidence?—Yes.

51,217. As to the general condition of things in this county?—Yes.

51,218. Did you agree with it?—Quite so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

51,219. Are you a tenant farmer yourself?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

51,220. I have some questions by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Who are your adjoining land-"owners?"—Sir Joseph Bailey one side and Mr. De Winton and the Dinas Estate.

51,221. Which Mr. De Winton is that?—Mr. Chas. De Winton. He lives in Brecon.

51,222. "Have you or your brother made a "friendly exchange with Sir Joseph Bailey?" —Yes, we did.

51,223. "Are your neighbours on the Peter-"stone Estate satisfied with their farms?"—Oh, yes, I think they are. Sir Joseph is a very good landlord, he keeps up the repairs so well.

51,224. Was not Battle End generally let as a gentleman's residence at a high rent?—No, because the landlord lived there himself at the time he had it. He died quite suddenly in March, so we had it in September.

51,225. "Was not the land in question land round Battle End?"—Yes, it was all round—all the land belonging to the seat was with us.

51,226. It was not let until your father had it?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Williams called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

51,227–8. You are the county surveyor for Brecknock?—Yes.

51,229. You have a statement I think?—Yes.

51,230. Will you kindly read it. You are agent for the Penpont Estate?—Yes.

51,231. Who is the owner of the Penpont Estate?—The Misses Williams are the owners now.

51,232. Please read your statement.—This estate is about 3,500 acres in extent and the number of holdings is 31. Some of the farms are small, from 10 to 66 acres in extent. The rent varies from 9*s.* to 19*s.* per acre, with but one exception, where it is a little over 20*s.* owing to the situation and quality of the land. The rents have been paid once a year, those due in September are paid in January the following year. Many of the present tenants were born on the estate, and some of their ancestors have occupied their holdings for generations, consequently there have been but few changes of occupation. Widows of tenants are allowed to retain their holdings and sons to succeed their fathers, and in some instances sons-in-law. When part of the property was sold eight years ago, several of the tenants were in a position to buy their holdings. The abatement made by the landlord during the last seven years has been 15 per cent., and 5 per cent. in addition in 1887 in consequence of the drought—previous to that date 10 per cent. was allowed, and owing to the loss of sheep which was sustained by some of the tenants the abatements were raised to suit the respective case of each tenant. In some instances an allowance of lime is granted to the tenant when a portion of the land is laid for permanent pasture. The tenants are allowed to kill the ground game. The annual amount laid out on improvements, alterations, additional buildings, and repairs, during the last 14 years has been 25 per cent. The family settled on Penpont property about 1640 and have lived on their estate. That is all my evidence.

Mr. Griffiths.

51,233. Were these tenants that purchased their holdings able to pay for them, or did they have to mortgage their property?—I believe they were able to pay. I am not able to answer you precisely on that point. I believe they were.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,234. What parish is this estate in?—It is in the parishes of Penpont, Trallong, Llanspyddid, Maescar, Defynock and Llanilltyd.

51,235. Penpont is not far from Brecon?—Not far from Brecon—five miles.

51,236. Are the tenants on the estate mostly Welsh-speaking people?—Principally.

51,237. Very much what they are in the other parishes, I suppose?—Just about the same; perhaps a little more English.

Lord Kenyon.

51,238. In your opinion is there any reason for the fear that the tenants show in not coming forward?—Not in the least.

51,239. Is there any other reason why they do not come to give evidence?—Not that I am aware of.

51,240–1. There are two questions by Mr. John Lloyd: "When did Mr. Appleby re-value the Penpont estate"?—Mr. Appleby valued the property in 1869.

51,242. "What per-centage of increase was made?"—The increase was 25 per cent. on the old rentals.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Builth.

FIFTY-NINTH DAY.

Second Court.

Shire Hall, Brecon, Brecknockshire, Tuesday, 8th May 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, BART., IN THE CHAIR.

Professor RHŶS. | Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS VAUGHAN called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,243. Do you reside at Velin Newydd, Talgarth?—Yes.

51,244. Are you a magistrate?—I am a justice of the peace for Brecon and a county councillor for Breconshire. The estate belonging to my father and myself is something over 6,000 acres in this and the adjoining county. As far as I know the relationship between landlord and tenant on the estate has been of the most cordial description. I can answer with confidence for myself and father, and, if I may judge from the costly and beautiful presentations I received on the occasions of my coming of age and marriage, those feelings have been fully shared by the tenantry. My father, who has a thorough practical knowledge of agriculture for many years, was his own land agent, and always let his farms and received his rents himself. Changes of tenancy used to be very rare, but of late years they have been more frequent. I am glad to say many of the tenants have left in order to take larger farms, the farms on our estate being, as a rule, small. Some families have held land on the estate for the last 150 years or so. A distraint has never been levied in my or my father's time, and we have no record of one ever having been levied on the estate. The sum of over 8,000*l.* has been expended in new buildings and drainage, without counting the ordinary repairs, since my father succeeded to the property, now nearly 50 years ago. I have never heard of any demand for leases. I never remember having been asked for a lease, and should certainly have no objection to grant one if required. Ten per cent. reductions were given in the years of depression. It has never been the custom on the estate to prefer one tenant to another on account of his religious or political views, and I have not the remotest idea to what religious denomination one-half or two-thirds of the tenants belong. I do not believe that in this neighbourhood any preference is shown on this account, as, although I often have letters from landlords asking what was the character as farmers of tenants or their sons, I never hardly remember having this question asked. If it was I certainly should not answer it.

I consider that on the whole the farmers in this part of the country do very well. It is true their sons and daughters often work for years on the holding for little or no wages. But then they get, if I may use the expression, deferred pay, as when they marry and set up for themselves, the fathers are expected to, and, indeed, nearly always do, stock their farms for them.

I think the tenant should have complete security for unexhausted improvements—no consequence what time may have elapsed since they were executed. For instance, I will put a supposititious case. Say a farm is let at 100*l.* per annum, its fair market value in the then state of the farm. Suppose the tenant drains and clears 20 acres of rough land and makes the farm worth 120*l.* per annum, and further suppose the farm is sold, the purchaser would have to pay an enhanced price owing to the increased rental the farm would command. It would clearly be unreasonable to expect the purchaser to compensate the tenant for his outlay, and the tenant ought to receive compensation out of the purchase money of the farm. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, is good as far as it goes, but I do not think it goes far enough in compensating the tenant for improved letting value.

With regard to game, I have never had any difficulty with the tenants, and I have always found them most anxious to show sport, and very pleased to see me going over their land, and I can confidently say I do not now know of a single estate in either Breconshire or Radnorshire on which damage to any appreciable extent is done to the tenant by game, all or nearly all the land on which game is heavily preserved being in the owner's hands. I think the letting of sporting rights over estates a very fruitful source of trouble. A shooting tenant naturally cares little or nothing for the tenants, and having paid his rent expects to get the utmost amount of sport possible out of the estate. Of course there are exceptions. I think there should be a cheap and easy way of assessing damage from game which may be sustained by the agricultural tenant. I think the Ground Game Act has, on the whole, worked well, and has improved the relationship between landlord and tenant.

I am a strong advocate for light railways. I believe in many parts of the country if cheaply made they would pay and be a great boon to both landlord and tenant.

I do not myself believe a land court is wanted, as my experience is that the Welsh farmer is a very shrewd individual and well able to look after his own interest. I do not, however, think that if one was established we should have anything to fear from it. I am very much in favour of the establishment of small freeholders, and I think that the Government might with great advantage lend money at easy rates to assist farmers in the purchase of their holdings. At the same time I should strongly deprecate any legislation that would tend to destroy confidence in the security of real property in Wales; as I believe it would drive capital out of the country, and make still harder and more difficult the position of the mortgaged freeholder, often, I fear, at present hard enough.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,245. Do you think there would be any desire amongst tenants to purchase their holdings providing they felt secure?—I do not quite follow you.

51,246. Provided they had security of tenure?—Yes, I think in some cases there would be. I think a man would like to think that he was the holder of his holding himself; and it would likewise give them an opportunity of investing their savings, when they had savings. They might not have enough to buy a farm, but they might have a portion towards it, which they now find a difficulty in investing. That is shown unfortunately by the great amount of money lost in this neighbourhood by the Balfour group of companies.

51,247. Supposing when a tenant dies he leaves his farm to his eldest son, he would have to charge his property in order to give something to the other children?—No doubt that is a difficulty.

51,248. What is the chief difficulty?—No doubt that is one of the things that tends more than anything else, I should think, to destroy small holdings.

51,249. Do you think the Agricultural Holdings Act requires amendment?—I think it ought to be amended in the sense that where it can be proved that the tenant has improved the letting value of the farm by any improvements, he ought to be compensated for them.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

51,250. Did you hear the evidence of Mr. Owen Price this morning?—I did.

51,251. Do you endorse what he says with regard to the general improvement of a holding, that is, providing that some means could be arrived at by which the value might be assessed?—Yes, I think I do to a certain extent.

Professor Rhŷs.

51,252. Have you any suggestion to make as to how to get over the difficulty about shooting tenants. We have heard a good deal about it, and you notice it in your statement. Do you not think it would work if the tenant were allowed to let the shooting, and be charged a higher rent accordingly by the landlord?—The only difficulty of that is that shooting is more valuable when it is let over a considerable area than over a confined area. For instance, the shooting would be more valuable per acre over an estate of, say, 2,000 acres than over an estate of 100 acres.

51,253. You mean that on a large estate the shooting is let perhaps to one man?—Yes, perhaps to one man.

51,254. Still, it is a considerable source of irritation?—I do not know of one at the present moment, but I believe difficulties often do arise from that source. I think, as a rule, when the shooting is kept in the hands of the landlord, unless he is very foolish, no difficulty arises as to game, but when it is let to a third party there are difficulties which arise.

51,255. I quite agree as to the tenants being shrewd, but there seems a reluctance to see that anything is done in writing on their part, or to give a notice at the proper time for the improvements and so on?—I think that reluctance is dying out. I think the cause of that very much is that until recently a great many of them were not well educated, and they hardly knew the effect of what they were signing, which has naturally made them careful.

51,256. You agree with Mr. Price that things are a good deal better in that respect?—Undoubtedly. Now we find no difficulty in getting them to sign agreements for letting.

51,257. Perhaps when they were more ignorant they were afraid of signing anything?—Yes.

51,258. You touched upon the question of light railways. Do you mind saying where you think light railways would answer in this county?—I have not gone into that question, but I think a good many places now far from railways would be very much improved if there were some means of communication.

The witness withdrew.

Major E. Lister recalled and further examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

See 36,123–36,150.

51,259. You are the agent to the Duke of Beaufort, and I understand you desire to rebut the evidence of one Mr. Pugh, given in Monmouthshire, at Chepstow?—Yes.

51,260. I understand that you, Major Lister, gave notice of your desire to give this evidence at Crickhowell yesterday, and a notice was also given to Mr. Pugh that his evidence was to be rebutted there. He was not present, neither were you. I think that ought to be stated, because we take your evidence to-day instead of yesterday, and Mr. Pugh is not here to-day?—It would have suited me much better to have come yesterday. There was a mistake in the telegram I received, and I did not get it in time to get to Crickhowell.

Assistant Secretary.

Mr. Pugh states in a letter that he regretted he was unable to attend the sitting of the Commission yesterday. He gives satisfactory reasons for not doing so, but notice has not been given to him that his evidence was to be rebutted here to-day.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,261. What is it you desire to rebut?—Mr. Pugh stated that Mr. Verrinder, that is the late agent, and the head woodward, told the tenants that they would have to give up their places if they did not vote for his candidates for the school board election. I have brought the head woodward in question here to-day, and he will rebut that.

The other statement with regard to the head woodward which he will rebut is this, Mr. Pugh states that Henry Williams said they had marked him after the 1885 election, and that Henry Williams had considerable influence over Mr. Verrinder. Henry Williams will rebut that.

See 36,114, near end.

Then I rebut something he said about cot rents. Mr. Pugh says in his evidence that there are a great number of cot-rent places in our district. "These places were taken in genera" tions back off the common and the lord of the " manor claimed an acknowledgment."

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

51,262. Do you rebut that?—Yes, he says:
" which acknowledgment seems to have been " generally 1*s.* a year, but as time went on the " poor people and their children and descendants
" or whoever got the places, were made to pay
" more, until in some cases the full value was " reached or the owners driven from their homes
" the houses being in some cases pulled down,
" and the land let with another farm, or planted
" with larch. Here are two cases of cot rent
" being risen. Ann Jones, a widow of 75 years
" of age, who lives in the parish of Trelleck, and " whose father paid one shilling a year, now has
" to pay 2*l.* 5*s.*, and Mrs. Williams, Penarth
" Mill, also a widow, who has to have relief,
" and whose ancestors paid a shilling a year, is
" now charged 2*l.*

With regard to Ann Jones, I say Ann Jones was an expired leasehold, not a cot rent, at 3*s.* a year. At the expiration of the lease the premises should have been given up in a tenantable state of repair, but in this case the house was nearly down, and the Duke has at his own expense, re-built the house and re-let the same, with 2 acres 3 roods 8 perches of land at 2*l.* per annum since 1882, and in 1892 the rent was farther increased to 2*l.* 4*s.* to include tithe 51,263. Is the rent 2*l.* 4*s.* and not 2*l.* 5*s.*?—2*l.* 4*s.* He said 2*l.* 5*s.*

Professor Rhŷs.

51,264. Is that to Ann Jones the same tenant?—The same tenant.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,265. The increased rent is in respect of new buildings?—The house was rebuilt and this extra land was let with it, and of course after the Tithe Act it was added on to the rent book, and it brought it from 2*l.* to 2*l.* 4*s.*

Mrs. Elizabeth Williams near Penarth Mill, is a similar case, and was never a cot rent. That is all I have to rebut. The woodward will tell you the statement with respect to himself and Mr. Verrinder is not true.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Henry Williams called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,266. What is it you desire to rebut?—I deny this charge brought against me and the late Mr. Verrinder.

51,267. What was the charge. Mr. Pugh said the name of the official was Lewis Williams, the head woodward?—My name is Henry Williams.

51,268. Was there a man named Lewis Williams?—Yes, there was a Lewis Williams, but I am Henry Williams, the head woodward there then.

51,269. You are the head woodward, but your name is Henry Williams?—Yes.

51,270. There was a head woodward named Lewis Williams?—There was a man named Lewis Williams, but not the head woodward.

51,271. I see he corrected that in his evidence afterwards. Were you about with Mr. Verrinder who was then the agent?—I was. See 36,123 36,150.

51,272. Did you hear words to the effect that Mr. Pugh stated that Mr. Verrinder and the woodward told tenants they would have to give up their places if they did not vote for his candidates for the school board election?—I never heard the words spoken, they were not spoken there when I was with Mr. Verrinder.

51 273. You deny that you ever told agents that they would have to give up their places if they did not vote for Mr. Verrinder's candidates for the school board election?—I do not know when.

51,274. Were you with Mr. Verrinder on the day mentioned?—I was in his presence all the time.

51,275. You deny that either you or Mr. Verrinder said anything of the kind?—I do.

51,276. And when you were in his presence did he use any words such as are alleged to have been used?—Not at all.

51,277. Did Mr. Verrinder ask for their vote and interest on behalf of the candidates?—That is it.

51,278. Was that all?—That was all; nothing else.

51,279. If Mr. Pugh stated that Henry Williams, that is you, said that they had marked him after the 1885 election, and that Henry Williams had considerable influence over Mr. Verrinder, would that be true?—I should deny that.

51,280. Do you deny that you had any influence with Mr. Verrinder?—I do.

51,281. Mr. Verrinder is dead?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,282. You do not deny this statement, that the agent went round calling on the tenants?—No.

Sir John Llewellyn.

51,283. This is a question handed in by Mr Lee: "Do you ever canvass for votes for the "friends of the Duke"?—Yes.

51,284. Mr. Vincent asks: "So far from "having any influence over Mr. Verrinder, "was not the fact the other way?—The other way.

51,285. He had influence over you?—Yes. I deny the charge entirely.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Samuel Williams called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,286. Do you reside at Talybont?—Yes.

51,287. Were you the occupant of Llwyn-bedw, Aber?—Yes.

51,288. Who did you take the farm from?—From Mr. Edwards.

51,289. When was that?—In the year 1882.

51,290. The landlord's brother had been occupying the farm before, had he?—Yes, for 17 years.

51,291. Why did he give up the farm?—The reason he told me was that he could not pay for it.

51,292. To his brother?—Yes.

51,293. Then you took it in 1882?—Yes.

51,294. Did you take the stock?—Yes.

51,295. How was that arranged?—By a valuation.

51,296. Where was the tenant at that time?—Living in the house.

51,297. Did you make any arrangement with him as to when you should go into the house?—He was living in the house before, and he came down to my place and offered me the farm several times before I was willing to take it. I did not offer to take it. He was leaving because he could not make it pay. He wanted me to take the stock on a valuation between him and me. We did. He would not let the farm to me. I was obliged to go to his brother, the owner of the farm, to take it. I did. The first thing I told his brother was this. His brother wanted to live in the house for a certain time, until he got a place elsewhere, and he asked me if I wanted the house. I said I did not want it for a time, but I could not do with a farm without a house. He said, "I have no "place to go to at present, and if you could "shift for six or 12 months I shall try for a

"place to go to." "Well," I said, "I will "make shift." He kept on living in the house all the time. I expected he would arrange with me what he was going to pay for the house during this time, but he would not say anything. I did not like to be very harsh upon him, so we went on like that for 2½ years. I asked him before that two or three times to have a clear understanding about the house, and what he was going to pay for it. He would not give me any answer. Then I put the question straight to him, "I must have a "clear understanding. What are you going to "pay me for the house? I cannot afford to "leave the house and pay for a house for the "workmen elsewhere. Then he told me, "I "did expect to have the house for nothing." I said, "Well, why did you not tell me at the "time? Now, the question is this, you could "not make the farm pay, having the house and "all privileges, and yet you expect me to pay "for a house for my workman, and he is not at "home to look after anything at all. How "can you expect me to pay for a house for "you?"

51,298. Were you paying the same rent at that time as he paid with the house?—The same rent.

51,299. In addition to that you had to provide a cottage for your man elsewhere?—Yes.

51,300. How far away was that cottage?—Near half a mile.

51,301. Where were you living?—I was living down in Talybont. I did not live in the farm.

51,302. Did you go into the house after all?—No, he would not give it up.

51,303. You put down in the précis that you lived down in the house for 2½ years?—He lived there.

51,304. How long did he live in the house after you had taken the farm?—Two-and-a-half years before we had a clear understanding about the payment of the rent. Then I sent two parties to value the house, Mr. Price the auctioneer, of Brecon, was one, and another party from Brecon along with him.

51,305. You sued him for the rent of the house?—Yes, after I had had the house valued.

51,306. What was the amount for which you sued him?—He would not pay without suing him to the county court.

51,307. What was the valuation?—12*l.* per annum.

51,308. The total claim would be 30*l.*?—Yes. When we came to the court the judge reduced the value of the house from 12*l.* to 10*l.*

51,309. Did he give you judgment for 2½ times 10*l.*, namely, 25*l.* instead of 30*l.*?—Yes.

51,310. What happened upon that?—Well, he had to pay.

51,311. Anything else?—He lived in the house afterwards; he would not come out of the house at all. In another 12 months I had to sue him again to the county court, but we had no judgment that time, he paid in.

51,312. What action did the landlord take?—Well, he did not do anything at all, only this. When I took the farm I paid 5*l.* for the yard manure on the farm, and it was for two years on the yard, I believe, part of it at any rate. I paid his brother 5*l.* for it. I did expect that the landlord would allow me 5*l.* when I was leaving the farm. Well, he gave me notice afterwards.

51,313. When did he give you notice? How soon after the action?—After the second action I had the notice.

51,314. How soon after that?—About 12 months.

51,315. How long would that be after you first took the farm. Would it be 3½ years?—No, five years altogether.

51,316. The statement here is that you won your case, that the county court judge took 2*l.* off the rent, and, 12 months after, the landlord gave you notice to quit. That is 12 months after the second action?—Yes.

51,317. Have you got that notice to quit?—I have not got it here.

51,318. Does it state any reason?—No.

51,319. Have you any other statement to make?—Only about the yard manure. I gave his brother 5*l.* for the yard manure which was on the yard when I took it. When I was paying the last half year's rent I kept 5*l.* back, and thought the landlord would allow me the same as I gave, because I left just the same quantity of manure on the yard as I had when I took it, but he threatened to sue me to the court for the 5*l.*, and rather than have any further dispute I paid it.

51,320. Have you anything else to say?—About the game. I thought I had been at a great loss in different places, not in that place, because there is no game on that place,—but in other places I have suffered great loss owing to the ground game and the winged game. My wish is that this game law ought to be abolished altogether. It would spare all the unpleasantnesses and disputes. I have been to the court here, and obliged to pay a lot of expenses to protect myself.

51,321. What is the law you wish to have abolished?—Well, the winged game law.

51,322. Do you know what the law is?—Well, not altogether.

51,323. The law, I believe, is that in the absence of any agreement the winged game belongs to the sitting tenant, the occupier?—Yes, but it is not often we can get that.

51,324. You think tenants should be protected in the agreement?—Well, I think it would save a lot of unpleasantness and disputes.

51,325. Do you know the Ground Game Act?—Partly.

51,326. Was that in operation when you were a tenant?—No, not the first time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,327. Would you be satisfied if you had a concurrent right with the landlord to shoot the winged game?—Well, in the face of that there is this. No doubt the law is protecting the tenants as it is at present, with regard to the ground game, but it only causes unpleasantness all through. I believe there should be no agreement made about it at all.

51,328. No game laws at all?—No agreement at all.

51,329. If I understand, what you want is perfect liberty to shoot everything that comes in your way?—Shoot what is on the farm after I take it.

51,330. Supposing you had the liberty of shooting the winged game and also the ground game, you would be troubled to a certain extent by poachers, would you not, so that you would suffer in that way?—It would be my duty to look after that.

51,331. You think you could manage the poachers right enough if you had the right?—It is my duty to do with them as I can.

51,332. Did your landlord tell you that he was giving you notice in consequence of your suing his brother for the rent of that house?—He did not tell me so, but I put it down that it was for that.

51,333. What is the custom of the country with regard to manure?—I do not know exactly, but I paid for the manure then.

51,334. Is it customary for the incoming tenant to pay the outgoing tenant for the manure which remains on the farm?—I cannot tell you exactly.

51,335. If that is the case, you could recover payment for the manure you left on the farm?—Well, I thought I could.

51,336. Well, you could?—When he threatened to sue me to the court for it, I thought I would finish it off at once, and I would not have anything more to do with it. I believed I could not charge him for it. I was wrong in paying for the first—that is my belief of it now.

51,337. I suppose you went away against your will. You did not care about leaving the farm?—Well, after I had brought the farm to a certain condition—and I did improve the farm very much to the satisfaction of all the neighbours—it was not very pleasant for me to leave it.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

51,338. Have you any remedy to suggest with respect to that state of things?—I believe there ought to be a land court to do justice between party and party. The weakest party has generally to suffer the most loss.

51,339. You think a tenant should be protected from being turned out of a farm without some satisfactory reason?—Yes, I do.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Watkins called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,340. Where do you reside?—Llwynynn.

Professor Rhŷs.

51,341. What do you wish to say?—The rents are too high in our district generally. I refer to the estate of Mr. Watkin Lloyd Downes chiefly. The lands which were 40*l.* rent are now 60*l.* and 65*l.*, and I do not consider that they are worth more now than they were before.

51,342. When did they raise these rents?—About 20 years ago. The tenants had improved them and had drained them themselves, and they had taken away hedges and put in new hedges, and straightened the fences. The tenant of Dworallt has spent all the value of his stock to pay for the land, and now he is a pauper in our parish.

51,343. Did he sell his stock in order to pay this money?—There was an auction about two years ago, and he had only about 12*l.* over. When the stock was pretty high it was worth about 700*l.*

51,344. Have you anything more to say?—I have nothing more to say about that. I have another case. Too many lands are rented together consolidated. There are two and three, four and five farms put together.

See 53,957. 51,345. Where is this?—In the parish of Llywel near Trecastle; the same in the parish of Cray, just the same as with us. There has been a rise in the rents there on the estate of Tanygraig of from 35*l.* to 55*l.*

51,346. When was that?—I cannot say exactly; about 15 years ago; and I do not consider that they are worth more now than they were then.

51,347. Did the tenants who gave the money think they were worth more, do you think?—Oh, no, but there was one of them who was lately borrowing 50*l.* to pay the rent.

51,348. At that time they thought it was worth the money?—No, I do not think so, but they thought probably that better times would come, and on that supposition they borrowed money and spent everything. I have not much more to say.

51,349. Do you speak for others besides yourself?—Yes, but the same thing has been done with me pretty nearly.

51,350. Have you been authorised to speak for other people?—Yes, I have been appointed by a committee.

51,351. Which committee?—The committee of farmers at Trecastle. The small agents about this country take revenge on the farmers. They will not give them anything, and they will not allow them any small repairs and other things required on the land.

51,352. What do they take revenge for?—Refusing to grant things that they might otherwise do.

51,353. What do you mean by "revenge"?—It is the language of the Bible.

51,354. I do not see that. Supposing you do not agree with a shopkeeper, and he asks more than you want to give, you would not call that revenge?—Doing anything contrary to their wishes.

51,355. What kind of things?—Several things.

51,356. Name some things?—If the agent refuses to grant a repair which the landlord would allow, that I consider revenge.

51,357. I do not think you appreciate your meaning of the word "revenge." Do you mean that they act unfairly towards you?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,358. Are you not on very good terms with your agent?—There is no agent at present.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,359. Have you retired?—No, I have bought the farm that I hold.

51,360. Why were you appointed to appear on behalf of this committee to give evidence?—I do not know.

51,361. Was it because you were in an independent position, and no one could revenge on you, as you say?—It is possible that that was a reason, but I cannot say.

51,362. Do you think that there is any fear among the tenant farmers of appearing here to give evidence?—Yes, many of them fear it greatly.

51,363. How many were present at the meeting at which you were appointed to represent them?—There might be 15 or 20—I cannot say exactly—more or less.

51,364. Has Mr. Watkin Lloyd Downes made any abatements?—2*s.* in the £ the last two years, so far as I know.

51,365. Were the tenants satisfied with that?—No, it did not satisfy them, but they preferred that to nothing.

51,366. Do the tenants complain that rents, having been raised on good times, they do not come down on bad times?—Yes, of course. There is an instance of one of them having become a pauper.

51,367. Has the owner of this Tanycreig estate made any abatements?—I have not heard.

51,368. Is he a large landowner or a small one?—A large landowner.

51,369. Who are generally the best landlords, the large ones or the small ones?—The large landowners are by far the best as a rule.

51,370. Have you any remedy to suggest to protect the tenants of small landowners from paying high rents?—Well, I should like to see from five to seven farmers in every parish chosen who understood the value of the land, to value the land.

51,371. And to adjust rents?—Yes, to fix on what would be fair between the tenant and the landlord. I mention that because I consider that the men who live in the parish understand the value of the land better than strangers. I consider that they could do justice to the valuation.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,372. When you bought Llwynynn did you borrow any money wherewith to pay for it? Do not answer the question unless you like?—No, I had not enough; I had a good deal. I had enough with the help from a cousin of mine.

51,373. What rate of interest would you have to pay?—3 per cent

51,374. You got it cheaper because you were a cousin, I suppose?—I cannot say, I am sure. Perhaps it was that he saw it was a safe investment.

51,375. You would not be much benefited by a Government loan?—No.

51,376. I suppose you did not get any abatement in your rent?—No.

51,377. This is a question put in by Mr. Lee: "Do you know of any farmers who were afraid "to come forward to give evidence before the "Commission?"—It is a very difficult matter. It is difficult to say any one personally, but we gather that a good many are in that state of mind.

51,378. You cannot name any?—I name nobody; I prefer not to do so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Powell called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,379. What are you?—An auctioneer and farmer.

51,380. Where do you reside?—Cathedine, Bwlch.

51,381. I believe you are a delegate appointed at a meeting?—Yes.

51,382. When was that meeting held?—30th June 1893.

51,383. Was that a meeting of the farmers held at the "Farmer's Arms" in Bwlch?—Yes.

51,384. You were requested to lay some evidence before the Commission?—Yes.

51,385. As to oppressive grievances complained of in that neighbourhood. Will you say what they are?—First, that there should be an equalisation of rents, with a permanent reduction of 30 per cent. all round to meet the depression that farmers have had to contend with in consequence of the low prices of stock, corn, and so on, realised during the last years, and the advanced wages and taxes which must be met.

51,386. Is that not rather a contradiction in terms, equalisation of rents and then a permanent reduction of rent all round?—An equalisation of rents first we meant.

51,387. First get them equalised?—Yes.

51,388. And afterwards a peremptory reduction of 30 per cent.?—Yes, I believe that was the meaning of the meeting, also that there should be an impartial land court appointed to hear all grievances which might accrue hereafter on either side, with power of compensating for all unexhausted improvements. The game question should be abolished entirely. Through the game and game keepers there are continually serious grievances and unpleasantness occurring between landlords, game preservers, and tenants.

51,389. Is there anything else you wish to say?—That is all I have to say.

Professor Rhŷs.

51,390. You said equalisation of rents. Do you think that some of the farmers are paying too little in the district?—I know the rents are not equal.

51,391. Where does the shoe pinch? Is it that some are paying too little?—Some have cheaper farms than others at any rate.

51,392. Do you want to raise them?—Well, equalise them in some way, I suppose.

51,393. You would bring some down and put some up?—Very likely.

51,394. One half of that is rather a dangerous suggestion for you to make, is it not?—I do not know; that was the opinion of the meeting.

51,395. You feel the game difficulty to be a considerable one in your district?—Oh, a torment.

51,396. How do you propose to get rid of it altogether?—To abolish it, not to allow anyone to preserve game unless they would enclose their covers for it.

51,397. Do they not have enclosures now? Do they not wire off the warrens and so on?—Some do.

51,398. What is it you complain of chiefly in the way of game—rabbits?—Rabbits and pheasants principally.

51,399. With regard to rabbits, you have the right to shoot them?—Yes, but the general opinion there is that there is more trouble with that than what it is worth.

51,400. So that they do not venture to kill them?—They do kill them, but they cannot keep them down by doing so.

51,401. Then you suffer from pheasants?—Yes.

51,402. Do you apply for compensation for the damage done?—I do not.

51,403. Do the tenants of your district do so?—Some of them do, and I know they have been compensated.

51,404. Even that you think does not do away with the difficulty?—No, I do not. Through the game there is a great deal of unpleasantness between farmers and gamekeepers, and landlords and tenants.

Mr Richard Jones.

51,405. How would you constitute the land court?—I would not like to suggest that, but I expect that you would suggest which way it should be constituted.

51,406. I was thinking you might help us a bit?—I should think the Government must do it; it would come to that.

51,407. You have no suggestion to make yourself?—No.

51,408. What do you say should be the functions of the court?—Power to fix rents and consider the compensation for all unexhausted improvements.

51,409. Anything else?—Yes, I have a little bill here that was put in my hands to bring before you gentlemen, if you will kindly look at it; that is just to prove to you the grievance that we have in respect of the keepers.

£5 Reward.

"Whereas, some evil-disposed Person or Persons have

Poisoned

2 valuable sheep-dogs, the property of Mr. Evan Griffiths, Noyadd, in the parish of Llangasty, Talyllyn:

"Any person who will give such information as will lead to the detection, conviction, and punishment of the offender or offenders, will receive the above Reward.

Evan Griffiths."

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

51,410. In what way is that a grievance against gamekeepers?—Well, it is a general occurrence in the neighbourhood.

51,411. How do you know it is the gamekeepers?—Well, it has been proved against some of them it is so. One has been convicted.

51,412. In this case?—No, not in that case, but the reward is offered now. That is within two miles from where I live.

51,413. You jump to the conclusion that it is a gamekeeper who has done this?—Well, it is the opinion of the neighbourhood.

51,414. There have been convictions?—Yes.

51,415. And some of the game keepers have been convicted?—Yes.

51,416. How many?—I know of one case particularly; that was fought here some time ago.

51,417. About how long ago?—It would be in the month of October, if I remember right.

51,418. Is he a gamekeeper now?—He is a gamekeeper now.

51,419. On what estate is that?—On the Cathedine estate.

51,420. Do you contend at present that farmers are paying impossible rents—rents that cannot be made out of the farm?—I think so. I gave up a farm myself last year because I could not make my money out of it.

51,421. Yet you bear a good character as a tenant farmer in the neighbourhood?—Well, I do not know. I occupy under the same people. I have been a tenant ever since I have been in business.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,422. Are you a landowner yourself?—Yes, I have a little estate. I live in my own place and I rent as well to it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,423. Do you think that landlords really realise the position of things?—Yes, on some occasions at any rate.

51,424. They think they do their duty when they give about 10 or 15 per cent.—that is the general allowance—whereas you say they should make a permanent reduction of 30 per cent.?—Yes, according to this meeting.

51,425. Is the competition for farms very keen?—Yes.

51,426. Always a number of applicants?—Plenty.

51,427. Of course, that is a means of keeping up the rents?—Yes.

51,428. Does anyone apply for farms except bonâ fide farmers. Do you find any people from the towns who have a liking to come out into the country, applying?—No, not for some years. Years ago, when farming was going well, there were plenty of townspeople coming out.

51,429. That would send rents up to a fictitious value?—I have no doubt it did in many cases.

51,430. Your contention is this, that the rents should come down?—Yes, 30 per cent.; that was the opinion of the meeting.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,431. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Can you give the name of any gamekeeper "convicted for poisoning dogs in the petty "sessional division in which you reside?"—No, I could not, but I could give the name of the gamekeeper who has been convicted for shooting dogs. I should say in the last dozen years there have been 40 or 50 dogs killed in this neighbourhood.

51,432. You do not know by whom?—Well, it cannot be proved, of course. There is no one else likely to do it besides the keepers

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Griffith George called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,433. Where do you reside?—Gellygarn.

51,434. What is it you have to say?—The rents are much too high in the parish of Uchellawer and Gwenwddog, Pencae, and other farms.

51,435. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

51,436. On what estate?—David Davies, Gellygarn.

51,437. Is he a large landowner?—No, only that farm. The next point I wish to speak of is in reference to improvements without compensation. Castell Du and Pantmadog are the farms I refer to as instances of improvements without compensation. The next thing is, very poor houses frequently. I have nothing else to say.

51,438. Are you better off as a tenant farmer or as a freeholder?—I am not a freeholder.

51,439. Which do you think you would be better off as?—I should prefer to be on my own land very much.

51,440. Then you would have to do your own repairs?—Yes, that would be so, but I should not be asked to pay rent.

51,441. But you would have to pay interest on the purchase money?—Well, those that have no interest to pay are far better off. They are better off even if they have to pay interest and have to do their repairs; they know who it is for, they know it is for themselves.

51,442. What is the principal thing you want to say?—I should like to refer to Gwenwddog in relation to improvements without compensation. I remember it was rented at 54*l.*, now it is 75*l.* Pencae, I remember some years ago, at 16*l.*—about 15 or 16 years ago—and it is now 30*l.*

51,443. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, I do; but it is not the value of this paper which I hold in my hand.

51,444. Why?—The landlords make the Act of no effect by their agreements.

51,445. Do you know the clause by which they cannot contract out of it?—The law is not compulsory. I do not believe it is. The landlords put into the agreement that the Agricultural Holdings Act does not apply.

51,446. Is that in force since the Act of 1883?—I have not gone into it so minutely as that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,447. When were the rents advanced on the three places you mentioned?—Gwenwddog about 30 years ago, and Pencae about 15 or 16 years ago.

51,448. Was that raised from 16*l.* to 30*l.*?—Yes.

51,449. Were there any new buildings erected on Pencae to account for that large advance?—They repaired the dwelling-house to some small extent only—thatched it and plastered it.

51,450. They advanced the rent for that?—Yes.

51,451. Who is the landowner?—Mrs. Powell, of Pantyscallog.

51,452. Does she hold any other farms?—She holds some 15 or 20 farms.

51,453. Does she employ an agent?—No, I do not think she does.

51,454. Did the tenant complain of the advance in the rent to 30*l.*?—Yes, he complained of it very much.

51,455. Why did not he leave the place?—Well, it is so difficult to get any place to go to. The landlords act just as if they were eager to raise the rents one above the other.

51,456. There is a sort of rivalry between the landlords to raise the rents, you mean?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,457. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Gwynne Holford: "Do you rent land "under more than one landowner"?—Yes.

51,458. "Have you any complaint against the "owner of Aberhirwen"?—Mr. Gwynne Holford is a very good master, but his rents are rather high.

51,459. "What reduction or allowance have "you received the last year"?—Fifteen per cent. He is a capital master, but his rent is very high.

51,460. Then there are two questions by Mr. Vincent: "You say the landlords contract out "of the Act of 1883. Do you produce any "agreement showing this"?—Yes.

51,461. Do you produce it?—No, I do not like to show it. My father bought Castelldu, and he made great improvements on it before he bought it, and he had to pay dearly for those improvements.

51,462. He had to buy his own improvements?—Yes. He had made improvements to the value of 150*l.* or 200*l.*, and he had to pay dearly for them. My father went down to the owner at Newport. He had hauled towards the buildings. He had done the haulage for the dwelling-house, and had to send 25 miles for much of the materials. He sent four gambos of flags for the floor of the house to Bwlch, and then about 15 miles to Glandawe to fetch the slates, and then four carts to Usk about seven miles, 27 journeys. Then to Penbryn about eight miles to fetch timber that had been sold. My father went down to Newport to the landowner, when he heard that the land was on sale, because he had done so much in the way of improvements, and he was not willing to lose the benefit of these improvements; he wished to buy the place, but he declined to name any price, and said that he was going to sell it by auction, and it was sold by auction. After the sale began it was announced that the purchaser was to pay the auctioneer five guineas, and another five guineas had to be paid to the solicitor for coming down from Gloucester. He was then to pay for the land. Now, it was one of the conditions that if my father was not ready to pay for the land he was to pay 5 per cent. interest; and if the vendor had not got the deeds ready, he was also to pay

5 per cent. The landowner was not ready with his title deeds, and my father was obliged to pay the interest. My father was ready with the money.

51,463. You mean to say that because the landlord was not ready with his title deeds, your father had to pay his 5 per cent.?—8*l.* more than the rent. They demanded the interest on the money, and that came to 8*l.*

51,464. Have you anything else to say?—There is another thing my father had to do. He had to pay six guineas for going up to Gloucester to procure the deeds.

51,465. Did you send in any statement to the secretary?—No, I did not. The tenant of Pantmadog is here ready to give his evidence.

51,466. The rule is that we should have the evidence seven days before. We cannot put off those who have sent in their evidence for those who have not?—Very well.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Phillips called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,467. Do you live at Trefecca, Talgarth?—Yes.

51,468. Are you a labourer?—Yes.

51,469. Have you had connexion with the land for a long time?—Yes.

51,470. For how long?—I have always had something to do with land from the cradle up.

51,471. Over 50 years?—Yes.

51,472. You wish to draw attention to the quantity of waste land in the parish of Talgarth?—Yes, and the wants of the labourers.

51,473. How much waste is there?—Several hundreds of acres, I have no doubt.

51,474. Mountain land?—No.

51,475. Land capable of cultivation?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

I beg your permission to lay before you as clearly as I can the position and wants of the labourer and his attitude in relation to the land question. The agricultural labourer is often charged with being indifferent to life on the land; to disprove this charge, and to show that he is driven away far more often owing to non-employment, I say the agricultural labourer has very often to break up his home against his will and to travel to strange places to seek employment, and part with his wife and family, and very often has to suffer great hardships. I should like to give one instance out of many of the same nature that have taken place, not in time of agricultural depression, but when the farmers could make their payments with little difficulty. There was in the same neighbourhood as myself a young married couple; the husband could not get employment in agricultural work; he was compelled to leave and went to the coal district. His wife refused to accompany him, and the separation so affected her that she died of a broken heart. The young husband also, in consequence of being obliged to work under unhealthy and unaccustomed conditions, very soon died and left three children. I have personally known scores of others who have also been compelled to leave the country for the coal districts; they were strong and healthy before the change, but are now dead. I have no hesitation in saying that most of them would have worked hard and saved the money necessary to purchase or rent a small quantity of land if it was possible to obtain any. In proof of the thrifty character of labourers generally I may say that every man of this class in the village where I live had saved money which they would have invested in land, but the greatest part of it is lost by the Liberator disaster. It is my opinion that many of those who now squander their earnings would save it all up if there were any inducement in the shape of land offered them. A journeyman in any trade has the prospect of reaching by industry and prudence to the rank of master tradesmen, but the chance is denied the agricultural labourers. It would be a very great blessing if some way could be devised that those who are anxious to remain on the land should obtain a small quantity, that they may be able to make their living out of the land. If it were as easy as it is now difficult to obtain land a great many industrious men would be directly benefited, and the producing power of the land increased. It would be possible for the inhabitants to grow their own food and not to be dependent on foreign countries for our supplies. I do not think the nation gets a fifth part of the benefit it should from the land, there are hundreds of acres of neglected land in the parish where I live. It is notorious that the land at present is not well and carefully cultivated; landlords are far more ready to increase the size of farms than to divide them and meet the wants of small farmers and labourers. In many cases the farms are too large for the capital of the tenant, the result is a great quantity of land going waste. With your leave, gentlemen, I will endeavour to show the difference in large farms versus small farms. I will take the largest in the neighbourhood, over 300 acres, rented very cheap; the result is bad farming. There is no doubt on this farm there is enough of waste land; if it were possible to collect it together and cultivate it it would support half a dozen families. The hedges are allowed to encroach on the fields to the extent of from 6 to 10 yards, the briars and brushwood are allowed to grow over the land. In contrast to this I may mention a small holding, a little over 26 acres, I think, rented at more than double the price per acre of the large farm; the result is the hedges are kept within proper limits, and every foot cultivated, but it is in a less favourable situation. Again, I will point out a smaller holding still occupied by a labourer, about 11 acres; the produce last year was not far short of 100*l.* in value. I took particular notice of the treatment of two adjoining fields on different farms, the one was well cultivated, the other was neglected, the value of the cultivated field was fully 10 times the value of the neglected field. I myself have petitioned the Brecknockshire County Council for a small holding, and was prepared to buy or rent a small field, but I was unsuccessful. I was informed that the council had no compulsory powers to take land, therefore the Bill is of no value to the industrious labourer. As far as I understand the allotment clauses in the Parish Councils Bill it is very little better as there is too much machinery to be put in motion. In my opinion the remedy to be applied is a measure to enable those who are anxious to improve their position by honest labour to obtain suitable land for this purpose readily. I would earnestly pray the Commissioners to advise Her Majesty's Government to this effect. I hope it will be clear to you that by a wise division of the land and a fair treatment of those who are willing to labour upon it, the condition of the industrious class will be one of greatly increased comfort; and that the present Commission should be instrumental in bringing this to pass speedily is the earnest prayer, my Lords and gentlemen, of your respectful servant, John Phillips.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,476. I have one question handed in by Mr. Lee: "Have you heard of any demand for "allotments in your district?"—Yes.

51,477. I think allotments are being made at Builth?—I do not know, I am sure.

51,478. It is too far for you to speak of, I suppose; you are at Talgarth?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,479. Do you find a disinclination among labourers to go to South Wales, that is provided they can get decent employment on the farms?—Yes, I do.

51,480. You think that the men would rather stay on the farms?—Yes, being accustomed to farm work.

51,481. Do you find that they are very strongly attached to their homes?—Yes. I am myself living on the spot where I was born.

Professor Rhŷs.

51,482. Do you think that they would stay on if they could get a house and garden or a small plot of ground?—Yes, I think they would if they could get sufficient ground to make a living by it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,483. What amount of ground would you suggest—sufficient to keep a cow?—Yes, or a little more.

51,484. Sufficient to keep two cows?—Yes, I should like something about 10 acres that I could make my living by.

51,485. Would you want to cultivate some of the land that you had?—Yes, part of it.

51,486. How would you cultivate it?—Grow some turnips and mangolds, something of that kind—potatoes.

51,487. Do you think it would answer your purpose to pay for the employment of a horse on the land?—Yes, by what I have seen others making out of a small quantity of land.

51,488. Do you think that really labourers after working a day on the farm care to go and work on their allotments?—There are no labourers employed in the district where I live—not on farms.

51,489. What are you then?—I am a labourer, but I am not working on a farm. I am working as a kind of general labourer, as we call it, doing all manner of work. I am seldom employed by a farmer.

51,490. Do you find this desire for obtaining a little land is keener among labourers who are not working on the farms?—Yes, I think it is because they have a little more time.

51,491. And it is more of a relaxation to them, of course?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. S. MILLER called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

51,492. You live at Forest Lodge, Brecon, and are a county councillor?—Yes.

51,493. You farm several thousand acres?—Yes.

51,494. You are a farmer by birth?—Yes, I was brought up to farming.

51,495. You are also an auctioneer and an agent for some estates in Brecknockshire?—I am.

51,496. Do you think that language, creed, or politics, make any difference between landlord and tenant?—No, not in general.

51,497. I think you know of some few exceptions, do you not?—I do not know of definite exceptions, but there are a few cases in which the understanding has not been perhaps quite as perfect as it would have been otherwise.

51,498. What is the ordinary tenancy—leases or yearly agreements?—Year to year.

51,499. What is your opinion of a lease?—I think it is a very great uncertainty, and in the present state of things I think it simply amounts to gambling.

51,500. Under what circumstances do you consider it so?—Particularly under the fluctuations of prices which have occurred, which I attribute very largely to the present currency laws.

51,501. Do you think that tenancy in Wales is reasonably secure?—I do. I think that there are quite as few changes of tenancy here as there are where I was brought up, namely, in Scotland, where they are nearly all leases.

51,502. So that the system of leases in Scotland would not give any greater security of tenure than the Welsh system of tenure?—No, taking them on the average I do not think they give greater security.

51,503. Would you state what your objections to legislation would be if that legislation proposed to give fixity of tenure?—My principal objection to fixity of tenure is one of principle. I believe that the party who is best able to use the land is the party who ought to have it—that the man who is able to produce most from the land is the man who ought to have it so far as the good of the nation is concerned, and the only market test and the practical test is, the man who can pay most for it is the man who in 9 cases out of 10 will produce most from it. I further object to fixity of tenure upon this principle, that I do not see why the strong should be protected against the weak, and small holdings are the steps in the ladder by which labourers and others who are industrious and thrifty rise into better positions, and I think those who can use land best are those who ought to have it, and they are those who are able to pay the best rents for it, and it is best alike for the landlord and for the nation.

51,504. What is your opinion about the penalising clauses in the agreements?—There are some agreements which I have seen in which I think the penalising clauses are somewhat excessive. There have been cases of compensation raised where there has been no desire perhaps on the part of the tenant really to enlarge the agreement, and claims have been brought against them in an inordinate way.

With regard to re-entry, there is one question I would like to raise before the Commission. In most leases there is a clause where if the tenant becomes insolvent or bankrupt the landlord has power of re-entry. That I quite agree with, but we had a case in point, and that is what has brought the thing into my mind very strikingly. We had a case in point this year in which the tenant went bankrupt, and the agreement was such that the tenant was to consume the crop on the premises. The landlord stepped in and took possession. And then the creditors, or those who were acting for them, wanted to sell the stock. The landlord said, "No. I am "in possession. You are trespassers. You "must consume the crops there upon the land, "and we will not allow you to sell it." The landlord fortunately was reasonable in the end, and he saw the circumstances, and a fair settlement was arranged. But such a clause as that, if it can be enforced, is unjust alike to the creditors and to the public.

51,505. But though it was unjust it was not enforced in the case you name?—No. But the only point to my mind was that if it was insisted upon it could have been enforced.

51,506. What is your opinion about a land court?—I think that a land court would be satisfactory to neither landlord nor tenant. I believe that no one can say definitely what he is able to pay or likely to pay but the tenant himself, and if a third party comes in between them, and says the land is worth so much, if he thinks it is not worth so much he would naturally say, "I cannot give it," and leave. I believe that a land court would complicate very much the present circumstances, and would make the land very much less productive by withdrawing capital from the land, instead of adding to it.

51,507. Do you think it would have a prejudicial effect on the landlord's interest in his estate or not?—I think it would nearly do away with his interest in the estate.

51,508. What effect would it have on rents?—I think rents in all likelihood would be very much as they are, so far as the market value of them is concerned, provided the capital invested was as great, but I think there would be worse farming than at present, and I cannot see how a land court can settle rents at less than they are now if the circumstances are the same, because I consider that the value of a farm is exactly what you can get for it in the open market, and in most cases where a farm is vacant at present within a week or 10 days a dozen farmers are after it.

51,509. Are the buildings on the farms usually done by the landlord or by the tenant?—They are usually done by the landlord.

51,510. Free of interest, or is interest charged?—In nearly all cases the buildings are done free of interest, so far as I am aware.

51,511. Who does the haulage?—Usually the tenant; and I think there is one amendment that ought to be made there perhaps, to the usage as it at present exists. I think there are very few cases of hardship where the landlords live and continue on and are succeeded by heirs, but I believe there are a good many cases of hardship where the estates are sold, or where by some accident the landlord is compelled to hand over his property to someone else, and I think there should be some way of compensating a tenant for the proportion of labour which he has expended which he has not been recouped, because there is no tenant who does haulage but with the expectation that he will reap some benefit for it.

51,512. To the extent of the haulage he has a bonâ fide tenant right?—Exactly. He has a bonâ fide tenant right.

51,513. The amount, I take it, could be very easily arrived at?—I do not think there would be any difficulty about that.

51,514. What is the custom in respect of drainage?—I believe that the custom varies considerably, but the usual custom is 4 per cent. on the outlay, and that is where the landlord does the drainage, and in such cases the tenant does the haulage free. Then in some other cases the landlord finds the pipes, and in other cases which I know of the landlord allows 1*s.* a perch for cutting, the tenant doing the other part, that is, when it is done conjointly.

51,515. What is the custom relating to change of tenancy?—Do you refer to compensation?

51,516. Yes?—So far as the change of tenancy with regard to compensation is concerned, in a considerable number of estates the incoming tenant has to pay to the outgoing tenant what would under the usual custom of the country be allowed, or what might be under the agreement allowed. It is settled between themselves, the landlord not interfering, but in a great many cases it is the landlord who settles with the outgoing tenant, and then the incoming tenant agrees with the landlord.

51,517. You think it is usually settled between the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant?—Yes, usually it is so.

51,518. Do you consider there is any ground for saying that farmers are afraid to come forward and give evidence?—I do not think there is very much definite ground; at the same time I have an impression that there are some farmers who hesitate to come forward more from a sort of inherent fear than from any actual thing that would arise from their coming forward. No doubt there have been certain hardships in the past from actions of this kind, and a considerable number of them think that they might still follow in some indirect way.

51,519. Can you give any opinion generally upon the land system referring specially to compensation for unexhausted improvements?—I think that the present land system is on the whole satisfactory, with this exception, that I do not think in many cases the law secures to the tenant the improvements that he is entitled to under the present Agricultural Holdings Act. I do not think that the inoperativeness of the present Agricultural Holdings Act is due to ignorance of the Act, I believe that it is due to the fact that in nearly every case where the Agricultural Holdings Act has been raised so far and where agreements existed, the landlord's claim has been equal to or perhaps greater than the tenant's claim, consequently he has been put to the expense of carrying out, as it were, the necessary preparation of his claim, and the expenses, and he gets nothing in the end. There are a great many instances to my own knowledge in which that has been the case. If there is a claim, the clauses in the agreement are in most cases such that there would be nothing to get.

51,520. What are the principal amendments to the Agricultural Holdings Act that you would suggest?—It is somewhat difficult so far as I have been able to look into the matter, to formulate a scheme that would be exactly just, but what I would like, if it were possible, would be that a tenant, when he gets notice, should have power to receive every penny that really belongs to him in the farm, so that the two interests should be distinct and clear, the landlord should have his property and the tenant should have his property, if either of them thought that there should be a severance of partnership. As to how that should be best carried out, my own opinion is that the schedule should be very much enlarged, and that the powers of the arbitrator should be very much enlarged, and that less technical forms should be observed, but that when a man leaves his farm he should have power to ask for the improvements that he really thinks he has made, and that there should be a public arbitrator appointed, whose business it should be to assess the values between landlord and tenant in such cases.

Professor Rhŷs.

51,521. You mentioned a public arbitrator?—Yes.

51,522. How would you have him appointed?—He would be under the Board of Agriculture and I think that each man who acts for the county ought to have a thorough knowledge of the soil, and the customs and habits of the county, and that he should be suggested by the County Council—that he should be elected by the Board of Agriculture, but that it should be in the hands of the County Council to recommend such a man as would give general satisfaction.

51,523. His business would be to value?—His business would be to value or to arbitrate when a dispute arose.

51,524. A dispute of what kind, do you mean a dispute as to improvements?—Yes, a dispute as to improvements.

51,525. Would you give him anything else to do?—I do not quite understand.

51,526. I mean would that be his only function?—You might enlarge his function in this way, that where there were, for instance, life estates—life tenants—in which cases I find that there is considerable neglect often on the part of the tenants, where a man has only a life interest in his property, in nine cases out of ten it is nothing like so well cared for as where he is a freeholder—I should say that in such cases as those on his suggestion the life estate landlord should have repairs done.

51,527. I am not sure that I understand you, that if the tenant wanted such and such repairs done, and the owner in his own interest declined, the tenant could appeal to this arbitrator?—He could appeal to this arbitrator, as under the Settled Estates Act. At present when they want improvements they get the sanction of a valuer appointed by the Board of Agriculture.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,528. You heard the evidence of Mr. Owen Price this morning?—I did.

51,529. Do you think it is practicable to assess the improved value of a holding at the termination of a tenancy?—I think it is utterly impossible, unless you have got a very detailed and minute basis as to what it was when the tenant entered, and that I think is one of the greatest difficulties in the whole situation, because words convey very different ideas to different men, a man who has been brought up in a hilly country, and used to rough hill farming, will consider fair repair to be a very different thing from a man who has been brought up in, say, an agricultural country, where hedges have been kept trim, and things kept exactly, and a schedule drawn up by a man who drew it up when the tenant left, would in all probability be a very unjust document.

51,530. Would it not be possible for a public officer or arbitrator such as you suggest, to have also local assistance for the purpose of valuing farms?—You mean for taking schedules—for tabulating the estates.

51,531. Yes, for tabulating the estates?—Certainly, it could be done in that way. The only thing that I should think essentially necessary would be that they should have the same standard of tabulation, so to speak—a tabulation point, and from that standard considering it at par, that the tenant should either pay for depreciation or receive for appreciation in value.

51,532. You have mentioned that when a farm becomes vacant there are a great many applicants for it?—It is so generally.

51,533. Is that conclusive evidence that farming is a profitable occupation?—I do not think it is conclusive evidence that it is a profitable occupation, but I think it is conclusive evidence, that it is a much better occupation than many others.

51,534. But is it not possible that this view may be taken of the case, that a farmer finding that his farm does not pay, says to himself, "Now this place does not pay me, I will go and "bid for such and such a farm which is vacant," and other farmers being of the same mind, there is a keen competition for that farm?—That may be, but it is exactly the same in every other business. If you go now, for instance, to take a grocer's shop, you find three or four applications and probably the man who is going out has failed, but all those men who are going in think that they can do better. It is the same with a farm. There are many applicants for a farm, and they all think they can do well, and I say the only way to find out the right man is to find a man who is able to stay and pay the rent.

51,535. But you admit it is not conclusive evidence?—I admit it is not at all conclusive evidence that it will pay, but I think this, that the door is always open for a farmer to turn a labourer, if he thinks it is a better trade, but there are so many, as it were, unseen benefits and privileges attaching to a small holding, that men (and I would be myself one of them) would live on a great deal less, and have a small holding, and keep their family together so that they could all live together. You have a free day when you want it. You may have to work much longer hours during the six or seven days when you do work, but you have a holiday when you want it. You have a horse in all probability that you can take out a friend with, and there are a great many small privileges attached to a holding that must be paid for, they may not be paid for in the money value, but they must be paid for in some way, and you cannot have those privileges without paying for them. I believe that is the great secret of the competition for farms. You could earn more money in all probability in the mineral districts or you could earn more money perhaps as a labourer, but you would not have the same freedom that is attached to a small holding.

51,536. In order to obtain this you will admit that they have to deny themselves other things?—Most certainly.

51,537. As a rule they live harder?—They live harder, and they are very hard-working and industrious people, most of the tenants that I know. In fact, they are the hardest working tenants that ever I have seen.

51,538. Of course, you have had experience of Welsh and Scotch farmers?—Yes, and I have lived for nine years in England as well.

51,539. Do the Welsh farmers live harder than the Scotch farmers?—I think the small farmers do. There are not nearly so many small farmers in Scotland nor in England as there are in Wales, and I think that is one of the main causes of the very keen and strong competition in this country for farms. There is such a small step from one holding to another, and there are so many men that are struggling to get up; there are, as it were, too many on the bottom rungs of the ladder struggling to get up, and in England there is a far greater distance between the labourer and the farmer than there is in this country, and it is the same in Scotland as it is in England.

51,540. You find that the competition is not so keen in Scotland for farms as it is in Wales?—No, I do not think it is so keen.

51,541. What is your opinion as to the preferential claim for rent?—I think it ought to be abolished; I think it is very unjust, and I think it also militates very much against the real true men who are legitimate farmers.

51,542. You say that it is prejudicial to good substantial tenants?—I do. I think it is accountable to a considerable extent on some estates—not on many, nor on the best managed ones—for the competition that exists; the landlord is safe for his rent if he gets his farm stocked, even if the farmer is a man of straw, and, of course, I hold it is very unjust towards the public.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,543. Does the preferential claim for rent exist in Scotland?—I am not sure whether it does or not, I cannot say.

51,544. Is it the custom in Scotland that the rents are paid in advance?—No.

51,545. Not in your part of Scotland?—No, I have never known it.

51,546. Is there anything further you wish to state?—I wanted to mention one other important point upon which I think hardships frequently occur to tenants, that is, when the estates are sold, and also frequently in cases of bankruptcy, or where they have been compelled to give up and they have not given the necessary notice where they have been turned out, and have received in some cases very, very poor allowances. Of course, understand clearly that I think it is only in very rare exceptions that this occurs, but if it is possible the rare exceptions should be prevented, because it is not for the good landlords that the law is made, but for the bad ones, and if it is possible the law ought to be made to meet the case of unprincipled men. There is no need for the law at all so far as men of principle are concerned. But I have known several instances in which a considerable amount of earnings of tenants has been taken by unscrupulous men. I refer mostly to little farms that have been in trusteeship and very small properties.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,547. What you say is this, that the Agricultural Holdings Act should be so extended and amended as to protect tenants from hardships of the sort which you have mentioned?—Exactly so. Of course as to the exact method in which it should be amended I am not quite clear, but that it ought to be amended I feel perfectly satisfied.

Professor Rhŷs.

51,548. I think one thing follows from what you have suggested, viz., the abolition of the requirement that notice should be given. I understand you to think that?—I do not think a notice should be given except at the end of the tenancy, and that a notice should then be given. I think it is necessary that notice should be given, and I would suggest further that the notice of the landlord and the tenant should alike be deposited with the arbitrator or with the public official, whoever he may be who should receive them, because in a great many cases one man makes a claim and the other man makes a claim to meet it, and I think that each of the claims should be put under seal without one person knowing what the other asks.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,549. It has been suggested that they should be delivered the same day?—Yes, that would meet my views exactly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,550. It would do away with a lot of these fictitious claims?—It would do away with a great many which are only manufactured, as it were, for the purpose of meeting the other.

Professor Rhŷs.

51,551. I think I understand you to say that the law ought to be such as to compel the bad landlords to do what the good landlords do of their own free will?—That is exactly my opinion, and of course it would prevent the good landlords from going astray even if they felt inclined to do so through a bad agent, or in any other way.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Moses Jones called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,552. Where do you live?—At Garthisaf, Llandilofan.

51,553. You have something to say about a farm that was rented by your father in 1835? Is that so?—Yes.

51,554. What was the name of that farm?—Nantsebon.

51,555. Was that farm in a very bad condition?—Yes, in a bad condition.

51,556. Was it in a bad condition after it had been farmed? Do you speak of your own knowledge; can you remember as far back as 1835?—No. I know of 50 years ago; that would be 58.

51,557. 1835 is 59 years ago?—Yes.

51,558. What have you to say about the cultivation of that farm?—It was in a bad state, and my father took it and cultivated it and improved the land and improved the farm, and we had three boys working hard morning and night—from morning till night.

51,559. What was the state of the dwelling-house and out buildings?—The dwelling-houses were in a bad state; the wet came in and we had to carry out snow many times in the winter, and the outbuildings were in a bad state—rush roof and rushes

51,560. Were they repaired at all?—No.

51,561. Never repaired?—No.

51,562. Have they not been repaired for the last 60 years?—Oh, yes. They are in repair now.

51,563. In 1865 was a notice to quit given?—Yes.

51,564. What was the reason of that?—An advance in the rent.

51,565. What was the advance in rent?—8*l.*

51,566. From what to what?—42*l.*

51,567. From 42*l.* up to 50*l.*?—Yes.

51,568. What was the size of the farm?—About 135 acres, or something like that, more or less; I do not know exactly.

51,569. Was it hilly—a mountain farm?—A hilly farm.

51,570. But your father kept on the farm in spite of the notice to quit, and paid the higher rent?—Yes.

51,571. When the rent was raised?—Yes.

51,572. Was anything done to the buildings, were they put in repair or not?—They were repaired a little, but my father did most of that—taking the haulage and all.

51,573. Have you anything further to say about that farm?—Yes. In 1854 the farm was sold, and as we had some connexion or other, and some feelings for the old place, we bought the farm.

51,574. You bought the farm?—Well, I bought it for my nephew, and we had no compensation at all.

51,575. For the work done on the farm, you mean?—Yes.

51,576. Did you make any claim for it?—No.

51,577. You did not make any claim for compensation?—No.

51,578. It was put into the market, and you bought it?—Yes.

51,579. Your complaint, I suppose, is that after putting the farm in a good state of cultivation, you then had to buy it in the improved condition in which it was?—Yes, but the dwelling-house was in a bad state then, and many of the buildings partly, but I made some repairs.

51,580. Then you have something to say about Mr. Price, of Maesybeddau?—Yes. He is here somewhere.

51,581. Is he in the court now?—I think he is: I have seen him in the court once.

51,582. Are you authorised to speak for him?—No; only that he is thrown out with no compensation for improvement on the farm.

51,583. If he is here he can speak for himself, can he not?—Yes.

51,584. Have you any knowledge of other farms in the parish of which you speak, namely, Llandilofan?—Yes, I was bred and born in Llandilofan.

51,585. What have you to say with regard to families that were brought up there. You speak for nine farms, according to the paper you have handed in?—Yes. In my memory the dwelling-house was in ruins because the landlord ought to have repaired it. Another farm was taken to it, and they are still in ruins, and I think that is not an advantage for the country, and there is a decrease in the population, and it makes the farms scarce. When they are out of repair, and when they are repairing them, they have got no place to live in, but at least there are a few good landlords at Llandilofan. I know them all nearly, and there are advances in rent generally except Lord Camden and Dr. Lloyd Barrow—he did not advance his rent in my memory. All the others advanced their rents. I know an estate there where there was an advance in rent, and soon after the advance in the rent they sold the estate, and I daresay he gave more for it than it was worth by reason of the look of the rent, and the tenants had to suffer for that.

51,586. Do you know of any cases where no compensation has been given for improvements?—I know a farmer in the parish of Llandilofan, and when he entered the farm it was in a bad state, and many families have been living there, and could do nothing; and the man took to the farm, and was working hard on the farm, draining and grubbing, and I do not know whether the landlords are not giving something for the drainage—I could not exactly say as to that—but it was a small farm, and the landlord raised 10*l.* in the rent. I know another farm—the man is dead now—he did the haulage to the outbuildings, and lost the harvest by doing so. He was a widower, and now he is dead himself, and he left a little orphan behind him, and I do not think he has had any compensation at all. Another man took it. I do not blame the landlord for that. I do not know; perhaps there is something between the agent and him.

51,587. Do you know any farmers who are afraid of coming forward to give evidence?—I cannot exactly say that, but I suppose some do not come because they are afraid of their landlord.

51,588. You think there may be some, but you do not specify who they are?—No.

51,589. You are not afraid of coming forward?—No, I have not been afraid. I am not a tenant farmer at present, but I have been farming.

51,590. We have had some cases of tenant farmers coming here to-day, and they were not afraid?—I have got no farm myself now.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,591. Would you be afraid to give evidence if you were a tenant farmer now?—I do not know in that case.

Professor Rhŷs.

51,592. What sort of country is your parish Llandilofan?—It is a hilly parish mostly, but some good ground.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

51,593. A good many sheep, I suppose ?—Yes, they depend mostly on sheep, and there is not very much good land there but for sheep.

51,594. You have no difficulty about game, I suppose ?—Yes.

51,595. You have ?—Yes.

51,596. What do you complain of ?—I know some complain of rabbits, and such as that.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

51,597. Are you not allowed to kill the rabbits now ?—Yes, they kill the rabbits.

51,598. Are the tenants afraid of killing the rabbits ?—Yes.

51,599. You think so ?—Yes, I know.

51,600. Do the people mostly speak English or Welsh ?—Welsh mostly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Sharpe called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

e 39,272
d 73,925

51,601. Where do you live ?—At Blaenusk.

51,602. You wish to rebut some evidence, I think ?—Yes, I wish to rebut the evidence of Mr. Davies, of Rhyblid. In his evidence at Llandovery he accused me of wishing to encroach upon the common of Carmarthen. The case is this, that the common of Carmarthen adjoins my land, and four farms below the common adjoin my land. The River Usk is the boundary of them all. On the other farms in erecting a fence we give and take; one part of the fence is put upon one side of the river, and the part is put upon the other. There was a piece at the common where the water had washed away the fence altogether, and I met with some of the commoners, and we agreed to run a fence straight through. The river at that part forms a letter S. I give the top part, and I take the bottom part, Mr. Davies, of Rhyblid, was present at the time that the fence was made up, and he made no objection to it. I let the doing of the job, and the man took a twelvemonth before it was finished. During all that time none of the commoners made the slightest objection to it, but as soon as it was finished, Mr. Davis, of Ribblet, complained to the court leet about it. That I do not want to encroach on the common is evident; I adjoin the common for about a mile, and I have never put a particle of stock on the common all the time that I have had the right in the 20 years, so that I do not think I am likely to encroach upon another common when I have the right to put 100 sheep on the Brecon Common.

51,603. But you admit that you did put this fence up ?—I put the fence up.

51,604. Is it on the common or not ?—Yes, it is on the common, part of it; one half is on my side. I give the whole amount—I think it is about one acre and a half.

51,605. Speaking from memory, that is exactly what the witness said ?—No, he said that I was encroaching upon it. The commoners agreed that I should take the one half, and give the other half. I gave exactly the same amount of land that I took. I offered if there was any difference between the value of one land and the other that I would pay the difference, so that I do not consider when two parties agree to give and take a little on both sides that that is encroaching. It was a mutual agreement between the commoners and me.

51,606. Was this agreement reduced into writing at the court leet ?—Mr. Davies complained at the court leet.

51,607. He made a complaint there ?—Yes.

51,608. But had it been previously arranged that you might do that ?—No, the fence was put up then, and although it had been 12 months being put up he never complained. He was there at the time the fence was set out, and he made no objection to it.

51,609. He did not make any objection till after the fence was up ?—No.

51,610. Was there anything else that he said to which you take objection ?—No, nothing except that.

51,611. We have your explanation, and it is down upon the notes ?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

SIXTIETH DAY.

The Town Hall, Builth, Brecknockshire, Wednesday, 9th May 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.
Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary

Mr. SAMUEL HOOD COWPER COLES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

51,612. You reside at Penmyarth, near Crickhowell?—Yes.

51,613. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—As agent for Sir Joseph Bailey I do not think I need say anything for him, as he gave you such very full evidence at Crickhowell, but I wish to give evidence in connection with the Llysdinam estate for which I am agent. My reason for giving evidence with reference to that estate is this: it is a small estate, and as in most of the districts small estates do not seem to have given the same satisfaction as the large estates, I think in this district you will find a very great many small estates with residential landlords which are thoroughly satisfactory.

This estate now belongs to Mrs. Venables Llewelyn. Mr. Venables died only last January. As he always resided upon his estate, and up to within the last 12 months before his death, and always acted as his own agent in so far as receiving the rents and arranging the repairs, and what was necessary on the estate; I can only give you the evidence which I have abstracted from his journal, and what I happen to know as his agent for the last nine years. I was only doing the actual work in connexion with the arranging with tenants and measuring up any work.

The estate is 2,196 acres. The total letting as farms is 1,739 acres. About 300 acres of this is very high land. The occupiers on the Brecknockshire side of the estate, representing about 1,200 acres, turn sheep on to the Llysdinam hill, which is part of the Builth manor. One shepherd is kept for the whole, partly paid by the landlord and partly paid by the tenant, at a certain rate under their agreement. The same shepherd is also shepherd for the adjoining landowner, Mrs. Gibson Watt, the same conditions being in her agreements. The shepherd is really getting 18*s.* a week, and a house for his work. Abatements were given in 1879, 1880, 1881, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1892 and 1893; in some cases 5 per cent., and in some cases 10 per cent. The old rental was 1,100*l.*; it is now 984*l.*; that represents a permanent reduction of 11 per cent. I have handed in a copy of the agreement; it is a yearly agreement. The land is almost entirely grazing land, a very small amount of arable, and most of the tenants have succeeded from father to son. From the years 1886 up to 1893, both inclusive, 2,500*l.*, or an average of 300*l.* per annum, has been spent in rebuilding the farmhouses. I may say that this estate was first purchased in about 1830 by Archdeacon Venables, and it has been added to by degrees.

When the Commission was first talked of as coming here Mr. Venables gave me a few memoranda, and amongst others he gave me a statement as follows:—"Land in Wales is let "and held precisely on the same terms as in "England, at least Breconshire and Radnorshire. "Every substantial improvement is done by "the landlord. He builds every building and "keeps it in repair. Even the smallest repairs "are done by him. He provides and replaces "when necessary every gate and stile. He "hangs the gates. There is, as a rule, the most "thoroughly good feeling between landlord and "tenant. There has hitherto been no difficulty "in letting farms. The landlords, in bad times, "show every consideration for their tenants." I notice from his journal that while he was acting in the capacity of his own agent and looking after the estate all the tenants who left seem to have had some small compensation made. I also notice three or four entries where land has been taken for planting and an allowance has been made in return, sometimes money and sometimes draining, according to the arrangements between them. He also makes some very interesting remarks in his journal upon the larch disease which is troubling this district so much. That is all I wish to say about that estate.

I also wish to give evidence to show how dangerous is a travelling commissioner such as the "Western Mail" Commissioner in 1892 and the Labour Commissioner, and how much safer and better it is to have a body of gentlemen such as the Commission over which you now preside, at certain advertised centres, when we all have an opportunity of hearing what is said, and resulting probably in a Parliamentary report. I will take the Labour Commission. Mr. Lleufer Thomas wrote to the Brecknockshire County Council on the 18th of April 1892, a letter, of which I can give you a copy if you wish, asking the County Council to appoint a committee to help him in collecting facts. On Friday, the 22nd of April 1892, the County Council appointed the general purposes committee, including myself, specially to do the particular work. Nothing more was heard from Mr. Lleufer Thomas until April 1893, when Mr. Chapman, another assistant commissioner, who had not communicated in any way with the County Council, came into the Builth Union, which employs less labour and is less affected than any other union in the two counties of Brecknockshire and Radnorshire, and collected evidence at small meetings of labourers held for the purpose and gathered together in a hurry, and interviewing anyone he thought proper. I mentioned to him at the time and I here again state that I think it was his duty to know what steps Mr. Lleufer Thomas had taken, and his conduct was discourteous to the County Council. The consequence is that his Parliamentary report published is full of inaccuracies, and most unfair and detrimental to the district. So far as he quotes authorities for statements they are fairly correct, but I wish to correct his statements in certain paragraphs. I assume you have a copy of the report. Referring first to Mr. Lleufer Thomas's letter, it seems a very fair and proper one, and that letter was printed by the order of the County Council. He says:—"The time at my disposal "will probably permit me to investigate only "one poor law union within the county of "Brecknock; and as the union of Brecon "appears to have been selected in 1867 by the "Assistant Commissioner under the 'Commission "'on the Employment of Children, &c., in "'Agriculture,' I am likely to select the same "union for the present inquiry, unless I "receive some information to the effect that "the conditions of labour in some other "portions of the county differ materially from "those in the union of Brecon, or that some "other union may be considered as more "typical of the general condition throughout "the whole county." We heard nothing more, but we made several inquiries through the clerk of the Council, and, as I said before, until Mr. Chapman appeared on the scene we naturally thought he would act by this letter.

But to go to the report, which you will find in the Blue Book* at page 163, Mr. Chapman quotes Mr. Clifton Mogg, Mr. Woosnam, and myself.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,614. Was no answer given to the letter; this is a letter to the chairman of the County Council?—An answer was sent by the clerk of the peace, stating that the general purposes committee was appointed for that purpose. You will see that on the front of the print of the letter I have handed in.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

51,615. Did the general purposes committee suggest any other union to Mr. Lleufer Thomas?—No; we were ready to meet him according to his letter. There was no suggestion made.

51,616. I mean to say he received no other information?—No; we were waiting to hear from him.

51,617. He says: "Unless I receive some "information to the effect that the conditions "of labour in some other portions of the county "differ materially." He did not receive any information?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,618. Besides, this is not an answer to his letter. He did not ask the assistance of the County Council in collecting facts. It was his duty to collect facts. I do not see what you can suggest that the Assistant Commissioner of the Labour Commission should have done more than he did. What more was he to do; he told you his method?—As you see, we appointed a committee, of which we told him, to collect the facts; and then we heard nothing more. We were naturally waiting to know when he was coming. So far as he quotes the names he gives in his report, Mr. Mogg, Mr. Woosnam, Mr. Venables, and myself, it seems fairly correct. Mr. Mogg and Mr. Woosnam I dare say are here to-day, and can answer for themselves.

At clause No. 14 in his report he says, "Where a farm is worked to its full capacity "one-third is arable, worked on the four-course "shift, and the majority of the pasture fields "show by the 'reins' that they used to be "ploughed lands, and have become depreciated "from want of cultivation." I certainly cannot admit that that exists here at all. No doubt land was put down, and not put down well, but it has not deteriorated to that extent. No 16 contains a most astounding statement, "First-"rate dairy farms have degenerated into ruined "farms, with a depreciation of rental value in "one case near Builth from 240*l.* to 80*l.* a year." I have made most careful inquiry, and I know the district well, and I am quite certain that no such farm exists in this district. It goes on to say, "This is due in great measure to the "difficulty of getting dairy maids to do the "work."

51,619. Do you know of a farm near here which had a rental of 240*l.*?—Certainly not. I cannot trace one anything near it at all. Then No. 22, as to the letting of farms, he says, "Rents have not been permanently reduced, but "abatements have been commonly made of from "10 per cent. to 20 per cent. in recent years. "Farm rents are calculated upon the basis of "10*l.* for every cow on a stock-rearing farm,

* "Royal Commission on Labour.—The Agricultural Labourer, Vol. II., Wales."

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

" and farms are spoken of as five-cow farms or " 10-cow farms as the case may be. This was " the old plan; the cows paid the rent by the " value of their calves, and all the rest belonged " to the man to pay for labour, rates and taxes, " and profit." Nearly all the farms in this district are sheep farms. There is a certain amount of stock-rearing, but I never heard of a farm being let on that basis.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,620. I suppose it would be more than 10*l.* for every cow if it was let on that basis?—Yes, I should think so.

51,621. It would be more like 15*l.* I should say?—Yes; then in No. 24 he says, " The increase " in the Builth district is entirely due to the " railway centre formed at Builth Road, where " a completely new population of 174 persons " has sprung up since 1881." Above that he quotes the Colwyn district and the Builth district, giving the decrease and the increase in the population. Builth Road is in the Colwyn district, it is not in the Builth district at all. The increase in the Builth district is due a great deal to building just round here, not this railway centre which has sprung up.

Lord Kenyon.

51,622. Is the river the boundary?—The river is the boundary. Then No. 28, " In regard " to houses it may be stated here that there are " scarcely any cottages for agricultural labourers " in this district, as most of the work is done by " farm servants who live in the farm-houses. " The villages are occupied by artizans and " small tradesmen." I have several cases here where there are cottages for farm labourers, but the farmers let them to artizans instead of letting them to their labourers and keeping their labourers in the house. Certainly there is a greater demand now for cottages; the farmers are beginning to ask for them because I think they are beginning to find that the married labourer living in the cottage is so much more satisfactory than depending on the young fellows who live in the farmhouse, and so often want to move. I quite appreciate the change; I think it would be a good thing. But there are many cases throughout the district now, as I state, where cottages belonging to farms are occupied by artizans.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,623. Is there not a scarcity of married labourers?—When the landlords see their cottages which are meant for the farms occupied by artizans it is not encouraging to the landlords to do much towards cottages Then as to No. 46, the clause as to immoral.ty of the district, Sir Joseph Bailey gave you statistics at Crickhowell, but as Mr. Chapman says here that he had no accurate official returns, and what he reports is only on hearsay, it seems rather a hard charge I think against our Nonconformist friends to make these remarks in the third paragraph. He gives three reasons. Then, No. 57, as to the employment of women, he quoted me wrongly there in saying, " We employ " women regularly for milking, potato picking " poultry plucking and dressing, and other light " work at 1*s.* a day, and a bit of food." Well, we do employ women for dairy-work, but to a very small extent in this district, and 1*s.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* a day are the wages, but the remark as to the " bit of food " is not correct; they do not receive anything.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,624. Do you mean that they get no food, or a great deal more than " a bit of food "?—They do not get food I mean; that is their wage. Then at No. 61 I am quoted as saying: " Mr. Cowper Coles, on Sir Joseph Bailey's " estate, gives 1*s.* extra per day; Captain " Thomas, R.N., on Miss Thomas's estate, gives " 6*d.* a day in lieu of beer money, and 1*s.* a " week extra pay for 13 weeks, making an " average of 2*l.* 4*s.* for the harvest during the " last two years." We found that was unsatisfactory, it made the harvest so long when men knew that so long as the harvest continued they would get 1*s.* a day, and as Sir Joseph stated to you at Crickhowell he gives them instead 4*l.* if they complete the harvest in proper time. Then at No. 68 Mr. Chapman quotes that " at " Llysdinam it was said that some of the farm " men had to send their child three miles to " school, and no doubt that difficulty must " always arise in distant farms." There is no farm at Llysdinam that sends children to school more than two miles. Llysdinam is quite a small hamlet. Llysdinam Hall, Mrs. Venables Llewelyn's, owns most of the parish, and most of the labourers are employed at that house, and it is only a mile from the school. At 72 he quotes Dr. Fry as to the sanitary condition of the neighbourhood, and he says: " The " men make no complaint on this score, but in " Builth itself there are a certain number of " really disgraceful cottages which have been " condemned again and again, but to no pur- " pose, and this is apt to be the case where " the cottages belong to small impecunious " owners." I quite endorse that. If the Commission can see their way to do anything, or anything can be done to help the sanitary authorities to get rid of cottages which belong to impecunious owners it would be a great relief all through this county. As representing large landowners we soon hear if there is anything wrong on our estate, and we have to put it right, but when it comes to the small owner it seems it has to go on, and does go on, because there are no means of getting rid of the cottages entirely. What Mr. Chapman says in No. 73 is perfectly true: " At Newbridge I visited a row of " six cottages of the worst possible type, with only " one bedroom for each." I do not understand, under the present law, what remedy there is for that. At 82 he quotes Erwood; " There are

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"three pieces of land here for pasture allot-
"ments, less than five acres altogether. They "are let at 1*l.* an acre in plots 1½ acres or "more. The agricultural value of the neigh"bouring land is about 12*s.* an acre, and is "too poor to grow fern on." That is not quite a fair statement. The agricultural value of the neighbouring land is a little more than 12*s.*—I think 1*l.* an acre—when the landlord has to pay all tithes and rates, it is not an unfair rent for an allotment. Then 90, referring to benefit societies, he says: "At New-
"bridge the men said, 'Not more than half the "'men belong to a club.'" That statement is not correct. In Newbridge there are 65 men living in the village which you passed through last night, and 35 of them belong to the club there. That leaves 30 that do not belong, and 10 of them support it in other ways, whenever there is a fête, and are really in too good a position to want the assistance of a benefit club. I think the majority of the other 20 were too old to join when the Foresters became so successful in the district. As to these benefit clubs we seriously want some further legislation to help us in managing them. I am a member of the Newbridge Club, and I am one of their trustees, and I am also a member of the clubs in the Crickhowell district. I find as a trustee that there is great difficulty in making them put themselves on a proper financial footing, and I know that many of the clubs in the district, although they are Foresters and Manchester Unity Clubs, are conducted in an excessively slack way, and there will be much more trouble again unless something is done. I think it is a most serious thing for the agricultural districts if these clubs do not put themselves upon a proper financial footing. Small clubs have gone wrong considerably already. If there could be some inspection of their accounts by our county treasurer once a year, and a proper law made as to how they are to keep their accounts, and what returns they are to make, I believe it would be a great benefit. I must say a great deal of the mismanagement is really, I think, partly from ignorance and from want of assistance. It is a splendid machinery, and it only wants putting into better order, and I believe it would then be a grand thing for the country. In clause 92 he refers to the connexion again with the Foresters' Clubs, and the course which Sir Joseph Bailey pursues with his men when ill. If they belong to the proper clubs they are helped when they are ill by making up their pay. Clause 93 contains a very unfair statement. "There is a reading-
"room at Builth, but none in the rural villages." It is a very curious mistake, because Mr. Chapman held an inquiry at Newbridge-on-Wye in a reading-room which has 900 volumes, and has a circulating library also. There is also a reading-room at Beulah to my own knowledge, Builth Road, and Llandrindod, and I believe at Llanavonfawr; and in this town there is a Conservative and Liberal club, and I believe other clubs also. So that the statement that there is a want of reading rooms is quite inaccurate. Clause 96 also contains a very curious error, that there are no means of recreation or games such as football or cricket, and that the fairs and the chapel meetings are the only occasions for recreation. Builth people, I am sure, feel hurt at that. They are well known throughout South Wales and a good part of England, for the number of good football players they have turned out; and every village has its football club, sometimes two or three; not only the men, but the young men, and temperance boys make all sorts of little excuses for forming different clubs. If you are here in the autumn you will find yourself called upon with a book every hundred yards in the street to support these clubs. There are good cricket clubs here, and at Builth Road and other places. I should say in that part of the county there are a great many means of recreation. Then at paragraph 101 he says: "I have already alluded
"to the fact that labourers very often own
"part of the stock on the farm, but I came "across one interesting example of this in "a farmer who was employing his brother as
"a labourer." Then he goes on to say the brother owned half the stock. I think this a very good quotation of how the labourer comes on and works his way up until he becomes a small farmer. Then in the Appendix No. 1 the figures seem to be all mixed up in the most extraordinary way. Some parishes are left out; for instance, Llanelwedd is left out in which Builth Road is situated, and where this railway centre is springing up.

No doubt a great many of the inaccuracies in the Labour Report are to be accounted for by the fact of Mr. Lleufer Thomas being away out of the country on account of illness, and I suppose Mr. Chapman coming to do it at the last moment, because I notice the report is dated February 1893 on the face of it, and Mr. Chapman was not here till April 1893 collecting the evidence. I simply bring it before you as I notice several of you gentlemen have used Mr. Doyle's Report, and other previous reports, for your information, and if this report is brought out again in a few years and quoted as what existed in the Builth district it would be grossly unfair and inaccurate as I think I have shown you. That is all I have to say about it.

Lord Kenyon.

51,625. With regard to the joint shepherd, what proportion does the landlord pay?—I do not quite follow you there. The tenants all met in 1882; and they had a meeting about 10 years before that, and they agreed to turn out a certain number of sheep each, and pay so much towards the sheep. What they agreed to comes to about half-a-crown every ewe, and what they pay altogether comes to about 23*l.* The shepherd's wages, I see, are 46*l.*, so that it is half.

51,626. The landlord pays half and the tenant pays half?—Yes.

51,627. I suppose these clauses, 21 and 22, in the agreement refer to that?—Yes.

51,628. It is made part of the agreement that each tenant should keep a certain flock of sheep?—Yes.

51,629. You find that answers well?—It answers exceedingly well in this case, because every farmer in the hamlet of Llysdinam who is entitled to turn on the hill has his flock on the hill, and the only expense he has is the shepherd's money, which he pays with his rent, and the shepherd takes charge of the whole flock together.

51,630. It seems to me to be an instance of co-operation between landlord and tenant?—Yes. I think in this district and up Rhayader way you will find a good deal of evidence put before you about this.

51,631. As to the complaint about the preparation of the Labour Report I do not understand whether the County Council advised Mr. Lleufer Thomas to go to any other union?—We simply answered the letter. The pith of it was that a committee had been appointed, and we were waiting further to hear from him.

51,632. According to his letter it was not proposed to visit the Builth district at all?—No, we understood from that that he was going to the Brecon district, which is red sandstone, and large farms and full of agricultural labourers, and entirely in the county of Breconshire—the only union that is.

51,633. And without further notice Mr. Chapman came to Builth?—Yes, he came to Builth.

51,634. And without further notice?—Yes, and simply by accident I came across him, and as I was appointed especially on that committee I thought it right to bring it forward to-day.

51,635. You think it would have been better if there had been more advertisement?—Yes, more advertisement, because the meetings were got up in a great hurry. I know some at not more than 24 hours' notice, and the farmers in the district, too, complained that they had not heard of or known of the meeting.

51,636. With regard to the houses you speak of in Builth, surely the sanitary authorities have power to declare them uninhabitable?—Yes, but it is hard work to get the sanitary authorities to take such steps.

51,637. They have a plentiful power if they like to exercise it?—Yes, but it ought to be more compulsory, I think, on the sanitary authorities to rectify these things.

51,638. With regard to the benefit clubs, you propose an inspection of their accounts. There was a blue book some nine or ten years ago showing the actual state of every benefit club in the country. Are you aware of that?—Yes. Take the Foresters, for instance; there is a return made every year showing exactly how each club stands, but I am sorry to say when you go to inspect their accounts, as I have done, you find they are very inaccurate, simply very often from want of advice, and I think it will bring serious trouble on the clubs.

51,639. Do you think the clubs in the Manchester Unity act independently of that Unity; I mean it does not exercise any fatherly control over them, but the clubs are quite independent?—Quite independent.

51,640. Would it not be better for some more supervision from the head office?—Yes; if there was more supervision, or even an inspector from the head office.

51,641. The name seems to offer a bait—"Manchester Unity." People think it must be a great thing, but really the clubs are quite independent?—Quite independent.

51,642. I see Sir Joseph Bailey encourages men to join the clubs. Does he encourage them to join any particular club?—No, we only advise them to join a club which is financially sound. There have been some small local clubs till lately, but most of them have gone, and we strongly advise them not to go into anything but the Foresters, Oddfellows, or Hearts of Oak.

51,643. Do you think anything could be done in the way of amalgamating these clubs in the county, taking them up from rather a larger standard?—I know in Shropshire they have something of the sort. You mean the county to form one body?

51,644. Yes?—Well, it would be a great benefit to the clubs, because in many agricultural districts the clubs belong to the Merthyr district, and of course the death-rate in Merthyr is much higher than the death-rate here, and the clubs here have to bear a portion of the general fund. The Herefordshire district is the best district adjacent here.

51,645. Life is longer in Herefordshire?—Well, it has had a very excellent secretary until quite recently. I am sorry to say he has gone.

51,646. I think the state of these clubs is a very serious thing indeed. I know of many instances where men have invested their money for years, and when they come to draw their money they find their club is rotten?—Yes. It is bound to affect everybody if the clubs are not looked after.

51,647. Particularly the labourer?—Particularly the labourer. I know of many whose accounts are quite improper.

51,648. You suggest that an actuary or someone from the head office should inspect the accounts?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,649. With regard to the criticism you passed on section 96 of Mr. Chapman's Report that is about the football and the cricket, I notice the instances you gave were at Builth and Newbridge?—Yes.

51,650. Do you say that cricket is usually played in this county, looking at it as a whole, among agricultural labourers and their children?—No. It is hard to keep cricket going in the villages. Builth Road I mentioned.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

51,651. It occurs to me that probably Mr. Chapman was not thinking of a town like Builth or of Brecon, but that he was rather having regard to what had gone before, and thinking of the farms scattered through the valleys on the hill side?—At Builth Road and at Newbridge certainly there are farmers' sons who play there and labourers and children; but it is not popular.

51,652. Do you mean to say it is the same in this county as in Gloucestershire where there is hardly a village without its football club in the winter and cricket in the summer?—Every village has its football club, and sometimes two or three, but cricket is not taken up in the same way, or anything like it.

Lord Kenyon.

51,653. It is a matter of custom, is it not?—Yes, it is a matter of custom. We have more concerts perhaps than they have in that county.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,654. You said something about that which appeared in the articles of the "Western Mail," what is your complaint with regard to them?—I make no complaint except to say that a travelling commissioner going round and collecting evidence from anyone he can pick up or interview has not the same chance of arriving at accurate results as such a Commission as this would have.

51,655. I notice that the "Western Mail" Commissioner says, "So far as rent is concerned "there is a general consensus of opinion that "land on the Glanusk estate is fully rented, "that is, that it is up to its full agricultural "value in ordinary times." Is that statement accurate?—No. If you turn to the figures Sir Joseph gave you at Crickhowell I think they show it is not accurate.

51,656. As to buildings he says: "A much "better state of things has been inaugurated by "the present agent who is young and active, "and is pushing on repairs as fast as possible." You do not complain of that?—No, there has been a great deal of repairing done. I daresay there has been more done in the last year or two, but there was a fair amount of repairing before. I do not think it is quite a fair statement to make.

51,657. The Llysdinam estate is not far from here. There is a parish of that name?—Yes, it adjoins Newbridge-on-Wye.

51,658. Do most of the people there habitually speak the Welsh language?—None of them.

51,659. All English?—All English.

51,660. We are anxious to know where the line runs. Take the adjoining parish?—Then you get to the Welsh, I think.

51,661. Where does the Welsh line begin?—Commander Evan Thomas, I think, is giving you evidence to-day, and I think he can draw that line better for you than I can.

51,662. I was not at the Crickhowell sitting, and I do not know, therefore, what Sir Joseph Bailey said about the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, but if he dealt with it from his point of view and your point of view it is not worth asking about it. Do you know the proceeding under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—It is a perfectly dead letter so far as this county is concerned, although all our tenants are under it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

51,663. By that you do not mean, of course, that there is any attempt to contract out of any other clause than clause 33?—On the contrary, all our tenants who have contracts are under the Act.

51,664. Then in what sense do you mean it is a dead letter?—When they leave their farms a valuation is arrived at between myself and the tenant, or the incoming and outgoing tenant, and really the Act is never considered. It is the custom of the country.

51,665. The section of the Act I was going to call your attention to is section 7, which makes it "a condition precedent that notice in "writing should be given by the tenant two "months before the termination of the tenancy "otherwise he will lose the right to compen-"sation." Do you see any objection for the repeal of that section? It seems rather hard that if a man forgets to give two months' notice before the end of his tenancy that he should lose all claim to compensation?—I do not see any harm in repealing it.

51,666. In the same way it is equally hard if the landlord does not give the tenant notice in 14 days that his counterclaim is gone?—I think in Mr. Venables' agreement the last clause contracted out of that.

51,667. The last clause is null and void. You cannot contract out of any of these clauses of the Act. The only clause of the Act that can be legally contracted out of is section 33; but by this agreement to give the go-by to it, if anything, is to the advantage of the tenant except in this way, that the valuation agreed upon in that case must be a value of the high court probably?—Before any two justices in petty sessions, I think.

51,668. As to this agreement that only relates to distress, you think that the procedure under this Act of 1883 is too cumbersome?—Yes; and I think it certainly may be made better, both for the landlord for his protection against bad tenants, and the tenants' protection against bad landlords. But I think even if it is amended in this county, unless a very different feeling comes about, a very large majority of tenants will never look at it.

51,669. What is the custom of the county apart from the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, as to compensation to the outgoing tenant?—For his seed, and certain ploughing, it is very much the same as in the adjoining counties.

51,670. In Glamorganshire there is a very special custom?—Well, the Glamorganshire custom does not reach up here; and I think most landlords allow for hedging if it is done properly. It really depends so much on the tenant. If he is a good tenant he is sure to get his compensation; but it is so very seldom that they ask for compensation.

51,671. They are mostly Michaelmas takings, I suppose ?—Here they are Lady Day mostly.

51,672. Is there any special custom as to the retaining of any portion of the premises by the outgoing tenant beyond the 25th of March ?—Oh, yes, the boozy pasture and the house.

51,673. We want to get the custom in these counties as accurately as we can. Will you state the custom as to that. You say the boozy pasture and the other premises are retained ?—The outgoing tenant has the boozy pasture, the house, and a part of the buildings till the 1st of May.

Mr. Griffiths.

51,674. You consider that the greatest part of this neighbourhood is under pasture ?—Yes.

51,675. Is this system of one shepherd satisfactory to the tenants ?—I have found it very satisfactory since I have been the agent for the last nine years. I was living there more or less a good deal for the last 14 or 15 years, and I only remember one dispute between the shepherd and the tenant, and it was a very small one. The tenants and the shepherd seem on very good terms.

51,676. We found in several parts of North Wales that they complained very much that by so many shepherds being employed they were continually disturbing the sheep ?—It is so.

51,677. I think it is much more advantageous to have that system ?—Yes. This is only a very small estate and a very small sheep walk. You will get to-day further evidence as to very large sheep walks on the same principle.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,678. Mr. Richard Jones and you had some discussion with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act; do you not think it would be proper for the landlord to give in his counterclaim at the same time as the tenant sends his claim in. What I mean is this: that the counterclaim is very often based upon the claim that the tenant makes ?—Yes; it is certainly in some cases. It depends upon what the tenant claims.

51,679. It would be fairer for the tenant, I should think, if it was given in at the time ?—I cannot agree to that, because if you get a bad tenant it is generally a bad tenant who makes an unfair claim, and it is rather hard that the landlord should not be able to rebut it in any way.

51,680. Of course it cuts both ways; but as a rule where farms are put in thorough repair at the commencement of the tenancy the difficulty does not seem to be so great ?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

51,681. Then with regard to the land that you referred to in paragraph No. 15 in the Labour Commission Report, that was depreciated so much in value, it is said here, that the land has depreciated so much in value from 15*s.* an acre to 5*s.* an acre ?—Yes.

51,682. Would not that be some lowlands that had gone cold and dead, and did not grow much pasture, but which must be stirred up again when they get what you call sleepy; would it not refer to that ?—No; there is such a small proportion of low land here to hill land that there is not much chance of it going that way.

51,683. Is there a great difficulty in this neighbourhood of getting dairymaids to attend to the dairies ?—No. I think I heard you at Abergavenny make a remark that in Pembrokeshire there was a difficulty, but there seem to be plenty in the market here.

51,684. In Pembrokeshire we have great difficulty, but I think the same thing applies here, according to what is said of paragraph No. 39, I believe it is that dairying has often been given up owing to the difficulty of getting dairymaids at a reasonable wage, and that less butter and cheese is made in the district. You will find that at the bottom of No. 39. Do you consider that is not correct ?—Of course the wages have gone up tremendously, and the farmers' wives particularly kick against the extra wage.

51,685. And they give up dairying because of it ?—I do not believe that is so.

51,686. That is so according to this report ?—Yes, but I think there is as much dairying as ever, if not more.

51,687. Is there much selling of milk ?—Yes, round these watering places, of course it is a very profitable trade.

51,688. Is the butter generally good in the neighbourhood ?—No, exceedingly bad.

51,689. Is there no way of improving it, do you think ? We have found very bad butter in several places as we have come along ?—Yes. All along here, the same as at Crickhowell, they have had dairy classes, and I think they have been twice here at Builth.

51,690. Did they attend them very well ?—I believe the first was very well attended. The second I do not think was so well attended.

51,691. Then do they carry out the principles that are taught in these classes when they go home to the farms ?—On the two or three farms that I have been to they are doing it. I do not know who attended the classes here, and I cannot tell you.

51,692. I do not know whether that is the case in this neighbourhood; but we found in North Wales that they get their butter from Devonshire and other places instead of having their butter from the neighbourhood ?—There is no doubt there is a good deal of foreign butter imported here, and also English butter.

51,693. Do you not think that the people are to blame ?—Certainly.

51,694. They could make equally good butter in this neighbourhood as anywhere, could they not?—Yes, I believe quite. Those who do go in for it make a very good thing of it.

51,695. How are the dairies generally on the estates that you are connected with? Do you know much about them?—In this country, until the railways came, they had to haul their lime from Llangattock, the adjoining parish to Crickhowell, which I think is about 24 miles from here. It is a bad country for stone, or it was then, and they used the round stone in the fields, and therefore the old dairies are not good, but they have been rebuilt very generally.

51,696. Still I suppose if they are unable to get the uniformity that is required from the different farms, it is almost impossible to improve things much?—Yes, but that is the fault of the making as much as of the building.

51,697. There are some model cottages, as we might term them, built in this neighbourhood, are there not, in the place of the old thatched cottages?—Yes, there are some very nice cottages.

51,698. Do the labourers, as a rule, seem to take to those cottages? Do they like them? In our neighbourhood we found that they did not really care about them. The landlord called them in, and showed the cottages to his friends and so forth, and they did not like them, but they would sooner live in the old-fashioned cottages?—There are some instances of that, but I hope that will work round, and that they will see the benefit of it.

51,699. Quite so; it will be a great advantage to have better cottages, and the morals are sure to be better in proportion. Have you many labourer's cottages where they keep cows?—I think round the villages about here there are a great many small freeholders, and there is a good deal of land let off.

51,700. How do you find things are with regard to the children of these labourers that have been brought up in cottages. Do you not find them more useful than those that are brought up where there are no cows kept, and poultry, and so on?—Certainly they are more useful, because when they are very young they are put to begin to do the work.

51,701. Early habits?—Early habits.

51,702. Then with regard to poultry houses, have you any improvement made in poultry houses in this neighbourhood?—It is a very bad poultry country. I mean there is a lot of poultry brought in; but it seems to me badly managed.

51,703. There are not very many reared?—Yes, there are a great many chickens and geese.

51,704. Are they reared on the farm-houses or cottages?—At the farm-houses.

51,705. Is there much attention paid to the eggs?—Not as much as might be.

51,706. In another place in the report I find it stated that even the labourer is better off than many of the small farmers of the district?—I think when a labourer gets to that state of prosperity he generally is about to take a farm,

51,707. Are they inclined to save, as a rule; do they put a little money by?—Of course, they vary a great deal.

51,708. We have found in some districts that we have been in, instead of advancing they are worse off than they were before?—I have continually had applications from labourers wanting to get hold of a small farm.

51,709. I may ask you, do you think if agricultural labourers generally had cow pastures that it would be an inducement to keep them in the country instead of their going off to the towns?—Certainly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,710. You say that agricultural labourers show a desire for having land?—Yes.

51,711. We may take it that that supports the evidence which we have had continually, that there is a sort of land hunger?—Certainly there is a great demand for land.

51,712. Upon whose initiative are the abatements made on the Llysdinam estate—upon your initiative?—Some of them, but very few. They were mostly made before, and in re-arranging, some seven or eight years ago, the abatement was made when putting the tithe in with the rent. All the tenants there for some time have had the farms tithe free.

51,713. When was there a general revision of rents on this estate?—It has been purchased at various times, in 1834 and 1842, and then the next purchase was about 1862, and then in 1870. Then, I think, when it was purchased, the buildings were improved and alterations made, and a good deal of land has been taken out for planting, but the old rents at the time the property was bought, and the present rents, show a reduction.

51,714. So that there has been a good deal of alteration in the character of the farms?—Yes. Mr. Venables always lived there, and took a great interest in planting and improving the property, and there has been a good deal of alteration.

51,715. You say that in some places you have suggested an abatement?—Yes.

51,716. Had you any well-defined principle upon which you calculated what was due to a tenant by way of abatement?—The abatements that I proposed were when we re-arranged the farm, and more sheep were to be kept, and also in a case where some land required——

51,717. That would be a permanent reduction?—Yes.

51,718. I am talking about abatements, not the reduction?—Mr. Venables settled himself what abatement he would give. I think he has generally given about the same as the adjoining landowners.

51,719. Was Mr. Venables acquainted with the nature of farming?—Well, he had farmed himself for 60 years, and I think he knew a great deal about it. He was a great judge of horses.

51,720. Have you suggested any abatements yourself?—You mean such as 5 per cent. and 10 per cent.?

51,721. Yes?—We generally discussed the matter together as to what was desirable; but the abatements were given more in sympathy than as trying to arrive at any actual variation in the price of the markets.

51,722. Do you think that by making a 5 per cent. abatement you have recognised sufficiently the present depression in agriculture?—Yes, because farms are let at a low rate, and the tenants all pay on the rent day, and they seem perfectly satisfied.

51,723. Of course, you will admit this—that the cost of production is much greater now than it was 30 years ago?—Certainly.

51,724. Do you think that was taken into calculation when the abatements were made?—Well, the price of stock is higher in proportion is it not, too?

51,725. Not higher than it was 20 years ago. Of course, possibly the prices may have been abnormal during the period from 1872 to 1876, but they were much higher then than they are now. That is so, is it not?—Of course, the prices were higher, and as to labour, one balanced the other—labour was just as dear in this district at the time you mention.

51,726. Was it?—Yes, in 1876.

51,726A. It was not in Montgomeryshire. I may say this, that labour has never been higher there than what it is at the present time?—Here there has been rather a turn down in the labour. It was very high two years ago.

51,727. Independently of the labour, the farmers have to treat their servants better too, have they not?—Oh, yes. I think the working class, by reason of education and so on, are more particular how they are treated.

51,728. Are the sheep valued, as a rule, between the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant at a higher price than the market price?—Yes. Many of them have a fixed price in their agreements—18*s.* to 1*l.* per head.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,729. When were the permanent reductions given. You said since 1877, do you know the dates of the permanent reductions?—They were given about 1886 and 1885, I think, some of them.

51,730. Would that be then in addition to abatements which have been mentioned as being given in those years?—Yes, abatements are given also.

51,731. The difference between the two being that the reductions are permanent, and the abatement is for one year or half a year?—A half year.

51,732. I observe that for a series of years—from 1885 to 1888, four consecutive years—abatements were given?—Yes.

51,733. Do you know whether the tenants were enabled upon a series of abatements to go to the assessment committee and obtain a reduction of their assessment?—No, it was refused.

51,734. It was applied for?—It was applied for and refused.

51,735. That is what I want to know. There has been a different custom in different unions, and in some places it has been granted, and in others not. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act understood by the tenants in this country?—I think it is understood by those who have taken the trouble to look at it at all.

51,736. Do you think there are many who have taken the trouble to look at it?—I think that they have an idea that it does exist, but they prefer their old custom.

51,737. Is the machinery of the Act expensive?—Yes, more expensive than they care for.

51,738. And the custom of their own country is not?—It is not.

51,739. You also stated one thing which was a little interesting. Can you give any explanation why it was that the Parliamentary sanction for this Blue Book antedates the visit of Mr. Chapman?—No, that is a mystery to me.

51,740. Quite a mystery?—Quite a mystery.

51,741. Probably it is some error in dates?—No, no error in dates.

51,742. You have no explanation for it?—No, except there is a subsequent letter at the beginning. At page 35 you see Mr. Lleufer Thomas added a letter or a memorandum on Mr. Chapman's Builth Report, which explained it. It came in while the document was in print.

51,743. How does that bear upon it. There is no date to it?—It begins, "Since the above "Report was submitted."

51,744. Yes, quite so. With regard to the date printed upon the fly sheet, "Presented to "both Houses of Parliament in February 1893," it is suggested that the report was presented in "dummy" form at that time?—I suppose so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,745. Do you find that there is a want of capital amongst the tenants in the neighbourhood about here?—Yes.

51,746. Of course if that is the case the farmers are not able to make the best of the land, I take it?—No, I think that there is a hunger for land. They very often take a farm before they are strong enough to do so.

51,747. Do you think that the preferential claim for rent is responsible for this?—Oh, no.

51,748. Does it not strike you that the landlord would exercise greater discretion in the selection of a tenant if the preferential claim for rent were abolished?—No, I do not see that at all. In what way?

51,749. Because you see he could not claim afterwards, only as an ordinary creditor, in case the tenant become a bankrupt?—Our rents are due in March, and as a matter of fact we do not collect them till the beginning of August, to give the tenants the chance of selling their stock. If the preferential claim were done away with, we should have to collect our rents when they are due.

51,750. If you collected them when they were due, you would exercise greater care in the selection of your tenant, or else you would require some security?—We use every care we can now in selecting tenants. If tenants would be more businesslike in stating what their financial position really is, it would be better. That is where the difficulty is: it is so hard to get a man to say really what money he has got. and who is going to help him.

51,751. Yes; but under any circumstances you can claim one year's rent, you say?—Yes; but that is because we give them such long credit. It does not affect the selection of tenants at all. It is the other end of the tenancy it affects.

Lord Kenyon.

51,752. The power of claiming a year's rent would be no compensation for bad farming, would it?—Not at all.

51,753. You would lose more money than that by a bad tenant?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

51,754. As to the reading rooms, you have mentioned in different villages, are they what you properly termed public reading rooms; are they not attached to something else?—I cannot speak for them all, but I speak for Newbridge-on-Wye; the room adjoins the "Wyvern," which was a public house; the license was taken away, and it was turned into a coffee tavern, and a room was built at a cost of about 300*l.* The committee, consisting of men in the village, manage it, and three of them are trustees appointed, and they pay us 1s. a year rent. Then they have games, and the library is there, but the library is carried on by some small subscription; it is carried on in the room separately, and there are newspapers.

51,755. I mean to say, is it a general thing, not confined to any political creed?—No; certainly not; politics or religious matters are not concerned with it.

Lord Kenyon.

51,756. There are some questions put by Mr. Lee: "Are tenants expected to do haulage "for landlord's improvements, such as build-"ings and drainage?"—Yes.

51,757. "Are they paid for doing it?"—No.

51,758. "Do landlords charge interest on "improvements?"—Very rarely that I know of.

51,759. "In the case of free haulage, do the "tenants object?"—Very seldom; and of course if a tenant hauls just before he leaves his farm, he is compensated for it when he leaves.

51,760. "Have any refused to haul?"—Oh, yes: sometimes they have objected.

51,761. "What is the effect of such refusal?" —In every case that they have refused we have made some arrangement. If there is a good reason, that they are in difficulty about horses, sometimes I have met them and done part of the hauling for them, or put off the repairs till it is more convenient to them. It has caused no trouble.

51,762. "Have there been any applications "for allotments on the estate you represent. If "so, to what extent?"—None at Newbridge in connexion with Llysdinam, because there are a good many fields there. As to the Glanusk estate, you had that information from Sir Joseph Bailey, at Crickhowell.

51,763. "To the best of your knowledge, have "the landowners given every facility to their "tenants to come forward and give evidence "before this Commission?"—I have at all the rent audits for the last year and a half asked the tenants to come forward, and I have done all I could to bring them forward.

51,764. "What is the general condition of "the dwellings and out-buildings?"—In Brecknockshire, I think, they bear very fair comparison with other counties, and during the last 20 years there has been great improvement.

51,765. "Is the sanitary condition favour-"able?"—In some cases improvements might be made, but there is nothing unreasonable one way or the other.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Aeron Thomas called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See evidence of next witness.

51,766. You are Mr. Aeron Thomas, solicitor, of 18, York Place, Swansea?—I am.

51,767. You wish to give evidence with regard to what?—In the first place I wish to give evidence (and hence my attending at this place) with regard to the dealings of Mr. Campbell Davys, of Llanwrtyd, in the county of Brecon. I intended giving my evidence at Llanwrtyd, but you did not sit there, so I have come here, the nearest place. I may tell you that I have given Mr. Campbell Davys information that I was coming here, as I was going to say some things that he might have a desire to answer.

51,768. You have a statement?—I have a statement which has been sent to you. I do not think I can do better than read it out.

51,769. Yes, will you kindly read it?—"I "propose to tender evidence respecting the re- "lationships which exist between Mr. R. Camp- "bell Davys, of Neuaddfawr, near Llandovery "(who is the owner of an extensive estate at "and near Llanwrtyd), and his tenants. My "evidence will deal with facts tending to show "(1) that the terms of the leases granted by "Mr. Campbell Davys and his late father (the "previous owner of the estate) are unfair and "oppressive."

51,770. Have you a copy of the agreement?—I have one of them. You will see that I have some paragraphs under the heading "Post office and premises at Llanwrtyd." I do not intend to say anything about that; it might prejudice the gentleman who acted at one time, and I have not his full consent to say anything about it. So that there is one part of this statement which I wish with your permission to withdraw. I shall first deal with the Dolcoed farm and hotel. Here is the original lease in this case (handing same) and here is the lease of the Berthlwyd farm (handing same). You will find in the lease of Berthlwyd that the tenant is not allowed to assign, underlet, or have any dealings whatever with the property without the consent of his landlord. The landlord has absolute control over the matter. Although that is a common clause, perhaps, in many leases, still any man that looks at it from a logical point of view must see that for the landlord to be able absolutely to say what the tenant is to do with his land is a great hardship, and I will prove to you in this instance how it has worked a hardship. Then I say in my statement:—"(2.) That Mr. "Campbell Davys habitually uses the penal "clauses contained in such leases for purposes of "oppression and extortion." As to that I will bring cases before you. "(3.) That Mr. Camp- "bell Davys habitually uses his position as "exclusive owner of land as a means of extort- "ing unfair means from his tenants, and by "threats of expensive litigation and consequent "ruin debars them from resisting his unjust "claims"—that is from having the benefit of whatever rights they have. I became aware of these facts through having acted as solicitor for some of the unfortunate tenants. I pass over the post office case and I will come to Dolcoed farm. You have had evidence from time to time before you that the penal clauses in the leases, the hard clauses in the leases, are not enforced. In this instance you will find that they were enforced. "These premises were let "on lease for 21 years from 29th September "1871 at a rent of 200*l.* or so to one Benjamin "Jones, who died a little over two years ago. "After the death of the tenant his widow re- "mained in occupation of the premises, and con- "ducted the business until the expiration of the "lease in September 1892. Just previously to "this, Mr. Campbell Davys served on Mrs. "Jones a notice to repair, which was over 100 "folios in length" (I do not know whether you understand what is meant by a folio; it is 72 words) "and required compensation amounting "to 494*l.* 10*s.* A copy of which I sent in. He "sought to charge the tenants nearly 60*l.* for "the cost of this schedule of repairs." Now, under an Act passed two years ago the landlord now is entitled to charge for the cost of the surveyor whom he sends to see whether the place is in repair or not. This schedule cost I do not know exactly whether it was 54*l.* or 55*l.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,771. Which Act are you referring to?—An Act amending the Relief to Tenants Act.

51,772. Section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is the ruling Act?—Yes; there is no provision there that the landlord shall be entitled to the cost of inspection. An Act was passed two years ago giving that. In this instance a gentleman is sent to Llanwrtyd from London to examine these premises and the charge for that is 54*l.* odd. "Mr. David Jenkins, of Swansea, "made a careful inspection of the premises on "behalf of the tenant, and certified that it would "only cost 126*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.* to put the whole of the "premises into first class repair (that is a state "of repair of a much better kind than a reason- "able landlord could require at the termination "of a long tenancy). A copy of his certificate "I forwarded to the secretary. Mr. Campbell "Davys was informed by letter that Mr. Jones "had left his family very badly off and that if he "brought any action a plea of plene admini- "stravit would be substantiated and was also "informed that the tenant's surveyor had in- "spected the premises and of the purport of his "report, and he settled the case on payment of "120*l.* by the widow, stating that he had a fur- "ther claim of a few shillings of tithe which he "should insist upon. He subsequently stated that "he had taken all she had, and that if she had "more he would have taken that. He is now "enlarging the Dolcoed Hotel." If the repairs had been done they would be practically useless, because the whole thing is pulled down and the house is completely remodelled. So the 120*l.* he gets nett into his pocket, and he would have been nothing better if the place had been in a good state of repair. Now, as to the Neuadd farm property. A copy of this lease I produce (handing same), and particular attention is drawn to its clauses. The quantity of ground, I think, is about a third of an acre or something like that. "Mr. Rhys Jones, the tenant, erected "on the land houses of the approximate value "of 2,500*l.*, and with the consent of Mr. Camp- "bell Davys, the elder (the lessor) one of these "was specially built for the purposes of a hotel, "and called the 'Neuadd Arms'." The name of his own house with the coat of arms of Mr.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Campbell Davys above the door, and it stood there for over 20 years. "The name and sign "were agreed to by the lessor; Mr. Campbell "Davys, the younger, after the death of the "tenant, tried to get the widow to enter into "fresh arrangements by which he would have "been enabled to take away the license from "the house, and actually did get her to sign a "certain deed by means, it is alleged, of fraudu-"lent devices and undue influence. She was "at this time the owner also of a lease of "premises known as Berthlwyd farm, to which "allusion is made later on, and in order to "force her to his terms about the Neuadd pro-"perty he commenced an action against her in "respect of Berthlwyd, of which particulars "follow." That is the next farm I talk to you about. "Mrs. Jones died in March 1892, "and in March 1893 Mr. Campbell Davys "served a notice preliminary to suing an eject-"ment (pursuant to the Conveyancing Act) and "to which was annexed a schedule of repairs "alleged requiring to be done to the premises. "A copy of this schedule has been sent in, it is "110 folios in length, and the notice of alleged "breaches of covenants required compensation "to the amounts of 2,000*l.* and 52*l.* 10*s.* respec-"tively to be made for the alleged breaches. "All necessary repairs had been previously done "and the premises were in good condition, but "in June 1893, Mr. Campbell Davys commenced "an action against all the parties interested in "the property to break the lease, and laid the "venue in Bristol." That I want to lay stress upon because if he had laid the venue in the county where the property is situated we could have had the jury to examine it. He laid it in Bristol, and because of the date it was impossible that we could get it changed anywhere but to Swansea, but they absolutely refused to have any inspection by the jury. All we wanted was for the jury to see what they were to decide upon.

51,773. Do you think the fact that the jury could not get a view was the only reason why Mr. Campbell Davys wished not to have a jury in the county?—Well, I cannot read Mr. Campbell Davys' reasons, but I tell you this that he laid the venue in Bristol. He lived at Llanwrtyd; all the parties lived at Llanwrtyd or Swansea, and still he goes to Bristol to lay his venue for the purpose of bringing the action, and he had ample time to get it tried at Brecon if he liked. Of course, I cannot read Mr. Campbell Davys' mind so far as that goes. "The "premises were inspected on behalf of the "tenants by Mr. W. J. Rees of Swansea, who is "agent for many large estates and has had "vast experience, by Mr. W. Watkins, J.P., late "of the firm of Thomas Watkins and Jenkins, "builders and contractors, Swansea, whose "practical experience is equal to that of any "man in the country, and by Mr. T. P. Martin "of Swansea, architect and surveyor, and "Mr. John Jenkins of the firm of Jenkins & Sons, "builders, Swansea. These gentlemen all stated "that the property was in good tenantable

"repair. A copy of Mr. Rees's evidence given "after careful inspection of the premises is sent "herewith."

51,774. Was the case fought?—No, I explain that in a minute. This action was set down for trial at the Swansea Assizes last year, together with the action next referred to and disposed of as mentioned later on.

51,775. The case was settled, I understand?—Yes, settled, and I will give you the reason why it was settled. Remember that I have given notice to Mr. Campbell Davys to be here.

51,776. I do not think you ought to give us the evidence that you were prepared to give in support of your client's case at the assizes, because if we receive that evidence, Mr. Campbell Davys might ask us to receive the proofs of all his witnesses?—I only say that it is here if the Commissioners desire to see it.

51,777. But you see my point?—Oh, quite so.

51,778. All we want from a solicitor of experience like yourself, is your opinion with regard to the existing state of the law in regard to the relation of landlord and tenant as you come to speak upon that branch of the matter. Of course, if you could refer to anything striking or peculiar in these actions, as you have hitherto in your evidence done, well and good; but with regard to this particular action, I think if we were to receive the proofs that were in your brief, we could not refuse to receive the proofs in Mr. Campbell Davys' brief especially as there was a compromise of the matter between the parties?—I may tell you this much. I say this at the end of my remarks with regard to Mr. Campbell Davys. I regret that the Commissioners do not intend sitting at Llanwrtyd, as I had hoped they would have inspected the premises alluded to and formed their own opinion as to their condition.

51,779. My Lord and the other Commissioners do not in the least mean to stop you from giving us the admitted facts of the case, but do not be too particular about going into the proofs in that case?—Very well, sir.

51,780. I mean we cannot try an action that has been settled?—Certainly, but I was going to say this much to the Commission. I want to show that there are landlords—but there are very few I am glad to say—who do exact the letter and abuse the right that they have.

51,781. As I understand it, you say that the fact that you wish to bring before us is that Mr. Davys' two leases that are produced here are very much like others we have seen at Llandovery, they are very stringent, and at the end of the tenancy in two cases he has taken the most expensive legal proceedings that he could in order to maintain his strict legal rights?—Yes, it comes to that pretty well, but not quite at the end of the tenancy. In the case of Dolcoed it is at the end of the tenancy. In the case of the "Llanwrtyd Arms" there were 28 years expired of the tenancy.

51,782. That was taking advantage of the forfeiture clause?—Taking advantage of the forfeiture clause, and that is by reason of keeping the house as a public-house, and by means I say of unblushing devices and scheming he got these people into his hands because he is a big man, and they trusted to his honour. I will give you an example of a letter that he writes, and afterwards he gets them to sign documents:—"Dear Mrs. Jones,—Your letter was "quite satisfactory, and I will when I next "visit Llanwrtyd take the papers I wish you "to sign to John Price for his approval. Nothing "will, of course, be done to injure your interest "in anything, and indeed, yours and mine are "pretty well the same." That is, he wanted to make the right of giving that public-house to be a yearly one. There are other documents here which will show the ingeniousness of the man, and the drift of his mind. I should like Mr. Brynmor Jones, as he is versed and learned in the law, to read the last two clauses in that document (handing a document to the learned Commissioner).

51,783. This is endorsed, "Mrs. Anne Jones and "Mr. John Price to R. Campbell Davys, Esq. "Request for grant of consent or license to use "a messuage demised by lease of 23rd May 1861, "as a public-house or inn." You wish me to read clauses 4 and 5 at the end?—Fortunately, that document was not signed. I wish you to run your eye over all the clauses at the end.

Lord Kenyon.

51,784. Was this prepared by Mr. Campbell Davys or his solicitor?—Yes, and sent to her, knowing that she had a solicitor—they were sent to her herself, trying to get her surreptitiously to sign it by fawning—pretending to be her friend, and that their interests were identical and trying to get her to sign these things.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,785. "1. If the said Richard Campbell "Davys shall consent to accept such surrender "and grant such consent or license as aforesaid "or any modification thereof they the under-"signed Anne Jones and John Price will pay "the rent reserved by the said Indenture of "the 27th day of February 1886 up to the date "of such new consent or license as aforesaid "and during the continuance of such new con-"sent or license pay in respect thereof the "annual rent of 5*l.* by equal half-yearly pay-"ments free from all deductions except property-"tax." There is nothing wrong about that?—Well, it is in this way, that he converts the thing into an annual one. We allege that before that it was during the term of the lease, because it is a well-known principle of law that if you build a house suitable for a particular business although it is against the covenants if the landlord allows it to be done he is bound by that: he cannot blow hot and cold.

51,786. Then the second is, "That the said "Richard Campbell Davys shall stand and be

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

"absolutely released discharged and indemnified "from and against all costs charges and ex-"penses of the said Anne Jones of and incident "to the said action of Campbell Davys v. Jones" ——?—That is an action that he brought to break the lease because he tried to prove that she had assigned without his license; and he tried to take away from her a ten years' lease worth about 100*l.* a year on that pretext.

51,787. "And from all claims and demands "on account thereof and if anything shall have "been paid by or on account of such costs "charges and expenses that the amount so paid "shall be repaid on or before the execution of "such new consent or license" Then 3. "That "upon that the determination by any means or "by reason of such new consent or license the "current Excise license for the said inn or public-"house shall forthwith be transferred to the "said Richard Campbell Davys or his nominee?" I want to draw your attention to that. He takes away the property that was belonging to this house and takes it anywhere else he thinks proper. It is not that he objects on principle to the public-house, but he wants the license himself.

51,788. "4. That the undersigned Anne Jones "and John Price will execute such deed or instru-"ment as shall be prepared by the said Richard "Campbell Davys or his advisers for the pur-"pose of carrying out such surrender and grant "of a new consent or license and securing the "due performance and observance of the con-"dition upon which such new consent or license "is requested to be granted and that the under-"signed Anne Jones and John Price will on or "before the execution of such new consent or "license pay and discharge all the costs charges "and expenses including counsel's fees of and "incident to the preparation and execution of "such deed or instrument." Then "5. That "whether surrender as aforesaid shall be accepted "or such consent or license as aforesaid be "granted or not"——?—It is not "granted" simply, mind you.

51,789. "That whether surrender as aforesaid "shall be accepted or such consent or license as "aforesaid be granted or not the undersigned "Anne Jones and John Price will upon demand "pay the costs charges and expenses of and "incident to the preparation of this document "including counsel's fee for settling same?"—He takes care of the counsel.

51,790. What was the consideration for this?—That is a mysterious thing. He wanted them to do that because he wanted to take away the license there and then. The consideration that he granted was that he would entertain their application favourably, according to my interpretation of it, and that he would allow them to be there as a yearly tenant as far as the public-house is concerned. He does not break the lease, mind you. I do not charge him with that then.

Lord Kenyon.

51,791. This man Price had a lease?—Mrs. Jones had the lease. She was the widow of a person who really was the making of Llanwrtyd. I am making that bold statement, that really he was the man who above all others was making Llanwrtyd; he was making himself very likely also, but still he was the pioneer of the place. Yet Mr. Campbell Davys and Mr. Rhys Jones look upon themselves as her friends and they write to one another "Dear Mrs. Jones," and so on. Here is a letter that I will read. I do not say that there is anything very objectionable about it, but still if you read between the lines it means something. There are several letters here, "Dear. Mrs. Jones"; "My dear Mr. Price"; "Dear. Mrs. Jones"; "My dear Mrs. Jones"; and then this letter here is, "Dr. Sir,—My man Daniel "tells me that you wish me to write to the "railway company upon some subject connected "with land held by you from your uncle and "landlord Mr. Rhys Jones, late of Llanwrtyd" (that was Mr. Rhys Jones the tenant of Mr. Campbell Davys who writes this letter, and he was the landlord of Mr. Price) "I decline doing "anything in the matter, but I daresay if you "write to Mr. Maitland" (that is underlined), "who is a director, I believe, I do not doubt he "will readily assist you as you assisted him in "the candidature of his son for the county of "Brecon." He asked his landlord to help him with the railway company in something and he declines to do it and says, "Go to Mr. Maitland "whom you assisted in his candidature for the "county of Brecon." I do not say the man has no right to do it, but I am only showing the relations between these people. For sometime it is "My dear." and next time it is "Dr. Sir."

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,792. But was there not some other quarrel involved in all this, a question about boundaries of land or something?—No. I am positively informed, mind I am only giving hearsay evidence, but to the best of my investigation there was no question at all between them.

51,793. Was there not some other question between them?—Not at this time and not afterwards as far as I am aware.

51,794. I think there was?—Oh, you mean with regard to the boundary land of this Neuadd Arms Hotel.

51,795. Yes?—There was a small boundary question there; but that came long after this letter.

51,796. It was not then?—No.

51,797. I fancied there was some other question as to a boundary?—Yes, there was another question. He got them first of all to pay 1*s.* a year for trespassing on a small corner of ground; the people thought it was 1*s.* a year to run concurrent with the lease. Afterwards he brings his action and says "I am to break the lease on "account of that"; and there were two or three other questions in the same way. I know that it is a difficult and rather ticklish thing to bring forward these things, but——

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,798. This is what you give by way of illustration of Mr. Campbell Davys' method; that is the way you use this?—That is so. I do not say that this is anything wrong as between two business men one standing aloof from the other.

51,799. What was the age of Mrs. Anne Jones?—She was about 75.

51,800. And what was the age of Mr. John Price?—He was a youngish man, not much at business.

51,801. Was he any relation of Mrs. Anne Jones?—A nephew or some such relation, I believe he was a nephew.

51,802. Then as a solicitor do you say that if Mrs. Anne Jones had consented to this it would have been very foolish under all the circumstances?—It would have been perfectly ruinous for her because the license of this house is worth at least 1,000*l.* The house is built for the purpose. It is a large house; not a big hotel, but a large public-house. According to the best evidence I have on the matter that license is worth 1,000*l.* at least.

51,803. And the point is that Mr. Campbell Davys goes and asks this old lady to make a most improvident bargain?—That is to say, taking advantage of his position.

51,804. Taking advantage of what?—Taking advantage of his position in a surreptitious roundabout way. I had been acting for her before, and he never submitted that to me. I acted in that very action where he wanted to get the costs against her.

51,805. And he knew that you were her solicitor?—He did. It is not once or twice that he did that. Now I will just read a little further. I shall not go through the whole of this with regard to the different things, but I want to say this, that ultimately this action was compromised; we paid him an extra 10*l.* a year for her being allowed to retain the license of that house for the whole term. We gave up the Berthlwyd farm altogether to him; there were four years unexpired; so that really these people in litigation and otherwise have paid 1,000*l.* It is true enough that Mr. Campbell Davys offered pretty well the same terms before commencing that action as he accepted at the last. It is right that I should say so. He offered the same terms pretty well, but there were about 15 people involved in the matter, and we could not get them at once, and of course we thought Mr. Campbell Davys would never try to do such a thing. The reason we did it at last is this. I put it down here, so that I may read it to you: "Rather than pro-"ceed with the action, as Mr. Campbell Davys "informed them and me, that although he knew "the action would go against him at Swansea he "would spend 3,000*l.* and even 5,000*l.* in appeal-"ing, if necessary, to the House of Lords, as he "was determined to crush"—I do not say that he used the word "crush," but he would make them bend rather than he would allow them to have any other terms from him. "These and

" other statements of a similar character made " by Mr. Campbell Davys to me in the presence " of witnesses were to the effect that he was " determined to have his own way with his " tenants, that he was a rich man, whilst they " were not rich"; he used repeatedly the words; he did not blush at it. He said boldly, "Now " that license on the 'Neuadd Arms' is detri- " mental to me, and I will tell you why." He said, "I own two other public-houses in the " village, and if you take away that license I " will get more custom in my two public- " houses"; and he had a witness ready, so I am told, to prove that he was prepared to pay 10*l.* more for one of the houses, and hence he comes to us and says you must pay more. "That " he himself owned two public-houses, namely, " the Dolcoed and Bellevue at Llanwrtyd, and " that he was determined to benefit these pro- " perties at whatever cost. Mr. Campbell Davys " through his counsel opposed an application for " an order for the jury to view the premises in " question." After it was compromised he would not allow the tenant of Berthlwyd to sell her furniture in the house. He compelled her to take them outside and sell them on the lawn. The house is still vacant and empty.

51,806. You have no objection to the pleadings of the action and the terms of settlement being put in?—Not at all; on the contrary.

51,807. Mr. Vincent thinks it is only fair to Mr. Campbell Davys that there should be no ambiguity about the terms of settlement?—Oh, no, there are none. I do not want to hide anything. All I can say is that these were oppressive proceedings admittedly taken, not because there were any breaches of covenant for which he had any particular complaint, but he wanted an ulterior object; he objected to Mrs. Jones trying to let the place, not because he objected to the tenant at all, but he simply said, "I want to get that land back for myself. " Mrs. Jones makes so much profit by it that I " want to get it back for myself, and I do not " want under tenants of this place."

51,808. In your experience as a solicitor the majority of landlords would not have been advised to proceed in an action of ejectment under those circumstances?—I say so.

51,809. But Mr. Campbell Davys seeing a possible profit from the suppression of the license of this house, regardless of whether he had any chance in the action at all, went on in order to see whether he could not remove this license in some way?—That is so, and as he said he wanted to get his tenants to be bounden to him, and the same thing with regard to the license to assign, I want particularly to point that out to you. I have known a good many small landlords who have abused their power, but I have never known, except in this instance of Mr. Campbell Davys, of large landlords doing so.

Lord Kenyon.

51,810. Are these the terms of settlement (handing a document to witness)?—I have not the least doubt they are; but I cannot remember exactly.

51,811. If they are, will you read them?

"1. Both actions to be settled upon the following terms:—

"2. Plaintiff will grant license to use 'Neuadd Arms' as licensed premises in same manner as now licensed for residue of term.

"3. Plaintiff will grant lease of encroachment (as defined in plan prepared by Mr. J. M. Davies) to defendant Thomas Price and Jane Price for residue of term of lease of premises the subject matter of the action at an annual rent of one shilling, the lease to contain mutatis mutandis the same provisions as the lease above mentioned. The scale costs of the lessors solicitors of preparation of lease of encroachment not exceeding 5*l.* to be paid by the lessee.

"4. The defendants other than Jane Price to enter into a joint and several covenant that they will transfer lease to plaintiff all licences upon premises for sale of beer, wine, or spirits at expiration of term. In case of difference the form of covenant to be settled by the conveyancing counsel of the court.

"5. The defendants other than Jane Price to enter into a covenant to pay an additional yearly rent of 10*l.* as a consideration for the license mentioned in No. 2, such rent to be secured upon the licensed premises in the same manner as the rent reserved by the original lease. As between defendants the 10*l.* to be paid by parties entitled to the 'Neuadd Arms,' but this in no way to prejudice the plaintiff's rights.

"6. The defendants in second-mentioned action will forthwith execute surrender of lease, under which premises the subject matter of that action are held from the plaintiff. The surrender to be prepared at the expense of plaintiff, but perused and executed at the expense of defendants. The plaintiff will take subject to existing sub-tenancies.

"7. Each party will pay their own costs of both actions.

"8. Plaintiff releases defendants in second-mentioned action against claims under lease of 12th February 1870.

"9. Defendants in first-mentioned action will do such repairs to premises subject matter thereof as may be considered necessary by Mr. J. M. Davies, of Froodvale, within five months.

10. "The defendants in second-mentioned action to be at liberty to retain possession of the uncut hayfields comprised in lease of premises to 1st September.

"11. Defendants in second-mentioned action to forego all claims under Agricultural Holdings Acts.

"12. Defendants in second-mentioned action to hand over lease subject matter thereof to plaintiff.

"13. No costs to be paid to plaintiff's solicitor other than those provided for in clause 3. No costs whatever to be paid to defendants by plaintiff."

Now having said so much about Mr. Campbell Davys and his dealings, I wish to make a few remarks that I have prepared for myself. "I wish to supplement my evidence "as sent you on the 5th instant by giving "my impressions and opinions based on "personal experience and observation. I may, "in the first place, state" (I say this to prove that I am vain enough to think my opinion is worth something) "that I am the son of a "tenant farmer, and worked on the farm for "over three years from 15 years of age upwards, and were it not for the election of "1868, when such tyranny was displayed by "many landlords and a greater number of petty "agents, it is probable that I should be a "farmer, as my father up to this time believed "it the best calling (in which, notwithstanding "the necessary hard work, I agreed with him) "he would not hear of my being anything else. "The pressure put on him at this election and "the ill-treatment of many tenants throughout "the district directed my mind in another "channel, and my father in time consented to "my leaving the farm for the law. I have "ever since taken an interest in farming, and "am always glad to have a chat with farmers on "agricultural matters. I own two holdings, "and am interested in more, and have many "clients and some near connections that own a "good deal of land.

"Speaking generally, I am of opinion that it "is more desirable and beneficial to be a tenant "on a good large holding under a good landlord, such as Lord Cawdor or Miss Talbot, "than to own and cultivate an indifferent farm. "I think that nine out of every ten of those "that own large and extensive landed property "have a desire to deal justly and honourably "with their tenants, and among the small landlords the same may be said of four out of five, "but in many instances that desire is more or "less nullified, and I give reasons.

"1. It is often the case that the landlord and "tenant cannot converse, and hence the tenant "is not able to make his wants clearly understood, and the landlord does not get into full "sympathy with his tenant, which is a hardship on both, but the weaker suffers the "more." I may add there I found that of my own experience. My father was tenant of an excellent landlord, Mr. Lloyd, of Nantgwyllt; he was a man who could speak Welsh, and converse in Welsh freely. My father was a monoglot Welshman. The son of Mr. Lloyd was a monoglot Englishman, and he could not speak in Welsh, and when he came to the farm my father could never make him understand exactly, and there was not the same feeling that there was between the father as there was between the old Mr. Lloyd and the tenant.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,812. Your family are the owners of that land now, I believe, are they not?—Well, it happens to be so. My brother has bought a considerable amount of property in Cardiganshire. I am not a tenant's man any more than I am a landlord's. I try to be impartial if I can.

"2. The landlord sometimes is a good-natured and careless man who leaves all to his agent, who in many and most cases is not, and even cannot be, as lenient and favourable to the tenant as when the good landlord comes into direct contact with his tenant, and in some such instances the agent is a bad lot, and then woe betide the poor tenant.

"3. In other cases, and there are many, the landlord is a good and honourable man, but he selects his agent not for his knowledge of farming, sympathy with farmers, and kindliness of heart, but because he is a smart and sharp man of business, who will keep up, and maybe increase, the rent roll, and conduct matters without giving the landlord any trouble. These agents drive such awe and terror into the hearts of the tenants, who practically know not their landlord, and who in turn is looked upon as a cypher, and the agent is the squire in all but name.

"4. The church and parson influence is detri-"mental in many cases." I happened to live once in North Wales with a parson for a week, and when he and the squire of the parish had a glass of grog together, the talk among them was to find out which way the leanings of the tenants were, and afterwards to do something with them. I will allow you to judge what.

"5. The last and most frequent cause that the desire of the landlord is nullified is a financial one, and the landlord is driven to exact hard terms from his tenants as he is not his own master. He would if he could accept "reasonable rent and do repairs, and not sell "his estate along with the tenant's improve-"ments, but his mortgagees and the money "lenders dictate, and he has to obey and the "tenants suffer." I know many of those cases, the nicest and the most genuine man out, and who would do anything for their tenants if they could, but they cannot. "Before attempting to "show a remedy, I wish to draw your attention "to the hard, oppressive, and restrictive clauses "and covenants the good landlords are putting "into their agreements. Those practically can-"not be carried out, and the landlords seldom "try to enforce them; still they have a very "bad effect on the tenant, because—

(a.) "He knows he has signed to do what he "does not intend to," more than he can do, and he relies upon the leniency of his landlord.

(b.) "He knows that he is in the power of "his landlord.

(c.) "He has to play the hypocrite when "called to account." He is asked, "Why "don't you do so and so," and he pleads that he did not know, and things of that sort.

"Beyond all this these stringent agreements "become customary things, and are adopted by

" the best landlords who enforce them on their " tenants, and I have had many cases brought " under my notice where purchasers from the " landlords strictly enforce their agreements." Gentlemen, it is nothing uncommon that the purchaser is a new man who comes in and says, " I know not Joseph," and he goes for him. " I " wish, however, to say that amongst large " owners and their heirs Mr. Campbell Davys " stands alone as the only one that has enforced " these claims to the letter, and has used every " means that a cunning mind could devise to " oppress and tyrannise over his tenants, and " then gloat over his wily ways and means. I " am told that there is one chance of softening " that individual, i.e., by selling their indepen- " dence and flattering to him, and so outbidding " him in deceit," by selling their independence and getting on the dust before him and flattering him, and outbidding him in deceit, pretending to be what they are not. If you are manly about it, and stand face to face with him, he wants to crush you, but if you come down it is all right. That is what I mean to say. " The " law does not allow landlords to break leases." I just refer to that; it is in writing, and I will not waste your time about it, but I should like you to recommend that the expenses of this surveying on behalf of the landlord should be restricted to, say, one year's rent. " Again, I " hope you will recommend that licenses to " assign shall not be unreasonably withheld." I have nothing against licenses to assign. I have nothing against the landlord choosing his tenant, but I think licenses to assign should not be unreasonably withheld as in the case of Llanwrtyd and many other cases I have had to deal with.

51,813. Are not these words usually included?—They are very often, but unfortunately there is this. I am now taking leases from Lord Cawdor, and I take them cheerfully because I know Lord Cawdor is a gentleman, and his agents are gentlemen. I have no hesitation whatever in taking them; mining leases I am referring to now: but if that farm was to be sold to a sharper who would come and enforce the agreements it would be pretty well the ruin of any man who holds under them. I have most abundant faith in the gentlemen of our country, as they are generally called, but when sales take place and the land gets into the hands of other people woe and betide the people they come in contact with, and hence I say that we want some remedy. " The money " expended over these licenses in Swansea alone " is appalling." I make that statement. " My " firm for the last 10 years has paid over 1,000*l.* " and to no purpose, save to fee the agents of " the landlords."

Now, I come to rather questionable grounds I have been telling you facts in the past I hope; now I am coming to my own opinion. " Free- " dom of contract between landlord and tenant " in the abstract sounds well, but as the parties " are not on an equal footing it has been found " not workable, and it is desirable for the " country at large that some feasible and rea- " sonable solution should be found so as to " encourage large capitalists to invest their " spare money and receive, as heretofore, small " interest with the goodwill of their tenants, as " well as to give the tenant the land at a fair " rent with fixity of tenure, so that he may be " protected from the bad landlord, the un- " scrupulous agent, and last, but not least, the " land jobber, and to encourge the tenant in " following, to my mind, the finest employment " on earth, and thus protect both sides from the " agitator who thrives in the ratio he succeeds " in keeping the tenant and landlord at enmity." Now, it is no use in the remedies to make a tardy concession. We must go to the root of the evil and give something that will give satisfaction to the country, and place the landlord and the tenant on such a footing that they are independent to some extent, or, as far as possible, of one another, and still injure neither. " In the first place, I think the selection of " gentlemen as distinguished from sharp men as " agents very important. They should cer- " tainly be specially trained and should not be " too much engaged in other vocations, as they " should have time to reason with and hear the " complaints of the tenants, who are now often " treated as semi-serfs." What is the good of appointing a man who has no time to talk to a tenant? When the tenant goes to him he is just dismissed, not with a smile, but with a frown very often. " I am against land becoming the " property of the State or of local corporations, " and my experience of the Swansea Corporation " is that men elected on political or local topics " would make bad and miserable landlords, and " I do not like public officials who would have " their under hirelings ad infinitum, and thus " create a system under which corruption would " be courted" and encouraged. That is my experience of public officials who have any jurisdiction, or, as it were, any discretion. " I " wish to interfere as little as possible with the " freedom of contract, but the tenants should " have fixity of tenure with fair rent, and I see " no alternative but to create some tribunal to " settle differences between landlord and tenant, " with liberty for either party to invoke its " assistance. The usual three remedies are:—

" 1. Fixity of tenure.—This is absolutely neces- " sary, and will result beneficially in the long run " to all concerned, the land, the tenant, the land- " lord, and the country, as it will secure better " farming. I should allow a tenant to be ejected " for such reasons as—

" (a.) Non-payment of rent;

" (b.) Bad farming and general neglect;

" (c.) Disreputable and obnoxious conduct," crime, or anything of that sort; I should not encourage those. On the contrary, I should expel them from being my tenants if I had a chance to. Then the bankruptcy position must be dealt with.

" 2. Fair rent.—The landlord in the first " place chooses the tenant and the rent is

" arranged, but every 10 years or so either the " landlord or the tenant to have right to have " the rent re-adjusted, and if they cannot settle " amicably the court or tribunal to arbitrate " between them. This court to have the " absolute power to settle the fair rent, and in " doing so it is not to value the tenant's im- " provement. The rent to be raised or lowered " as the progress and condition of the country " and agriculture justify, but not to absorb or " interfere with the tenant's improvements " within the preceding 30 years." To talk of five or six, or 10 or 20 years is not in it. My father was a farmer, as I said before; he went to his place in 1843. Now, if he had been turned out in 1863 or 1864, within 10 years, he would have been turned out with nothing whatever but his stock. I knew his affairs; I knew how he stood entirely; and I am proud to say he had a good landlord, and he was allowed to remain on; I am sure for the next 15 years he made clear on that farm at least 350*l.* a year, or else he would never have netted the result that he did at the last. It takes 20 years to make a bad farm a good one; 20 years is no good; you must at least give 30 years for any improvements I contend. It takes you a couple of years to make the land, and then you are a twelvemonth before you get anything out of it, and really the land is not getting into proper cultivation till 10 or 15 years later.

Then " 3. Free sale.—This right I would extend " to the tenant in a modified and restricted " sense, so that the landlord's interest may " not be jeopardised, and the landlord to have " the right to reject a purchaser that may be " objectionable, but such right not to be arbi- " trarily used. In not advocating absolute free " sale I know I am transgressing the ordinary " dictum of the 'land reformer,' but the tenant " or cultivator of the soil requires protection " from the middleman, the speculator, and " money-lender as much, if not more, than from " the landlord; and for my part, I think, to " create and encourage commercial dealings with " tenancies would, in the long run, be detri- " mental to the tenant, and would, above all " other things, estrange the good feeling between " the tenant and his landlord. The latter would " practically have no voice in the selection of " his tenants, and naturally his interest in him " would proportionately cease. To adjust the " rents and settle differences I suggest the " appointment of a tribunal, to be called, say, " arbitration or land court, the members to be " appointed and be directed from the Board of " Agriculture in London." I should not give much power to local county councils; they are elected on too uncertain a basis. " The President " of the Board of Agriculture to appoint, say, " 20 land arbitrators for South Wales, and a " similar number for North Wales. The courts " to sit in the Petty Sessional Division when " the dispute arises, with the clerk of the magis- " trates as legal assessor and clerk." These are, of course, only suggestions; I hope you will excuse my being so bold as to make them.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,814. We are very much obliged to you. We have asked several times to get a practical view of a valuer's court?—" Out of the 20 arbi- " trators the landlord to appoint one, and the " tenant one, and these two to appoint an " umpire, and the decision of these three to " be final as to rent, and any question of " improvement or dispute arising out of the " tenancy. I would make it a rule that each " party pay his own costs, save when in the " opinion of the court either attempts to abuse " his right by bringing trivial and unreasonable " matters before the court, and in such case the " party at fault to pay the costs of the other " side, but such amount not to be oppressive." I do not want to appoint a tribunal where we lawyers and barristers would be too well paid out of it; I should like the landlord and the tenant to come and argue their own case before these arbitrators; so that it is not a matter of stock in trade with me, as it were; I do not want to encourage that. " The office of arbitra- " tors I would try to make more honorary than " lucrative, and I think plenty of good men " would be willing to serve on being paid a sum " to cover their expenses and a small hono- " rarium. The process must be simple, expedi- " tious, and inexpensive, and there must be a " registry, say one in South and the other in " North Wales, and if you like, have one in each " county to keep a record of all proceedings. I " suggest this court in the interest of the tenant, " but not less so in that of the landlord. The " latter is now the butt of every small agitator, " who denounces him in no measured terms, and " often on imaginary grounds, but if the court " is established the landlord will be relieved, " and a feeling must arise throughout the " country that the tenant gets justice from an " impartial tribunal. If these courts are estab- " lished they will be only for protection from " bad landlords, and, speaking for myself, I do " not think they will often be called to act, and " 9 out of 10 of the tenants will do better with " their landlords direct than by seeking the aid " of the court, whilst it will be a great relief to " the landlord to have a speedy tribunal to deal " with objectionable and quarrelsome tenants." I thank you, my Lord, and gentlemen, for allowing me to read this long statement. You have a copy of my paper, I think.

Lord Kenyon.

51,815. As to the penalising clauses, I suppose you would admit that in the present state of the law some penalising clauses are necessary against a bad tenant?—I do, certainly. I think there are more bad tenants than bad landlords as a matter of fact, but one bad landlord can influence the whole district, while one bad tenant only influences a man that is bigger than himself as a rule, and consequently the hardship is not so great.

51,816. As to fixity of tenure, do not you think that the majority of tenants have fixity of tenure now?—I do not think so.

51,817. Practically?—No, they have not; the majority of them have not.

51,818. We have had a great deal of evidence to show that there are very few vacancies, very few changes of tenancy?—Well, if you notice, I base my calculation more on the fourth statement I make, that is, that the landlords are obliged to sell. There is an enormous quantity of land changing hands, and in almost every instance the rent is changed and the tenant's improvements are swallowed up in the purchase, so that I really do not consider there is fixity of tenure at the present moment. I know very well that you are perfectly safe in the hands of good landlords.

51,819. Yes, you have said so?—I should say here that you would do better with nine-tenths of them never to go to the court at all. The landlords are perfectly protected; they need never fear.

51,820. By sharp men do you mean solicitors and professional men?—I do not think agents should be solicitors. A solicitor, as a rule, if he has anything in his head, has got plenty of practice of his own, and to get a tenant to hang about an office all day to wait for a solicitor or to wait for any man that is engaged in other occupations is a great hardship.

51,821. Then the men you want would be the class of agent who is educated at Cirencester College or Downton, and has gone through a course of farming and practical estate management?—I think that is very desirable.

51,822. Do not you think that that class of agent is increasing?—Possibly so, but not in small out-of-the-way counties. I know more of Cardiganshire as a matter of fact than I do of any other county.

51,823. In my experience every poor gentleman's son who has nothing else to do thinks he will be an agent?—Well, as a rule they make very good agents. I have had very pleasant ralations with many of them.

51,824. I fully endorse your view as to the professional land agent. Now, how would you arrive at a fair rent?—I think this. In the first instance the landlord and the tenant ought to settle that amongst themselves for the first time, but if after 10 years or 15 years—10 years has no charm for me—say 10 or 15 years, the tenant cannot do, there is no use keeping him there to the grindstone. He has no other place to go to, and practically he is not a free agent, I should say this, that some tribunal should come in and say what is a fair rent. I happen to own a small farm. The farmer came to me last year and said, "I want a reduction." "Well," I said, "you know you "told me at the time I bought this farm that "you were willing to pay 10*l.* a year more than "you pay now." He offered me 64*l.*, and I took 54*l.* from him. He said he would give 64*l.*, but he thought the place was worth only 54*l.* I said, "If you think it is only worth 54*l.*, why "do you offer 64*l.*?" "Well," he said, "I must "get a place to inhabit." "Well," I said, "You will have it at 54*l.*, and I hope you "will pay it." As it happened he was a servant that I knew when I was a boy; he worked on my father's farm. Anyhow he had the place, and then last year he came and wanted a reduction of 5*l.* Now, it would have been very much more satisfactory for me to go to someone and say, "Now, go and value that place"—"Get some independent man to do it, and I will "abide by what he says."

51,825. What I want to know is how that third party would value it?—That third party would value the land at what was really the agricultural value of it.

51,826. But what is the agricultural value of it? Is it the competition rent?—No; what a tenant could pay for it reasonably having a living first.

Mr. Brynmor Jones

51,827. With a view of making profit or simply carrying on the business?—I would not give very much profit. I should allow him to use his ingenuity to make a profit. I should say he must get a living; if he makes a fair living there I would not reckon upon his making a very large profit. I certainly would give some profit. Every man is worthy of his hire.

51,828. In your calculation would you allow us interest on capital?—Certainly, there would be no profit without that.

Lord Kenyon.

51,829. It seems to me that a landlord who has possessed the land for a long time, and a tenant who has farmed the land for a long time, would know better what the farm is worth than any outsider?—Well, if they do that, I do not propose to call in the court. The court is only necessary when they cannot agree. I do not make this court compulsory upon everybody. I only give the right to go there and seek aid from it when aid is wanted.

51,830. Of course one man can get a great deal more out of a farm than another?—I know that.

51,831. It is a very different matter to arrive at what is a fair rent?—Oh, it is a difficult subject, I know very well. I should like freedom of contract first of all myself, but I am convinced from my experience that it is not a fair thing, especially in these days when people are so fond in some counties of living beyond their income, and the tenant does not know when his landlord is going to sell. In some districts now that I know of they are hanging on: they do not know when the landlord will sell, and their interest will be sold with it.

51,832. Do you think that such a court would lower or raise the value of land—the sale value?—I think it would rather raise the sale value and I will give you the reason for it. I know three or four clients I have of my own now that would go in for land, but they hear so much denouncing about it that they prefer not to.

51,833. But on the other hand, do you think people would buy farms if they were obliged to keep the sitting tenant there?—I think they would, and if not it would be a hardship on the other side to be turned away if there was no reason for it. I would not give attention very much to what they thought about that.

51,834. Of course it is admitted that there ought to be full compensation in case of sale, and that that is a matter which is omitted out of this Act?—I think so, but really you cannot give compensation to the tenant. He wants his place. To turn him out means turning him out of his cherished home, the place where he has been brought up and lived. Suppose I had been a farmer, and instead of turning to the course I did when I was about 35 or 36 years of age the farm had come into the market, I should have done anything to buy my farm if I had had to borrow very likely all the money I could possibly get hold of. The result would be that that would make me a poor man. I know instances in Cardiganshire where tenants having done exceedingly well, and had bought their own farms at these sales, especially in 1874, but whilst they went in opulent men, they have eventually come to beggary because they have borrowed so largely, and have had to pay more interest on the borrowed money than they did before in rent—after sinking all their capital they have to pay more money in interest on what they borrowed than they had to pay in rent before.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,835. The mortgagees were not very good landlords?—Very poor ones.

Lord Kenyon

51,836. It seems to me in Cardiganshire particularly, a very large number of sales have taken place—I mean more than in any other county in the Principality?—I have two or three farms I should be glad to sell.

51,837. There seems to have been a very great number of sales?—That is so. I am speaking more or less of Cardiganshire, though I have a few clients among the Glamorgan farmers—not a very large number.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,838. Would you give us your opinion as to what you mean by free sale. I did not quite follow you there?—I think in the ordinary three F's free sale is for the tenant to sell his tenancy.

51,839. To an incomer?—Yes.

51,840. But would he not be selling that which is not his now. Once you admit a system of that sort, you never could stop it, it seems to me?—No.

51,841. Because if a tenant once pays for it when he goes in you admit that he has a right to sell it when he goes out?—If you notice I do not go in for free sale.

51,842. But would you kindly explain what you do go in for. I want to know what you mean by free sale?—By free sale I mean in the ordinary acceptation of the three Fs the right to sell the tenancy—freedom of sale of the tenancy to the best bidder. I do not approve of that.

51,843. You do not approve of that?—No, I do not approve of it. If you notice I say in a very restricted and modified sense.

51,844. Then let me know exactly what is in your mind—how far you think it right that we should go?—I should do very much the same as they do in Ireland on the Ulster system. Of course this is a matter of detail, and if the Commissioners would like me to take a little more trouble and expound myself at greater length—I was afraid I had been too long already—I should be pleased to do so.

51,845. I take it you do not mean that you would give to an outgoing tenant the right of selling that which he had not bought?—Well, I should allow him this: if he could not come to terms with the landlord as to what he is entitled to in going out I should allow him something on his going out for his improvement.

51,846. Oh, yes, the unexhausted improvements you mean?—Yes, I should not allow him for anything else.

Lord Kenyon.

51,847. You would not allow him to choose his successor, and demand a sum of money from his successor?—No, I would not. I say so clearly in my statement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,848. I do not think you said so clearly: I did not understand so at any rate?—I beg your pardon. I intended to say so clearly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,849. I did not understand very well whether you were in favour of the landlord and tenant treating for the rent at the commencement of a tenancy, or whether the Land Court was to adjust the rent in the first instance?—I allow absolute liberty between the landlord and tenant at the beginning.

51,850. So that if a tenant fails to agree with the landlord at the commencement of the tenancy the Land Court is not to be called in to arbitrate?—No. If a man cannot agree with his landlord he is no tenant. I give him no footing until he is bound, say, for a matter of 10 years. I do not want to allow the tenant to play with the landlord.

51,851. So that practically he is to pay competition rent for the first ten years?—Well, if you call it competition rent—I mean the rent that he will agree with his landlord the same as it is now practically. If not, you really reduce the landlord to a mere receiver of so much money out of the farm.

51,852. But is it not probable that the landlord in that case would be more likely to let to the highest bidder than he otherwise would?—Well, I am afraid I can see no remedy for that. That would be justice to both sides, or as near justice as I can think of.

51,853. If you think that, do not you think a period of 10 years is rather long?—I do not. I think a man ought to be keen and perspective enough to anticipate the next years. I do not want the tenants to be plastic and weak. I want to get strong men to be tenants, and let those strong men have fair play afterwards.

51,854. But the complaint with reference to the period under the Irish Act, which was 15 years, was that it was much too long?—Well, I say 10 years, that is five years shorter.

51,855. That brings it down to some extent, but you know the price of stock and produce fluctuates very much in the course of 10 years?—Very well, then I am willing to make it five. I only mentioned 10 years because you really cannot do anything on the farm under five years and not very much in 10 years.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,856. Seven years was fixed by Mr. Bryn Roberts' proposed Bill?—I only mentioned 10 years because I thought 15 was too much, and I thought every decade would be the better period to take.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,857. And of course you think that if the landlord in the course of five years is to adjust the rent, it will be a protection against the landlord raising the rent on any improvements which the tenant has made on the farm?—Certainly. I would not allow the raising of rent at all at any time for 30 years on the improvements of the tenant. I tried to say so in my statement—that I would give 30 years for improvements of the tenants without touching it. He ought to get that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,858. Will not that have the immediate effect of raising rents on large estates?—I do not know. I cannot see it.

51,859. Very well; it is a matter of opinion?—Well, I do not follow that quite.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. Griffiths.

51,859A. You are of opinion that many tenant farmers are not in a position to converse freely with their landlords and agents?—Yes, especially so in Cardiganshire.

51,860. In most Welsh districts it is so, I suppose?—Well, I know more of Cardiganshire. I should say in most Welsh districts it is so.

51,861. We have been told that language and politics make no difference in most places where we have been, but you are not of that opinion?—No, I am not. If a man cannot converse freely, he cannot make his landlord understand what he wants.

51,862. You are also aware, I should say, that landlords at the present day pay more attention to the Welsh language, and have their children taught more Welsh than formerly?—I think there has been a great improvement in that way the last 10 years.

51,863. And an improvement the other way—more English taught?—I may say this, during the time I was in Cardiganshire from 15 years of age, the chances of hearing English arose through tramps, and that kind of people coming round; it was exclusively Welsh.

51,864. You are of opinion also that tenants very often sign agreements which they know nothing about?—Practically the tenants sign the agreements that are current on the estate.

51,865. Without looking into them?—My mother, in the year 1875 when the place was re-valued, was not told whether she would be allowed to remain on the place or not, until she went to pay the rent well on in September, and there and then an agreement was produced before her, and it was said if she wanted to get the place she was to sign it, and she did sign it.

51,866. These penal clauses are not enforced on most large estates, but you have shown us to-day that there are cases where lands are sold which is prejudicial to the tenant?—Yes.

51,867. Then you mentioned fixity of tenure. Do you not think that if tenants were really paid for all the improvements they had made, they would be able to make the land produce more than if they had not really fixity of tenure—I mean if they knew they were certain of having compensation for all the improvements they made?—I am not so much an advocate for compensation as for fixity of tenure. I think a man takes a farm for the purpose of making his home there practically for his life, and I certainly would give him compensation if he is turned away, but I would not allow the landlord to turn him away unless there was very good reason for it.

51,868. Do you not think the tenant would have more confidence in going on if he knew he would be paid for anything he did?—I certainly think that.

51,869. As a rule, when leases are taken, tenants do not always get the very greatest amount of produce out of the ground as they should, whereas if they had only a yearly tenancy and safe payment for improvements, they would go on continually making the land produce as much as possibly could be got out of it?—Yes, that I think would follow.

51,870. Then you think it very necessary that agents should be well qualified to understand their work thoroughly?—I do, and give themselves up to it, more or less, of course. You cannot in every case say it should be exclusively so. I think there are some excellent agents.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

51,871. I am very pleased to hear you say so, and excellent landlords too?—Yes, there are. I should be pleased to name one or two if you like.

51,872. I think we have found out a good many of them, but still there are some bad landlords?—Yes, and bad agents too.

51,873. It is in consequence of that that you want the change of law, is it not?—That is so.

51,874. Do you think this continual selling of land—there is not so much in this immediate neighbourhood—tends to have a bad influence on the farming of the district?—If the tenants are strong enough to buy their own holdings it would not have a bad effect, but as a rule, they are not, and now the sale of the land without fixity of tenure or compensation to the tenant has a very bad effect, because the tenant never feels safe.

51,875. Do you not think that the tenants are in too much dread to farm well?—Yes. I say they never feel safe. I do not think they farm well, and I do not think any sensible man would farm well when he knows that all his improvement may be taken away from him without compensation at an early date.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,876. You have had a great many years experience as a solicitor, have you not?—Well, I am getting older; I have had over 20 years of it now.

51,877. You have consequently had a great deal of experience in getting evidence, and you have come in contact with many tenant farmers and persons of the same class throughout the Welsh counties?—I have in my professional capacity; I take pleasure in talking to tenant farmers.

51,878–9. Do you think that the tenant farmers are afraid to come before this Commission?—I cannot say that I have come in contact with a case that I can mention, but this I can say, that a tenant who knows that his landlord would disapprove of his coming forward, and is in the hands of his landlord, and nine-tenths of the tenants are in the hands of the landlord, it would be detrimental to his interests to come forward, and I feel satisfied he will not come forward to tell the candid truth. Common sense tells me so, and my observation, and what I hear from the people.

51,880. In reference to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, does your practical experience suggest any sound reason for making it a condition precedent to the tenant's claim that two months' notice in writing should be given?—I think it is a very detrimental clause to the tenants.

51,881. In the same way you can see no reason why the landlord should be bound to give 14 days' notice in writing before he can make his counter claim?—Certainly; I should apply the same thing to the landlord. Inasmuch as he is generally more educated, and knows more what he is about, the less he requires protection.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

51,882. In effect, the clause is this: that if a man omits to give two months' notice in writing he forfeits all right under the Act?—That is how I read it.

51,883. Have you, in your experience as a solicitor, been concerned in any cases under the Act?—Yes.

51,884. What do you think of the procedure provided by the Act for the enforcement of the claims of the landlord and tenant respectively?—Cumbersome, tedious, and clumsy; more so than expensive.

51,885. Rather expensive too?—Yes; rather expensive too, but the machinery is a cumbersome one, and difficult to put in action. The tenant certainly cannot do it himself, he must get some expert to do it for him.

51,886. Does your practical experience, as a solicitor, suggest any objection to the matter being dealt with in this way. I am putting aside the more extensive systems of reform, such as the one you propose to the Commission, but does your practical experience as a solicitor raise any doubt in your mind about the propriety of some such procedure as this, that at the determination of the tenancy either the landlord or the tenant might go to the county court judge and ask him to name from a list of valuers appointed either by the Board of Agriculture or the county court judge, a valuer who shall have full and absolute power to decide disputes under the Act, and whose award may be entered up as a judgment of the court?—I think some such simple process as that would be a very excellent one, but with due deference to county court judges, I do not think I should give them the power to name the valuers themselves. I should certainly get some tribunal specially qualified on that point to name them.

51,887. The evidence given before leads us to think that both landlords and tenants disapprove of legal proceedings, not so much so far as the substance of the justice which they obtain is concerned, but because of the expense and delay of legal proceedings in our courts?—I can thoroughly appreciate that. For instance, take this case of Berthllwyd. We contended there that a 5*l.* or 10*l.* note was amply sufficient to put Berthllwyd into any state of repair that any landlord could possibly desire. That was the farthest extent we could go. Looking to the surveyor's expenses, applications to the court, and for the writ, and so on, and afterwards the tribunal to try it, because it would be referred to some practical man, then I am satisfied the expenditure would not be less than 100*l.* to 150*l.* on both sides, and that where there was a matter of 5*l.* in dispute.

51,888. That being the popular opinion, and being one which, upon the whole, you justify, the difficulty, on the other hand, that we are met with is this—that if you appoint a valuer only, or if the parties agree upon a valuer only, there is no method of enforcing the award of the arbitrator?—To put that machinery in motion is a very simple thing.

51,889. Do you think that the county court is a tribunal in which people would have confidence for the purpose of enforcing the award of a valuer?—I think it would suit admirably. The duties would be exclusively executive as it were.

51,890. Quite; that is to say, the system of the county court would be brought into motion upon the valuer's report being brought into the county court?—Yes.

51,891. Did I understand you aright when you said you preferred an arbitrator or valuer being selected from a list of valuers appointed by some central authority, like the Board of Agriculture, rather than the county council or the county court judge?—I should. County court judges are not responsible to anyone, as it were, except to their conscience, and their own ideas of what is right. I think that a public appointment like that should be in the hands of someone outside the district altogether.

51,892. I think that is the real reason that the appointment ought to be in the hands of some central person acting upon ministerial responsibility and away from the district. The county court judges are, like all other officials, responsible?—Oh, dear, yes. At the same time the light of public opinion does not play upon them so very severely as upon some public officials.

51,893. Have you any suggestions to make as to the schedules in the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—The matter of division of the schedules is rather a detail. I will say this, with regard to the schedules, that you get 20 years for buildings, seven years for other repairs, and two years for the remainder—for manure. I consider those three terms are too short. As to the division in the schedule itself I have not paid special attention to it.

51,894. What do you say to the schedule as to improvements, to which the consent of the landlord is required?—I would not want the consent of the landlord.

51,895. And erection or enlargement of buildings?—I would have the consent of the landlord there, except the building was necessary for the holding.

51,896. What do you say to the laying down of permanent pasture?—I would not want the consent of the landlord there.

51,897. As to water, meadows, and irrigation?—I would not want the consent of the landlord to that.

51,898. Gardens?—Nor to that either.

51,899. Improving of roads?—No, I should not want the consent of the landlord there to do it reasonably. I would not put them like turnpikes.

51,900. You would rather like to put a money limit upon it?—That is so.

51,901. No—improvement beyond, say, 50*l.* or 100*l.*?—Yes, or so many years on the rent.

51,902. Does any other remark occur to you in reference to this schedule?—I have not really had the schedule before me for some time. As to planting of orchard and fruit trees, I think that ought to come in for valuation without the consent of anyone. There are a good many things here that are not applicable to the district I am accustomed to. Of course, I have only just glanced through the schedule, but for the moment I do not see anything else in it to mention.

51,903. You gave us a suggestion for remedying the evils of our existing land system which seemed to me not very dissimilar to that suggested by a Bill called the Land Laws (Wales) Bill brought in by Mr. Bryn Roberts and Mr. Bowen Rowlands. Do you know that Bill?—No, I never read Bills. It is quite enough to do to read Acts of Parliament when they are passed.

51,904. There is another Bill the Land Tenure Bill, which is not fundamentally dissimilar, which created a kind of judicial tenancy?—Yes.

51,905. Shortly stated the theory of the Bill was this, that the tenant might go to the court to get a fair rent fixed for seven years; that so long as he after the rent is fixed continues to pay the rent so fixed, and to comply with certain statutory conditions, viz., as to farming, repairing, and other matters, he cannot be turned out by the landlord. That would remain in force for seven years. That is what I understand to be your suggestion?—That is so.

51,906. Omitting details, the suggestion on principle is the same?—Yes. Fixity of tenure is the first cardinal point in my programme.

51,907. You have said something about free sale. I do not see how that comes into the scheme?—The difficulty would be this, a tenant leaves either through ill-health or some other cause. He may want to leave the country; his children may be located in another country, Australia, America, or the Colonies, and he may wish to leave. What should the tenant do? I would not allow him to sell that to anyone he thought proper, but I think he should submit certain names of tenants to the landlord, and the landlord should have a right the same as they have in the custom of seeing that the terms he sells at are fair, and the tenant is one of whom he could approve.

51,908. You suggest that the tenant should be able to assign his judicial tenancy, or rather the true way of saying it would be, tenancy from year to year on the judicial conditions to any person, subject, however, to this proviso that the landlord may for some good reason reject the assignee as tenant?—That is so. There is a little book I have obtained within the last few days, which goes very fully into the matter, called "The History of Land Tenure in Ireland," being the York Prize Essay at the University of Cambridge for the year 1888, and the result that this essay arrives at is very much on the lines which you have foreshadowed now.

51,909. Do you think it is fair that a tenant should have the right of giving a notice to quit or of terminating the judicial tenancy while the landlord cannot do the same?—I think it would be right for him to do so, but I should rather put a restriction upon his right of selling; that is, he should sell to a man who would be approved by the landlord.

51,910. That is not quite my point?—It does come to that partially.

51,911. What is in my mind is this, supposing a fair rent was fixed, we will say in the year 1895, and there was a further fall in prices. The tenant finds the fair rent of 1895 has become the unfair rent of 1897, and he says; "I will give up this holding, and I will give notice to quit to my landlord?"—The landlord could reject that on any reasonable grounds.

51,912. You would say that the landlord might hold the tenant down for seven years?—That is so on any reasonable grounds. I should allow a free sale. There are some people that treat the land question in this way, they allow free sale ad libitum.

51,913. Then supposing no one would be fool enough to go and buy because owing to the fall in prices the rent has become an unfair rent?—Yes, that is so; and if he wanted to give it to a man of straw the landlord would object to the man of straw necessarily. I do not think the tenants should be scot-free of all contracts; I want to have them as men of backbone.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,914. To pursue that question which Mr. Brynmor Jones has raised with reference to the notice to quit that would be given by the tenant in consequence of what was a fair rent in 1895 becoming an unfair rent in 1897, may I suggest this, that the difficulty might be met by giving either the landlord or the tenant the power of appealing against the rent at any time within the seven years?—I would not do that. I should fix the thing for seven years. We ought to see far enough ahead for seven years. I would make the thing commercial to that extent. We protect the tenant all round, and I would certainly hold him to his bargain. You must not treat the tenant too much as if he was a child; let him do something for himself.

51,915. It is in the interest of the landlord as well as the tenant?—If it is in the interest of the landlord they would agree together.

51,916. Supposing that they fail to agree?—I think seven years would be quite often enough to have the question reopened. That is the view I take of it.

Lord Kenyon.

51,917. I have some questions to put to you by Mr. Vincent, with reference to the Campbell Davys matter first: "Do you object to admit" ting the copy correspondence from Mr. C. J.
" Jackson's brief in the action"?—I do. I do not know what is in the copy of correspondence in Mr. Jackson's brief.

51,918. Do you know what Mr. Jackson's brief was?—No, I do not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,919. It was the brief of the opposite party, I presume?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

51,920. You object?—Without knowing what it is I cannot admit that.

51,921. "Was not the question of the en-
" croachment raised by letter of October 18th,
" 1877. Was not this some years before action
" brought?"—I think it was.

51,922. "If Mr. Davys says that Mr. Price
" told him in the presence of a witness that you
" had not informed her of his offers to settle, is
" that correct?"—It is not correct. Mrs. Price is in the court now, and she can speak for herself.

51,923. "When did you give notice to Mr.
" Campbell Davys?"—Notice of what?

51,924. That you were coming here, I suppose, it means?—I sent it away the same time as I wrote to the Commission, the day before yesterday, and he is at home I am told.

51,925. "After writing the letter of Decem" ber, 1886, could you expect Mr. Campbell
" Davys to show a conciliatory spirit?"—I am not aware what that letter is.

51,926. "Without prejudice. 18, York Place,
" Swansea, December 18th, 1886. Dear Sir,
" Campbell Davys v. Jones. My client has defi" nitely decided not to accept the offer of plain" tiff. She consents to my repeating the terms
" that I offered you before and thus have an " end to all litigation, as at her time of life she
" is most anxious to have a little peace of mind.
" I shall be glad if you will let me have a copy " of the document signed in February last, and " I wish you to distinctly understand that her
" execution of same was obtained by fraud.
" Under the circumstances I must ask you to " reply on or before the 22nd instant. Yours
" truly, J. Aeron Thomas?"—What is the date
" of that?

51,927. December 18th, 1886?—That is the letter I believe I wrote. That action that was on then was discontinued by the plaintiff.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,928. Notwithstanding you wrote that letter he discontinued the action?—He did; and furthermore, the plaintiff has had interviews with me—I believe I am speaking within the mark—a dozen times since then, and on most friendly terms. It is a mysterious thing—you do not understand the man unless you know more about him.

51,929. You charged him with fraud, and yet he was perfectly friendly afterwards?—Yes, he was in my office three or four times. He was in my office to settle the last action, when the 120*l.* was paid.

51,930. That letter was written after instructions?—Yes.

51,931. You were duly retained at that time?—The action was going on.

51,932. You headed the letter "Without prejudice"?—Certainly.

Lord Kenyon.

51,933. "Did your client refuse to admit the plaintiff's surveyor?"—I am not aware of it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I think in justice to the witness it ought to be understood that the letter of December 18th, 1886, was read at the request of Mr. Vincent.

Lord Kenyon.

51,934. Yes. You understand that in fairness to both parties I read the questions and the letters? They are no questions of ours?—Oh, I have no objection to answer.

Lord Kenyon.

We quite understand, Mr. Vincent. You are acting for Mr. Campbell Davys in this matter?

Mr. Vincent. Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It is a serious thing if the Commission read letters which possibly may be defamatory.

Mr. Vincent. You are doing it at my invitation.

Lord Kenyon.

51,935. Yes, we wish to shift the responsibility upon you. Just answer the question; "Did your client refuse to admit the plaintiff's "surveyor?"—Not to my knowledge. I know this, that the plaintiff's surveyors were on her premises during the busy season of 1893, and going through four or five rooms greatly to the loss of the trade of the house.

51,936. In the public-house?—Yes, in the public-house. It was in July, during the season. She made serious complaints to me, and I told her to forbear with them, and give them every facility. She is in court now, and can speak of those things better than I could.

51,937. There is one question by Mr. Lee: "Do you know of any cases where preference is "given to Churchmen when farms are to let?" —Well, I would not like to say definitely on those points. I have not had very much to do with very big landlords. I know from hearsay in Cardiganshire—I do not know of any other county in that respect—that preference has been given, but, as I have said before, I happened to be in the company of a parson in 1875 when that question was fully discussed, and I quite understand that the Nonconformists are looked upon as lepers, and not as desirable men.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. E. Vincent recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

51,938. We wish to deal with this matter as shortly as possible, in order to take the Brecknockshire evidence?—Certainly. This is a Brecknockshire case. First of all I have received from Mr. Campbell Davys to-day a letter sent by special messenger, in which he says he regrets very much that being confined to bed with a cold he cannot get to Builth to-day. Secondly, having regard to what Mr. Aeron Thomas has said about this "Neuadd Arms Hotel" case, Llanwrtyd, I will go as nearly as I can to making this bundle of letters strict evidence, but I do not think I can quite do it. Last night I received in the ordinary form the brief for the junior counsel for the plaintiff in the action of Campbell Davys v. Price and others. It was a brief of Mr. C. J. Jackson, and was endorsed in his name (and that would ordinarily be accepted I think): "Judgment by consent on terms as within and signed by the parties." That would refer to the terms of settlement which your Lordship has.

51,939. Do you wish us to print all those documents and letters?—Certainly not. That is exactly why I am endeavouring to shorten it in this way, if I may say so.

51,940. Otherwise the Treasury might object to it?—I think they possibly would. Inside that brief I found what Mr. Brynmor Jones, I think, would admit to be an ordinary form of copy correspondence. That copy correspondence Mr. Aeron Thomas has declined to admit as evidence, but I think on reconsideration, he would probably be likely to say that it would not be usual and it would not be profitable for solicitors to invent correspondence alleged to have passed between the parties.

Mr. Aeron Thomas. I would not make any such suggestion as that.

Lord Kenyon.

I understood you to say, Mr. Thomas, that you could not accept it as you had not seen it.

Mr. Aeron Thomas. Certainly.

Witness.

Exactly. I may say I am entirely unable to understand the original arrangement made in respect of this lease, because it does appear that in this lease there was a covenant that this house should not be used as a public-house, or for the sale of beer and liquors, and it appears from the very beginning that it was built as such a house, and was used as such, but from the very beginning it also appears that Mr. Campbell Davys, senior, who was then in possession of the property, insisted that Mrs. Anne Jones should ask each year for leave to use this house as a public-house. So that it is quite clear that that was present to her mind the whole time. There is a letter to which I must refer (and in fact, I am specifying these letters in order that I may shorten the notes) of the 4th of February 1875 :—"Castle Hotel, Llandilo, "February 4th, 1875. W. H. Campbell Davys, "Esq. Dear Sir, I beg to enclose you a cheque "for 28*l.* 5*s.* I am very sorry that it quite "escaped my memory in writing to you last "year concerning the 'Neuadd Arms' licence, "but will do so now for the coming year. I "remain, yours obediently, Anne Jones." Then after that there was a letter written by Anne Jones :—"Dear Sir, I write asking you a favour "of allowing the 'Neuadd Arms' to still remain "a licensed house."

51,941. What year is that?—That is 1875.

51,942. (Mr. Aeron Thomas.) I believe the house was built in 1861, my Lord?—Yes. The same description of letter was written in 1876. I think I need not read through the letters. The same on September 25th, 1877, and I forget whether there are more of them, but that is quite enough for my purpose.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,943. What you say, then, is that the correspondence proves your assertion that leave to continue this breach of covenant was asked every year?—Was asked every year.

51,944. That is your point?—Yes; then Mr. Thomas, I understand, agrees with me—I will not say admits, because there is certainly no contest between me and Mr. Thomas—that so early as October 18th, 1877, this question of the encroachment was raised, so that it was not a new question when it came to an action. I will go now to the year 1884. In the year 1884 Mr. Campbell Davys, senior, was still alive and in possession of the property, and I find again a repetition of that request to use the house as a licensed house. Mr. Campbell Davys, senior, was then a man of some age, and I believe Mrs. Anne Jones was a woman of some age. Mr. Campbell Davys, senior, appears, as I suggest from this letter which I am going to read, to have been desirous of reducing this arrangement that the house should be used as a licensed house by leave, into writing. There was a letter written on October 25, 1884 :—"Neuaddfawr, "Llandovery, October 25th, 1884. Dear Mrs. "Jones. As Mr. Phillips, your next door neigh- "bour, was here one day this week, I asked him "to take you a paper, which I had ready to

"send you for some weeks for your signature. "This post brings it me back from Mr. Phillips "with the information that you refuse to sign "it. May I request to be informed by an early "post what you objected to in that paper "which caused you to return it to me unsigned, "as I took some pains to show Mr. Phillips the "documents to which it referred for your in- "formation. I must request an early reply, as "I see that for years past you have put off a "settlement of the matters referred to in the "paper, and life is becoming year by year more "uncertain for both of us. Your truly, W. H. "Campbell Davys."

51,945. (Mr. Aeron Thomas.) I have no recollection of that letter?—I will guarantee to produce a copy from the letter book of that. I think we have heard in the course of the evidence of Mr. Aeron Thomas something about the document which Mrs. Jones was asked to sign. I am not sure now what was said about that document, but I think it would be convenient to have a copy of the document itself, because, rightly or wrongly I do not like verbal descriptions.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,946. The material part was read by me, and is already on the notes. I read the last five clauses?—Then I do not object. I think you will probably understand my caution upon that point too?—From that time onwards it seems simply to have been a question for some time as to whether this lady would assent to that arrangement or not, and finally this action was brought.

51,947. (Mr. Aeron Thomas.) Not until after her death?—With regard to the manner in which the action was eventually fought, the only thing which it occurs to me to say is this, that the solicitor for the defendant had deliberately accused the plaintiff of fraud; and that solicitor continues to act for the defendant in subsequent actions. Then the only thing to expect was what I should do myself, and what I believe everybody else would do, namely, that the plaintiff should keep the defendant's solicitor at arm's length, and leave him to fight it out. That is all I have to say with regard to that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,948. And not settle the action?—No, not settle the action; but I think perhaps Mr. Aeron Thomas's client was rather better off by the action being settled than she would have been if it had been fought. Those are all the facts I have to put before you.

Lord Kenyon.

51,949. I have a question to ask you handed in by Mr. Aeron Thomas: "Can you prove any "consent to license between 1861 and 1874?"—No. My correspondence begins in 1874.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

51,950. Let me ask you this further question upon that, it appears from the correspondence that it is an ascertained fact that a breach of covenant had been continuing for some years?—I should say that is practically certain any way.

51,951. It appears from the first letter that you have referred to that the tenant was paying the rent for the then current year. There were no arrears of rent?—That is February 4, 1875.

51,952. Yes?—Yes.

51,953. Therefore the landlord received the rent knowing of the breach of covenant?—I should say under protest. That is a question of construction of a letter. May I hand you the letter. (Witness handed in correspondence.)

51,954. You say under protest?—I think the letter in reply is under protest. I think we may infer from that, that he has said, "You must "ask leave to use the house as licensed pre- "mises, or else I will not take the rent."

51,955. But let us be clear upon this point. On the 9th July, 1874, Mr. R. Campbell Davys writes: "Dear Mrs. Jones,—I have communicated "your wishes to Mr. Bishop, who will send the "particulars you require?"—I do not know what that is about.

51,956. "I think the lease of the houses is for "60 years from the 29th September 1860. You "are perhaps aware that it was only by express "permission that the 'Neuadd Arms' could be "carried on as a public-house and hotel. Should you, however, wish to continue the license "I have no doubt that at your request my "father will give you the necessary permission. "I am, yours faithfully, R. Campbell Davys?"—Yes, but there is always an insistance on the request.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

51,957. Then if that has been so, there has been not only a continuing breach of the covenant, but the landlord has over and over again waived the breach?—Over and over again given leave.

51,958. No, not at all; it was by express permission that the "Neuadd Arms" was to be carried on as a public-house?—That might come to a close question of construction.

51,959. The construction of these letters was a close question in the action?—It was a question of request, of leave given in answer to a request, that is all, is it not?

51,960. Yes, but then in answer to the application you get also what the landlord says and what he does, that is to say, he continues to receive his rent year after year, and that would be a continuing waiver on his part. However, it is useless to go into this question now, is it not?—Yes, I do not wish to go into that question at all.

51,961. Because the parties settled the matter, and the judges are probably now deciding upon the very questions of law which were raised in that case?—Very likely. All I wanted to do was to put these matters clearly before the Commission.

The witness withdrew.

Commander ALGERNON EVAN-THOMAS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

51,962. You are Commander Algernon Evan-Thomas, late of the Royal Navy, and you live at Caerwnon, near Builth?—Yes.

51,963. You have a statement to make, I think?—I have.

51,964. Will you proceed with it?—I am agent for the Llwynmadoc estate (Miss Clara Thomas's) in the northern part of Breconshire and the Pencerrig estate in Radnorshire, and give evidence for those estates, and generally for the lands adjoining. The Llwynmadoc estate is 10,800 acres, and the Pencerrig estate 4,000. The rent of the Llwynmadoc estate is 3,100*l.*, and the Pencerrig estate 1,800*l.* Many of the Llwynmadoc farms turn on the common. Each farm has by the custom of the manor its run or "ysfa." I believe the extent of each such run was originally founded on the number of sheep the farm would keep in the winter, but this has been modified in the course of years; some farms which formerly had a run have lost it by disuse for many years. These hill sheep runs add very much to the value of farms adjacent to the common, but on farms not adjoining the hill and of better soil it is, I think, questionable whether large flocks of hill sheep are profitable. They make fencing more expensive, destroy the young clovers, and prevent the meadows being shut up at the proper time for hay. The sheep farming industry is said to be depressed owing to the value of wool and sheep being so much lower than it was at one time, but depression is a relative term. I produce an accurate return of prices at sales made each 10 years beginning 1843 from five large flocks of hill sheep in the Abergwesyn and Llanafan districts. The following is the list :—

PRICES of HILL SHEEP and WOOL in the parishes of LLANFIHANGEL ABERGWESYN LLANWRTHWL and LLANAFANFAWR, in the County of BRECON.

EXTRACTED from account books by Commander A. Evan Thomas. The prices are those of the sheep sold from five different flocks and are the prices actually received for the main drafts from each flock. There are almost always a few smaller sheep which do not fetch the same price as the main draft, but these have not been taken into account. The wool is the fleece wool without any deduction for the inferior parts. The ewes are aged.

From these flocks about 8lbs. of wool is sold annually for each ewe or wether sold, hence a rise or fall of 1½*d.* in wool is equivalent for revenue purposes to a rise or fall of 1*s.* in the average price per head obtained for sheep. It will be seen from the above that the gross return for produce sold from the above flocks of hill sheep was in 1873 200 per cent. higher than in 1843, and in 1893 40 per cent. higher than in 1843. I say on the larger estates I believe more money is spent on improvements and repairs than on the small ones, but that must depend largely on the circumstances of the particular owner for the time being. Land held by small owners would in most cases be the better for additional outlay of capital, but I doubt whether a commercial return could be secured on such outlay. Neither religion nor politics has affected the management of the Llwynmadoc or Pencerrig estates in the slightest degree. The relations between the owner and the tenants are of a very friendly character. I have never heard the smallest complaint as to religion or politics affecting the management of adjoining estates, but as to that I can only speak for the last eight years. The usual date of entry is Lady Day. Farms are let from year to year. There is no demand for leases whatever. I think the tenants are satisfied as to the security of their tenures, but even if it were not so I suppose year-to-year tenancies would be preferred in a period of falling prices. The number of changes in tenancy now and formerly remain about the same. They are very few, being due mostly to death or infirmity. The son or some relation usually succeeds to a farm. In resuming the occupation of land for planting or building no notices are served. As a rule compensation is made by agreement; a clause in the estate agreement provides for reference to arbitration of any difference which may arise. A copy of the estate agreement is produced. (Witness handed in agreement.) No enforcement of penalising clauses has taken place. The tenants are given a copy of the agreement free of cost. There is much rough land, and its quality on different parts of the same farm varies, therefore the rent is fixed at a gross sum for each taking as a whole. The rent of the smaller holdings is higher per acre than the larger ones, but deducting reasonable interest on cost of house and buildings it is lower. In fact, in the case of holdings let at 10*l.* to 30*l.* a year, it is doubtful whether any rent is charged for the land itself, where the house and buildings are fairly good according to modern ideas. It depends on the rate of interest deducted. With regard to providing buildings, there has been a very large outlay on these estates, and consequently I have had a good deal of experience in buildings. In my experience of providing buildings and houses for holdings of various sizes I have found that 5 per cent. on the cost of house and buildings alone, without taking into account other landlords' outlay, covers :—

In holdings rented at from 10*l.* to 30*l.* more than the whole rent;
In holdings rented at from 30*l.* to 50*l.* three-quarters of the rent;
In holdings rented at from 50*l.* to 70*l.* five-eighths of the rent; and
In holdings rented at from 70*l.* to 100*l.* half the rent, referring to the estates for which I am agent. One farm properly so-called is rented at 13*s.* an acre, one at 11*s.*, the rents of the rest vary from 2*s.* to 10*s.* an acre. I may say, that by "a farm "properly so-called," I mean one upon which the tenant can make a living without doing other work. On many farms there are fields which would let separately at 20*s.* an acre. The right of pasturage is taken into account in fixing the rent. No services other than the payment of rent are now rendered by tenants, with the exception of hauling for repairs to their own farm buildings. In the first half of the present century other services were rendered and taken into account in fixing the rent, such as hauling coal 20 miles to the landlord's mansion, hauling lime—both those had to come over 20 miles—from 20 miles to 30 miles in pre-railway days, and hauling timber, bark, &c. for the estate, hay making and harvesting also for the landlord if required, and others of which it is difficult to get accurate particulars. All except the coal and bark hauling were discontinued some time previous to 1860, and those were discontinued when the rise of rents took place in or about 1876. Hauling for new buildings erected by the wish of the tenant is treated as a 10 years' improvement. Compensation has been paid on that basis. Small tenants receive help. The hauling for ordinary repairs is taken into account in fixing the rent. The rent is based on the known history and capabilities of the farm, aided by a general valuation made in 1876. Holdings are never let to the highest bidder; there is no bidding; the tenant thought to be the best man for the place is selected from the applicants.

As to the rental of the Breconshire estate, taking the rent in 1843 as a "basis," it was higher in 1863 by 1·2 per cent. A new valuation was made in 1875, and in 1878 the rental was 23·9 per cent. above the 1843 basis. The present rental is 5·2 per cent. above that basis. The above comparison applies to 56 out of 70 agricultural holdings. Owing to exchanges, sales, purchases, &c., so long a comparison cannot be made for the other 14 holdings. A general rise of rent took place about 1874 to 1876, in consequence of the rise in prices. It amounted in Breconshire to 22 per cent., and was consequent on a valuation. This valuation (made by Mr. Davies, of Frood Vale, who, I think, was before the Commission at Llandilo) was 36·2 per cent. above the rental of 1843, but the rents were not raised higher than 24 per cent. above the 1843 basis. In 1843 other services were rendered, besides payment of rent. In 1881 individual reductions began, and in 1886 a general permanent reduction took place, amounting to 13 per cent. for the whole estate. The rental now stands, as before stated, 5·2 above that of 1843.

As to abatements, previous to the permanent reduction in 1886, abatements of 15 per cent. were given for three half years. Subsequent and in addition to the permanent reduction in 1886, abatements have been given for 1892 of 10 per cent., 1893, 12½ per cent. Notice of abatements is given by circular about a fortnight or three weeks before the audit.

Then as to prices; between 1865 and 1875 there was a great rise in the selling values of all the staple produce of this neighbourhood, amounting to 100 to 200 per cent., and a fall from 1879 onwards, broken only in the year

1890, which was a year of high prices. The produce sold off the land in the higher parts of the district, for which I speak more particularly, consists of store cattle, one year to two years, hill sheep, four-year-old wethers, and four to six-year-old ewes; horses, cobs, ponies, and a few draught horses, mostly suckers; poultry, eggs, and butter, but not much of the latter. No cereals are sold, and very few fat cattle. I find from information I have collected from account books and other sources, that the prices obtained in 1893 were higher than those of 1843. Store cattle about 2*l.* a head higher, 6*l.* to 10*l.* against 4*l.* to 8*l.* in 1843; hill sheep about 5*s.* 6*d.* a head higher; wethers 16*s.* to 20*s.*, as against 10*s.* to 13*s.*; ewes 7*s.* to 8*s.*, as against 3*s.* 6*d.* to 4*s.* 6*d.*; chickens 2*s.* a couple higher, 3*s.* 6*d.* to 5*s.* against 1*s.* 3*d.* to 2*s.* 6*d.*; other poultry the same; eggs double the price or more. Butcher's prices at Builth (of course that refers to fat cattle and not to store cattle) 2*d.* to 3*d.* a pound higher than in 1843; mutton 7½*d.* to 8½*d.*, against 5*d.* to 6*d.* a pound; veal 7*d.* to 8½*d.*, against 4*d.* to 5*d.*; beef 7½*d.* to 9*d.*, against 6*d.* to 7*d.*

The rent is paid about 15 weeks after it falls due. The preferential claim for rent, I think, enables industrious young men of small capital to obtain farms who otherwise would find a difficulty in doing so. Land tax and manorial payments are made by tenants. Income tax, Schedule A., is paid by owner direct.

Then as to consolidation of farms. Very little consolidation has taken place since 1864, when the present owner succeeded. A little, I find, took place between 1840 and 1864, but some sub-division also. In my experience the better farming is on the larger farms, but the farms are all small according to English ideas. Out of 72 holdings in Breconshire, 42 are under 50*l.* a year rent, and only three above 100*l.*; none above 130*l.* In times of temporary depression or glut of market, the smallest farmers find a difficulty in holding their produce to meet the market, but on the other hand, they have, or might have very few outgoings. They used in old times to be almost entirely self-sufficing. The farming is not very good, speaking generally, but there are brilliant exceptions. It might be improved in some ways without much additional expense.

Farms at from 60*l.* to 100*l.* seem to do best. Good labourers are difficult to get, and cost 8*l.* to 10*l.* a year each more than they did some years ago, but there is no demand for cottages for the labourers; the farmers prefer having them in the farm-houses and finding them board and lodging. There is not so much arable cultivation as there used to be, partly because in the good times, 1870–80, it was easy to make money without, and partly because the wages of labourers are higher.

As to draining, there is a good deal of wet land, but draining will not pay 5 per cent. or even 4 per cent., that is to say, this poor land will not fetch 6*s.* to 8*s.* an acre more after draining, unless it is a field very conveniently situated. Some of the wetter fields are drained by agreement between landlord and tenant, the former finding the pipes and laying them, the latter cutting and filling the drains, but the landlord gets no remuneration, for no interest is charged, and the tenant and his family after him, as a rule, get the benefit of the whole improvement. No permanent pasture is laid down.

All permanent improvements are made by the landlord at the request of the tenant, and on condition, as a rule, that the tenant does the hauling. An exception is the case of draining just mentioned, but even in that case the landlord sometimes gives help as well as the pipes. The tenant sometimes finds the labour to put up new wire fences, the landlord giving wire and wood, but that can hardly be called a permanent improvement. Where Dutch barns are put up at the request of the tenant to take the place of thatch, 5 per cent. is charged on the cost of the iron and labour; the timber is given. 4 per cent. has been charged on water power where supplied. I may say that a considerable quantity of draining was done in Radnorshire, where the landlord did the whole work, and the tenants were asked to pay 3 per cent.; some 1,100*l.* was spent. By the estate agreement, compensation according to the custom of the country is secured for improvements set out in the third part of the first schedule to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. The estate agreement contracts out of the 33rd section of the Act as to one year's notice.

With regard to the custom as to the sale of sheep on sheep farms by an outgoing tenant to an incoming tenant, it is usual to have an agreement for the sale of the sheep either by valuation or at a fixed price to the landlord or incoming tenant; the matter is dealt with in the estate agreement on the Llwynmadoc estate. I have never heard of a valuation under the Act in the district. The tillages and temporary improvements are usually small in amount and settled for by agreement.

As to the game, the tenants practically have the whole of the ground game unless a few rabbits are wanted for the house or for the beaters. The owner wishing to prevent the extermination of the hares pays the tenants 2*s.* 6*d.* a head for any killed on their farms.

The preservation of game is very moderate, and does not affect prejudicially the relations of landlord and tenant. Most of the tenants preserve the game and are anxious to show it, and come out beating or send some one to do so once or twice a year. They do not come unless they like. No game is sold.

With regard to agricultural instruction in butter and cheese making, three courses of instruction in butter making were held in this neighbourhood a few years ago; the cost was defrayed by private persons; they did a little good. I heard of people getting more for their butter afterwards. Lectures have been given this year and last at Builth on manures, rotations and other agricultural subjects under the auspices of the Education Committee of the County Council, but the audiences have been minute. Information on such subjects is much wanted and would tend to true economy in farming.

With regard to the question of there being any combination in the nature of a trade union among landlords, farmers, and labourers, there is no combination for any object, so far as I know. As to friendly societies, only a small minority of the farmers' sons and agricultural labourers avail themselves of benefit societies. With regard to proprietor farmers, there are not very many. They are decreasing, I believe. I have heard of many sellers and few buyers of late years. I know a few farmers who own and let a small farm while cultivating another themselves as tenants.

On small farms such as rule in this district the farmer must work himself to make it pay; their sons frequently work at home. I believe the sons are completely found in board, lodging, clothes and pocket money, and some capital to start with when they marry or succeed to the farm. In many instances the sons work right well, and are a great help, but in other instances the farmer would get better value for his outlay by employing paid labour even at an extra cost of 8*l.* to 10*l.* I am of opinion from information I have received that the sons who work at home generally receive first and last, in board, lodging, clothes, pocket money, and endowment on marriage or setting up in business, as much as a labourer would have received, but as to this I may say I have received a minority report. No doubt it varies with the individuals.

Practically the whole of the labourers live in the farm-houses. There are few exceptions. Wages are very high now. Each labourer costs the farmer 8*l.* to 10*l.* a year more than he did some years ago. The sleeping accommodation is good now, four or five bedrooms in each farm house according to size. The cottage accommodation on the estate has been increased in the last 20 years. There is no demand for more; the cottages are inhabited almost solely by the landlord's labourers, tradesmen, or elderly people. All have gardens, and those who want it have sufficient grass land and the necessary buildings to keep a cow.

With regard to when the different periods of trade depression began in the district, times were bad from 1884 to 1889, 1890 was a very good year, 1891 fairly good, 1892 very bad, 1893 very bad in respect of cattle, but fair in other respects.

As to remedies, I have no very sensational remedies to suggest, and I do not think that in this neighbourhood there is a demand for any radical remedy—that is to say, by outside interference in any way. We only want better prices. The farming could be improved to some extent without much additional outlay, and the class of cattle could be improved with much benefit. Good store beasts are always saleable, indifferent ones are very often impossible to sell nowadays. More attention might be paid to finding, and holding stock for, a market; this applies more particularly to four-year-old wether sheep, which are all thrown on the market together when they come down from the hill. The relations between landlord and tenant are entirely friendly.

As to moneys spent in improvements and repairs. Previous to 1863 no separate accounts of expenditure on estate work are available. Since 1863 for 30 years 45 per cent. of the gross rental has been spent in farm-houses, cottages, buildings, and improvements. Thirty-five new farm-houses or cottages have been built, and others practically rebuilt, besides other improvements such as draining, fencing, and new water supplies. The above expenditure does not include any on or about the owner's house, new roads, churches, or schools, though the latter benefit the farmers. Interest is charged on Dutch barns and water power only.

The majority of the tenants are sons, sons-in-law or otherwise related to former tenants, a few are the third generation on the estate. I have not been able to investigate further back than the third generation.

51,965. Is that 45 per cent. in addition to the 15 per cent. which you said was given back on abatements?—It is taken on the gross rental.

51,966. It is additional to that. It does not leave a very large profit for the landlord?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,967. The expenditure of 45 per cent. on the gross rental will not continue for ever, I suppose?—No; the houses have been the heaviest expense, when they are rebuilt that part of the expense will cease. There are a few more yet to do.

51,968. Those that have been done have been put, I hope, in such a condition that they will not require much expenditure upon them?—I hope so. I have done my best to make them so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

51,969. Are there any farms on hand in the Llwynmadoc estate vacant?—No, none on hand for want of being able to let them, but the landlord farms some land, and has done so for many years.

51,970. Then may we take it that none of the expense which you have referred to has been incurred upon the farm which the owner farms?—No, none whatever.

51,971. You never find it necessary to advertise a farm to let it?—No, never.

51,972. You have always sufficient applications?—Always.

51,973. What is the number generally who apply for a farm when there is one to let?—I do not think I have ever had more than a dozen, and I do not think I have ever had less than five.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

51,974. Are those all eligible applicants—men with capital?—I did not say that.

51,975. You say that in 1893 it was very bad for cattle, otherwise fair?—Yes.

51,976. To what do you refer when you say that?—To sheep and horses.

51,977. Were sheep and horses fetching satisfactory prices?—Yes, sufficient to go on with.

51,978. And pigs, I suppose?—Yes, pigs. Sheep improved. They were very bad in 1892, but they were better in 1893.

51,979. You have supplied the Commission with figures respecting the sheep and wool for the last 50 years, which showed an advance of 40 per cent. in prices?—Yes.

51,980. Do you quote that as a justification for the present rents?—Yes.

51,981. But in order to complete the case, do you not think it is necessary that you should take the price of labour also into consideration?—I have given evidence as to that too.

51,982. How does the rent compare now with what it was 50 years ago?—I read that out also. It is 5 per cent. higher.

51,983. Is sheep farming the chief branch of farming?—Yes, it is up in these hill districts in the parish of Abergwesyn, and a great part of the parish of Llanafanfawr.

51,984. Do they raise any corn?—Wheat?

51,985. Yes?—Only for their own consumption.

51,986. Barley and oats?—Barley and oats for feeding on the farm.

51,987. Do you find much alteration in the mode of cultivation of late years?—I have only been here eight years—my agricultural experience is only eight years. I do not think that in that time there has been much alteration. I gather from what I am told that there is less arable cultivation now than there was before that time.

51,988. You have had no special training as an agent, I gather? That is, you have not had a practical acquaintance with agriculture?—I was a year at Cirencester.

Sir John Llewelyn.

51,989. You told me, I think, that 1,100*l.* has been spent upon drainage on the Pencerrig estate?—Yes.

51,990. Do you consider that the money was well spent?—Yes, but it was borrowed through the Government department, and I think the charges for it were extremely high.

51,991. I think I followed you rightly, that it was on the Pencerrig estate and not the Llwynmadoc estate?—Yes, on the Pencerrig estate.

51,992. The Llwynmadoc estate does not lend itself so kindly to drainage as the other?—A good deal is done there in a smaller way. I quoted that as the biggest undertaking of the sort. It was all done in two years with borrowed money. At Llwynmadoc it is mostly done by agreement between landlord and tenant, one supplying the pipes and the other doing the work.

51,993. Is there much drainage going on on the Llwynmadoc estate?—About 100*l.* was spent on it last year.

51,994. Under your instructions?—Yes, I do the whole of the practical work myself in every way—buildings, drainage, and everything.

51,995. It is joint work between landlord and tenant?—You mean in draining—yes. I thought you meant with regard to the whole arrangements, I mean I supervise all the building, draining, and other work myself.

51,996. Who pays for the drainage?—The landlord gives the pipes and the tenant does the work as a rule on the Llwynmadoc estate. On the Pencerrig estate the opposite was the case.

51,997. Where was the 1,100*l.* you alluded to spent?—On the Pencerrig estate. The landlord did the whole of the work, and asked for 3 per cent. for the outlay.

51,998. It is quite a different soil?—Quite a different quality of soil.

51,999. If I followed you rightly, it was on a rental of 1,800*l.* on the Pencerrig estate. How many acres is that?—4,000 acres.

52,000. And Llwynmadoc is at a much lower rent?—Yes, a much lower rental.

52,001. It was a different quality estate?—Yes. There is a great deal of hill on the Llwynmadoc estate.

52,002. The point I wish to come to is this, that it is much better that there should be a better understanding between landlord and tenant as to what is drained rather than it should be left to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, much better.

Lord Kenyon.

52,003. What was the amount spent on the Pencerrig estate?—1,800*l.* was spent altogether. Part of it was in road-making, the road has since been dedicated to the public.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,004. Has there been any land sold on this estate of which you are agent?—One or two farms I think have been sold which were detached from the rest.

52,005. You heard what was said here this morning. Do you know of any tenants that have suffered owing to penalising clauses being enforced?—No. No penalising clauses have ever been enforced.

52,006. I do not mean to say that they have been with you, but when the estates were sold?—I never heard of it.

52,007. We heard of it this morning?—I never heard of any complaint of the sort.

52,008. With regard to the land tax, I understood you to say it was the tenant who paid the land tax. The land tax is generally a landlord's tax?—I never heard that. It is open to him to contract out of it if he likes.

52,009. Of course, he may contract out of it, but it is really a landlord's tax?—It makes no difference. It is taken into account in fixing the rent.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

52,010. Of course. With regard to the lectures which were given (by the county council, I presume) were they not approved of; was the attendance not good?—The attendance was very bad indeed.

52,011. Was there any cause why it should be so?—I do not think they were very widely known, and they were generally held on Monday when the people were busy at market. I think they should be brought nearer home to the farmers in order to make them popular. They should be held in the villages.

52,012. You do not mean to say that they were too classical, so that they did not understand them?—No.

52,013. With regard to the fall in prices, I think you commenced at 1842, did you not?—1843. I took that because it happened to be 50 years ago; and it was the date of very nearly the earliest rent-book available.

52,014. Did you date from the same period the advance in the price of labour?—No, I said some years—that it was higher than it was some years ago. I could not exactly fix it. It is very difficult to get reliable evidence as to the amounts paid in 1843. In my opinion, as comparing it in 1843, I should say that instead of 10*l.* to 12*l.* it was 12*l.* to 16*l.* a head higher.

52,015. That is the very thing I wanted to point out to you. Labourers and farm servants are regularly employed here, are they not?—Yes, in the farmhouses always.

52,016. Their wages are more than double the female wages here, are they not?—But I think their wages consist partly of food and lodging; it is only the cash that is increased.

52,017. Yes, and that has increased more than double?—Yes, but not their cost to the farmer; it would not be fair to say that their cost to the farmer has doubled.

52,018. No, but the money wages?—Yes, the money part of their wages have doubled.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,019. Are all the covenants in your agreements observed by the tenants?—Practically they are not all insisted upon. Are you referring to the ones as regards fences and ditches?

52,020. With regard to the cropping, and sale of produce?—I do not think there is any restriction as to cropping. Hay and straw are to be consumed on the farm.

52,021. Do you insist upon that?—As a rule, except that out-going tenants are very often allowed as a favour to sell part of it off the farm.

52,022. Would you enforce it now with a spring like this last spring, when it would pay a tenant much better to sell his hay than to consume it on the premises?—The whole of my evidence relates to small farmers who would never think of buying to feed their stock if they could keep their own hay to do it with. Their hay is all wanted to feed their own stock. In almost all cases they have sheep to keep through the winter.

52,023. Yes, but circumstances may arise when it would be better for them to sell their stock in the autumn?—Yes, but I do not think it would enter their minds to do it, to sell off the greater part of their stock.

52,024. Do you not think they are sufficiently alive to their own interest?—They are governed by custom to a great extent. If such a case were shown to me and that it would benefit the tenant without injuring the farm, no difficulty would be made about it, but it has not arisen.

52,025. I know it has answered my purpose this year to sell a lot of straw from my farm?—No doubt it might, but there is no market for straw here. They would only sell to the neighbouring farmer, or pay a heavy carriage by railway.

Lord Kenyon.

52,026. I have a question to put to you which is handed in by Mr. Stephen: "Can you give us "any figures as to the provision of places of "worship, schools, &c., by landlords?"—I have not been instructed to give evidence on that point. I do not suppose Miss Thomas would wish to put it forward, but no doubt she has herself supplied wholly, I think, three churches and three vicarages, and the endowments of them. I have not accurate details, but to my knowledge she has certainly contributed towards the funds of all the chapels in the Llwynmadoc neighbourhood, contributed in money, and in two cases given additional ground. Did you mention schools?

52,027. Yes?—As to schools, she has built and maintained altogether three schools, and another she was the principal contributor to, she maintained that also up to a few years ago.

52,028. The following question is by Mr. C. M. Nixson: "You say that the larger farmers "meet the times of depression better than the "smaller farmers, is this due to the latter pay-"ing more for their land per acre?"—No, I explained, I think, that they pay less.

52,029. He refers to the smaller farmers?—The smaller farmers really pay less. They are not paying market value after putting the buildings at a moderate computation. Our houses are all very good, and we have found it impossible as a matter of fact to build any cottage under a cost of 200*l.* according to modern ideas.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,030. But they pay more per acre with the buildings?—Yes, but they do not pay sufficient to pay for the buildings alone.

52,031. But they pay more per acre if you take the acreage?—Yes, they pay more per acre.

Lord Kenyon.

52,032. I think from the paper you put in, it appears that the per-centage on building is more than the rent?—Yes, the per-centage on building is more than the rent, if you take 5 per cent. Of course you could make your own reduction for 4 per cent.

52,033. I have some further questions to put to you, which are handed in by Mr. Nixson: "Is game strictly preserved?"—No, game preserving is very moderate. In many parts of the estate it is not preserved at all. It is supposed to be preserved.

52,034. "Is compensation given for damage done by game?"—No case has ever arisen. Each case would be considered on its own merits, and certainly it would be given if asked for.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,035. Has any complaint ever been made?—No complaint has ever been made.

Lord Kenyon.

52,036. It has never been asked for?—No.

52,037. The following questions are by Mr. Lee: "Are tenants expected to do haulage for landlords—such as drainage and buildings?"—I have read that in my evidence.

52,038. They always do?—Yes.

52,039. "Are they paid for doing it"?—No, they are not paid. All big improvements are done at the tenant's request, on condition that he does the hauling. They are not paid unless they leave. When they leave they are paid, if they leave within 10 years of its being done. One tenant was paid the whole amount on leaving the year after.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,040. Is that in the agreement?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

52,041. There is no schedule to the agreement at all, is there?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,042. Is it a well understood thing on the estate with regard to the haulage?—Their being paid for it?

52,043. Yes?—No, I should say it is not. It has been introduced while I have been here. So very few tenants go away; they never go away of their own free will if they can help it, and therefore the cases do not arise often.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,044. There are many demands for farms when one is vacant, I presume?—Yes, I gave the number of applicants from 5 to 12.

Lord Kenyon.

52,045. Mr. Lee's questions continued: "Do landlords charge interest on improvements?" I think you have dealt with that?—I have given all the details.

52,046. "In the case of free haulage do the tenants object?"—No, I have never had any objection at all.

52,047. "Can you tell us what allotments are let at per acre in this district?"—There are no allotments, and there is no demand for them; all the labourers and all cottagers are supplied with a cow pasture if they want it. Do you wish to know the rent per acre for the cow pasture?

52,048. Yes, what is the rent?—It comes to from 1*l.* to 1*l.* 2*s.*, including the rates and tithes. The cottages are separate; some cottagers take cow pastures and some do not.

52,049. Mr. Lee's questions continued: "Have "facilities been given to the tenants to come "forward to give evidence before the Com- "mission?"—I do not know what that means—facilities. I sent a circular to say that we should be very glad if they would come forward.

52,050. You did?—Yes, a circular to all the tenants.

52,051. "Has there been any demand for allotments?" You said none?—None.

52,052. "What is the condition of the buildings and outbuildings?"—I think they are very fair. Dwellings are very good and outbuildings very fair.

52,053. "Are you aware that a statement was "made yesterday that gamekeepers destroyed "dogs, and are you also aware that this notice "is posted a short distance from this hall?" The notice is as follows: "All dogs and fowls found on these grounds will be destroyed. (By order)." I do not know by whose order?—I am not aware that it is posted up. It has nothing to do with anything that I know of.

52,054. It has nothing to do with you; it is not by your order?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,055. Have you never heard complaints of dogs having been destroyed or poisoned?—Yes, I have. None have arisen lately. Where poison is used for vermin, it often does happen by accident.

52,056. I have some more questions to put to you, which are handed in by Mr. C. M. Nixson: "Were allotments or gardens given to the Lord Kenyon.

"workmen at Builth Road from Miss Thomas' "estate?"—Yes.

52,057. "What price was obtained for these allotments?"—The railway company took them. I really do not know what price was obtained. I have not got up the question, I am afraid. The state of affairs is that it is let to the railway company altogether, and they let it to the labourers.

52,058. It is let in one lump to the railway company?—Yes, that is so. It was different when it was first let, but there was a great difficulty in collecting the rents at all, because the men kept moving on. So it was let to the railway company who take the whole responsibility. I am afraid I cannot tell the amount of rent exactly. I do not know the acreage or anything.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,059. You do not know at what rent the land is now let by the company?—I am afraid I have not the figures in my head.

52,060. They do in some parts charge enormously?—I think I remember the rent—the dearest a man paid for a garden was 3*s.* 6*d.* half-yearly, but I am not sure.

52,061. What sized garden?—I am afraid I must not go into the figures. I do not remember well enough.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,062. I understand you do not know what the railway company charge for this land?—No, I do not know.

Lord Kenyon.

50,063. Is this the notice that you have issued to the tenants (producing printed notice)?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

I think I had better read this. It is as follows:—

"Caerwnon,

"Dear Sir, "April 22nd, 1894.

"According to present arrangements the Welsh Land Commission sits at Builth, for Breconshire, on May 9th, and at Llandrindod, for Radnorshire on May 11th. Miss Thomas will be glad if any of her tenants can assist the Commissioners in obtaining such information as may be of use to them.

"Yours truly,

"A. Evan Thomas."

That is a very proper notice.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Lewis called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

52,064. You are a tenant farmer on the Llwynmadoc estate?—Yes.

52,065. Where do you live?—Cefnhafdre, Llanafanfawr.

52,066. What is it you wish to state?—I am a tenant on the Llwynmadoc estate, and on this estate I do not believe that any difference is made between tenants, whatever their political or religious belief may be. So far as things are concerned on this estate, I prefer an annual taking, because in bad times I receive so much in abatement, and I can also give up my farm. I have every assurance that I may be allowed to remain on the farm so long as I can pay for it. I have not heard that any of the penal clauses in the agreements on this estate have ever been put in force. So far as my experience goes, there is no necessity for anybody mediating or interfering between the landlord and tenant. The buildings are all made by the landlord, and the haulage is done by the tenants. I feel it my duty to say that the very best feeling exists between the landowner, Miss Thomas, the agent, Commander Evan-Thomas, and all the tenants on the estate. That is all my statement, but I am prepared to answer any questions.

52,067. Are the following gentlemen here, Mr. John Samuel, Tynmawr, Llanfechan?—Yes.

52,068. Mr. Morgan Williams, Cwmfadoc, Llanafanfawr?—Yes.

52,069. Mr. John Williams, Tanyrallt, Llanafanfawr?—Yes.

52,070. Mr. Evan Protheroe, Tyncwm, Llanfihangel Abergwesyn?—Yes.

52,071. Mr. John Jones, Dolgaer, Treflis?—No, I do not think he is here.

52,072. Mr. Rees Price, Llwynbrain, Treflis?—Yes.

52,073. Do you come as the spokesman of those other gentlemen?—No, they are here to speak for themselves, but I think at the same time that I give their feeling in the matter.

52,074. That is what I mean?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,075. How long have you been on this holding?—12 years.

52,076. Was your father or was any relative of yours there before you?—No, but there was a great-great-grandfather of mine there previously.

52,077. Where had you been before you came 12 years ago to this farm?—I served as a labourer or servant for 20 years.

52,078. On the same farm?—No, I served for six years on one farm, and eight years on another, that being on this estate.

52,079. Have you a written agreement?—Printed.

52,080. Is it in English or in Welsh?—English.

52,081. Have you it here?—I have not it here.

Mr. Richard Jones.

There is a copy of the agreement of the estate which has been handed in by Commander Evan-Thomas.

Lord Kenyon.

52,082. Do you come from the parish of Llanafanfawr?—Yes.

52,083. Is that a Welsh-speaking parish?—It is Welsh that is generally spoken, but most people can speak English as well. We prefer Welsh.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,084. I see by the agreement that you are to be allowed, on quitting, compensation according to the custom of the country for all improvements upon the premises set out in the third part of the first schedule to the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883?—Yes

52,085. Do you know what are the improvements set out in the third part of the first schedule of the Act of 1883?—No, I do not know what those improvements are, but we are not interfered with much by that agreement. It does not make any difference to us that it is in existence.

52,086. But supposing that you received a notice to quit, you would be under your agreement, would you not?—Yes, but we have so much confidence in the landlord. We would not sign that agreement for any other landlord except the one that we have.

52,087. Then supposing Miss Thomas sold the estate, where would you be?—We should expect that we would get some compensation to satisfy us.

52,088. Not unless you get a notice to quit from the new owner?—We have so much confidence in her that she would compensate us.

52,089. Is it because then of the confidence that you had in Miss Thomas that you signed an agreement the effect of which you do not know?—Yes, on account of that confidence.

52,090. What is the custom of the country that is mentioned in the agreement?—In what respect do you mean the custom?

52,091. It is the custom of the country that is mentioned in the agreement that you signed?—Yes, but I do not know indeed without I looked at the agreement. It is entirely strange to me. It is in the house though.

52,092. Do I understand you to say that you do not think there is any need for any alteration of the law between landlord and tenant?—I speak only with reference to my relations on this estate. If I changed to another estate very likely a change would be necessary.

52,093. Quite so. Then am I to understand that your evidence only applies to Miss Thomas's estate?—Yes.

52,094. Do you think then that other tenant farmers have got a great many grievances?—I do not think that there are any within my personal knowledge.

52,095. You do not seem to have had much personal knowledge of other places beyond this estate?—I am afraid I speak somewhat like that.

52,096. I am very pleased to find that you have such a pleasant place, and have such good surroundings, but how is it that you had a lease at all; how is it you have an agreement at all with your landlady?—This agreement had been signed before I ever went to this place, if I have to speak everything.

52,097. Then you never asked for an agreement?—I married a widow, and the agreement was there before I went.

52,098. I am very glad you have such confidence in the landlady, but you must remember that this good Miss Thomas will not live for ever. Are you satisfied that you will be on such pleasant terms with the next owner?—Quite as good relationship.

52,099. Then there are some more Thomases to come in, I expect, I am very glad to hear it?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,100. Did you say how many acres you farmed?—229 acres. I have had some addition since then.

52,101. Were you a labourer until you married this widow?—Yes, servant on a farm.

52,102. Which do you think it is best to be, a small farmer or a labourer?—I do not think I can reply to that question. It is rather a difficult matter in either case.

52,103. Which do you think most profitable?—Nor can I reply to that question.

52,104. Did you make a profit on your farm last year?—No, I cannot say that I did.

52,105. Did you the year before?—No.

52,106. Or the year before that?—No, nor even then.

52,107. The year before that?—Perhaps I did. We have had three or four bad years.

52,108. Then are you satisfied with an abatement of 15 per cent.?—Yes, we are.

52,109. Do you think it is sufficient?—I cannot say what is really enough when times are very bad. Even if we had our own farms for nothing, we would have a difficulty.

52,110. What is your idea of what rent ought to be?—I do not understand that question.

52,111. I will put it in this form. What is your idea as to the method in which rent ought to be assessed?—If there were a scale to fix it according to market prices, that would be more agreeable and more consistent.

52,112. Do you think that this is what rent ought to be: that you should have interest on your capital, and that you should be rewarded for your skill; and then what would be remaining should be the rent?—Yes, undoubtedly that would be right.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

52,113. Then if that principle were worked out, would you pay any rent?—Not so much as we have done within the last two or three years. We could not pay in full.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,114. I will ask you one question before you leave: when did you sleep the easier, when you were a labourer or since you are a farmer?—Do you mean 12 months altogether, or some nights in the 12 months?

52,115. Put it whichever way you like?—I think I slept more comfortably when I was a servant on hire.

52,116. What is it that troubles you now that you cannot sleep?—Perhaps when we are in bed there is a field of corn that wants to be carried, and we hear the rain, and we know that the rain is coming.

Lord Kenyon.

52,117. I have two questions to put to you, one by Mr. Lee, "Did you come here of your "own free will, or were you asked to come before "the Commission?"—Commander Thomas said that he would like it if some of the tenants would come and give evidence.

52,118. Are you referring to that letter which I read just now?—Yes, we received a paper from him to that effect.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,119. But Mr. Lee is asking whether Commander Thomas has said anything to you over and above what was said in the circular?—He said, before I received the paper, that he would like some of the tenants to come and give evidence.

52,120. Has he said so after he sent the circular?—No.

52,121. Have you not seen him since you received the circular?—Yes, I have.

52,122. Was anything said about the Commission when you met him?—Yes, we talked about it, and we said we were coming down on Wednesday.

52,123. Who said that?—I said that we were coming down on Wednesday.

52,124. Did you come down alone this morning?—There was another tenant came with me.

Lord Kenyon.

52,125. The following questions are by Mr. Vincent. "What is your rent for 229 acres?"—I pay 61*l.*, but I have since then had an addition.

52,126. "Would you like Mr. Jones's theory "of rent to be applied in prosperous times?"—Yes, I think we could do with it.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,127. Is it not your experience that it is easier to pay a high rent in good times than a moderate rent in bad times?—My opinion is that it is easier to pay rent in good times than to pay nothing in bad times.

52,128. You have never lost any sleep because you could not get the rent ready, have you?—No, I have not worried myself much, because I thought if I had not got the rent it would not turn out very badly for me.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Samuel called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,129. You are Mr. John Samuel, of Tynmawr, Llanfechan?—Yes.

52,130. Have you heard the last witness's evidence?—Yes.

52,131. Do you agree with that evidence?—Well, as near as can be, especially in connexion with Miss Thomas.

52,132. Is there anything you wish to add to it?—No, I do not think there is. Certainly the rents were high, but I do not think that we have made a complaint personally to her.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,133. Then you are not satisfied with the 15 per cent. abatement?—Well, I do not think we are. As for myself I am not. The abatement does not meet the way prices are down, but we have not made a complaint and the blame is on ourselves.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,134. You are in hopes of better times?—Just like that.

52,135. And you have a good landlord?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,136. You do not make any money now, do you?—Oh, dear, very far from doing it.

52,137. Do you think that most of the tenants are able to pay their rent even with the 15 per cent. abatement without borrowing money?—No, I do not think they do. If there is a large return of sheep or something like that they may, but in the middle of the country I am certain they do not.

52,138. Then I may take it from you that even on Miss Thomas' estate farming is not a paying employment at the present day?—Oh dear no, far from it. We may do a little in one or two years, but then it goes back and more with it very often. We are like that—just a bit to the mouth and there we are living.

52,139. How long have you been farming?—Well, there I was born.

52,140. During the time you have known this country do you think rents have been too high all the time?—Well, I do not know. I cannot say what it is, but it has been easier times for me to pay than now.

52,141. What do you say?—It has been much easier for me to pay for the land than it is now. I should say in these last 15 years, well, specially 10, whatever indeed. I think I cannot talk as far as the 15.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

52,142. Do you think any of Miss Thomas' tenants have saved money?—I do not think they have; I cannot say; I cannot answer but for myself exactly.

52,143. May I put this to you; you need not answer the question unless you like; have you saved much money over your life's work?—No.

52,144. Suppose you received a notice to quit I am sure Miss Thomas will not give it of course but suppose she did give you notice to quit this farm, though your old age is approaching and is not very far distant, have you any money to fall back upon?—Oh, no, I have laboured for nothing

52,145. And that after a pretty good long life during which you have worked hard on Miss Thomas' estate?—Well, of course, I have brought my children up, and perhaps then I have had some little. Maybe I have in good years saved their labour.

52,146. Quite so, your children have worked for you?—Oh, yes, these last 15 years or more.

52,147. So that you would have been very much worse off but for the fact that your children had given you unpaid labour?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,148. You have no hostile feeling at all against your landlady?—No, not the least.

52,149. The only complaint you have to make is that the rent is too high?—That is all, and owing to so much taxes and things that are paid off the rent and appear on the rent more than I remember since the time I had to begin to manage. That was about from 1840 to 1845 somewhere.

52,150. Have the taxes increased during the last 20 years, say since 1870, 24 years, since the formation of School Boards?—Well, I think they have. However, labour has gone up wonderfully; even the shoemaker, the carpenter, the blacksmith, everything has gone up.

Lord Kenyon.

52,151. There are two or three questions by Mr. Vincent: "Have you not taken a new farm lately?"—Yes.

52,152. "If farming does not pay why did you do this?"—Well, I have got a great many children.

52,153. "Have you established sons in farms"?—Yes.

52,154. I suppose you gave them some capital to start with?—Well, they have been too many. I had too many sons, more than I wanted on my farm, and they got very little money.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,155. Of course, you placed them on farms because they could not do anything else?—Yes, that was like their occupation.

Lord Kenyon.

52,156. This is a question by Mr. Lee: "Are "there any tenants who are afraid to come to "this Commission and give evidence"?—Well, I should think there are; I do not say to this place, but it is something that has raised the tenant and the landlord against one another. It is not anything that we care about it as tenants, I believe.

52,157. I will put a question to you of my own. Would you have come here unless you had thought that Miss Thomas liked you to come?—Well, not as to complaints. I had no complaints to bring.

52,158. What I want to know is this: whether it is a good thing for the landlords to issue notices to the tenants to come forward?—I do not understand you.

52,159. Miss Thomas issued a circular letter to you?—Yes.

52,160. I was wondering in my own mind whether that was a good thing to do it or not; whether it was better to leave it for the tenants to come forward if they liked, or whether it was better to send them a letter saying that the landlord was willing that they should come. Which do you think would be the best?—Well, I do not know personally myself that they would come. They would come here to listen, but I do not think that they would come except they had the letter from her. She said in the letter that she wished to give every assistance to the Commissioners.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Morgan Williams called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

52,161. You are Mr. Morgan Williams of Cwmfudoc, Llanafanfawr?—Yes.

52,162. Have you anything to add to the evidence you have heard of the last two witnesses?—No, I have nothing.

52,163. Do you corroborate what you have heard?—I do.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,164. And what was said by the last witness?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Williams called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

52,165. You are Mr. John Williams of Tanyrallt, Llanafanfawr?—Yes.

52,166. Have you heard the evidence of the last witnesses?—Yes.

52,167. Is there anything you wish to add?—No, I have nothing to add.

52,168. You are on perfectly friendly terms with your landlady I understand?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,169. And you think you are representing the general feeling of the tenants on the estate?—Yes, I believe I do represent it. We have nothing to say except we think the rent is high.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,170. You agree in fact with John Samuel?—Yes, I do.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Protheroe called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

52,171. You are Mr. Evan Protheroe of Tynycwm, Llanfihangel Abergwesyn?—Yes.

52,172. Have you heard the evidence of the last two or three witnesses?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,173. Of the last four witnesses?—Yes, I have heard the last four witnesses.

Lord Kenyon

52,174. Do you corroborate their evidence?—Yes, I do.

52,175. Is there anything you wish to add?—No, nothing more.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. REES PRICE called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,176. You are Mr. Rees Price of Llwynybrain, Treflis ?—Yes.

52,177. Have you heard the evidence of these last witnesses ?—Yes.

52,178. Do you corroborate what they say ?—Yes, I do.

52,179. Have you anything you wish to add or to alter ?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,180. You corroborate what was said with respect to the rent—that you have nothing to complain of, but that the rent is too high ?—No ; the rent is rather too high in bad times sometimes.

Lord Kenyon.

52,181. Would it be too high a rent if the times improved ?—No, I cannot say that. On full times it is rather high.

52,182. Taking the last ten years, would it be too high a rent on the average ?—Yes, rather. I think so on bad years.

52,183. On bad years, yes; but taking the good ones and the bad ones and averaging them ?—No, I cannot say decidedly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,184. How many acres do you farm ?—240.

52,185. What is the rent ?—81*l.*

Mr. Griffiths.

52,186. You have had abatements during the last few years ?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

52,187. Do you think that that per-centage is sufficient to meet the present depression ?—No, on bad years. It is very poor land and you cannot make money.

52,188. Do not you consider the past year a bad one ?—Yes, very bad.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,189. Suppose you left that estate, would you get a cheaper farm anywhere else ?—I do not know ; I cannot tell you.

52,190. It is 7*s.* an acre. Of course it depends entirely on the land. I not know what the quality of the land may be. I know some part of the Llwynmadoc estate ; but 7*s.* an acre does not seem to me to be very high for land in Breconshire ?—No

Lord Kenyon.

52,191-2. Is it very high land ?—Yes, some of it.

52,193. What is the proportion—how much high land is there, do you know ?—No, I cannot tell you exactly.

52,194. How many sheep does it carry ; how many sheep do you keep ?—I keep there in the summer from 300 to 400.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,195. How many sheep to an acre do you consider ?—I cannot tell you exactly.

52,196. How many sheep have you on your mountain ?—From 300 to 400 sheep.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. RICHARD WILLIAMS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,197. You are Mr. Richard Williams, of Plascelyn, near Hay ?—Yes.

52,198. Do you give your evidence in English or in Welsh ?—English.

52,199. You have a statement, I think ?—Yes.

52,200. Will you read it ?—I am a freehold farmer living at Plascelyn, in the parish of Llanigon, in the manor of Tregoyd, where I live, but the evidence which I wish to give relates to the Wye Side Division of Radnorshire, more especially in the manor of Vellwg. I begin with ownership. The landlord gets all the rents he can from the tenant, laying out as landlord in repairs as little as he possibly can. The tenant (in my experience at any rate) has not fair play in the matter. I am speaking now generally, not of myself in particular. There have been several enclosures in that locality in years past. I mean the Little Hill was enclosed. Then Llanwhenip Common was enclosed. Then Llanstephan Common was enclosed. There are several cottages in that neighbourhood as well as other neighbourhoods that have been out of repair and unoccupied. The inhabitants have decreased these last years in almost every parish in our district there. They have become unoccupied, and in my opinion the commons were beneficial to the cottagers at the time. In the inclosure there were no recreation grounds nor allotments selected. There is a deal of unenclosed land yet which exists, and would not pay for cultivation if it was enclosed. It is only good for sheep and cattle for grazing. The right of common chiefly exists among tenants occupying farms adjoining the hills, although there are some cases in which persons have acquired rights through usage. As a rule the farms are let with the right to turn out the number of sheep supposed to be put on which is three to the acre. The unenclosed land enhanced the rents of the adjoining farms, the benefit accruing to the landlord and not to the tenant. A landlord cannot properly manage his property without capital. In the case of absentee landlords it is left to the management of agents, which generally has a bad effect upon the land and buildings. It is not in the interests of the tenants to differ with the landlord on politics or religion. He will not get any improvements done or favours granted. An agent has very often received no special training. There are some cases, but only rare cases of agents who have had special training, at least have had experience in the matter. I am not speaking now in that respect this year, because the agent belonging to this estate is very well qualified, but I am sorry to say in some instances they are not so.

52,201. Is that the Maesllwch Estate that you are alluding to?—Yes. The 2nd February is the usual time of entry in my district. Farms are generally let from year to year. There has not been much demand for leases. I qualify that—"not much" demand, because I had a lease once on the same estate. It is very rare to have leases, but I prefer them. Changes of tenancy have become more frequent than in former years, I attribute that to the downward course of the price of land, and also to the over preservation of game. There are many cases in which tenants have notice to quit because they kill the rabbits. Although another reason may be given by the landlords the rabbit killing is at the bottom of it. There is generally a clause in the agreement that the landlord may take so much land for planting trees and allow so much in the rent. Also the person who buys the timber is liable for damage to land and fences, but great difficulty is often experienced in getting damages. The landlord does not compensate. The usual conditions of tenancy are preservation of game, cultivation of farms in a particular way, generally the four course system. There are penalty clauses as to breaking up pasture land. The tenant usually has a copy of the agreement. The rent usually runs from 1*l.* to 2*l.* an acre, and it is generally fixed at a gross sum. There is great complaint that there is no uniformity in rents. The rental of small farms is from 10 to 15 per cent. higher than that of larger farms. The average rent of upland farms is from 10*s.* to 1*l.* per acre, and low land farms from 24*s.* to 2*l.* an acre. The right of pasturage over commons is taken into consideration when the rent is fixed. In some cases tenants have to haul coal and wood and gravel to the mansion house for the landlord without any compensation, and also to haul timber for repairs. That does not apply to the Maesllwch Estate. There is a good deal of competition for small farms and consequently the rent is excessive in many cases, and the higher bidders who were accepted as tenants have not the money to work the farm properly. Arbitration is never resorted to as a means of settling the rent. The February rent is usually paid in June, and the August rent usually in December. The tithe is paid in some instances by the landlord and sometimes by the tenants. The land tax and the property tax are allowed by the landlord. Chief rents and local rates are paid by the tenant. He also pays the income tax, but is allowed it back by the landlord. Local rates never were so high as at the present time. The rate is as much as 9*d.* four times a year; sometimes 10*d.* Farms in my neighbourhood vary from 20 to 45 acres. Many of them have been consolidated in the last 25 years with the object of curtailing the expense of repairs. In some cases tenants were given notice to leave for this purpose. The consequence is there is less labour and less land cultivated and more thrown into grass. This applies more to uphill farms. The result is, there is not so much corn grown. The population has decreased, and some of the houses and buildings have been left to go down. Sub-letting is never allowed. As a rule a farm of from 200 to 300 acres is best cultivated, and in times of depression the small farmer suffers most in the end then comes the larger one; the medium one comes off best and can best provide for his family who generally assist him. Fallowing is not usual. It does not pay in these bad times to let a field lie idle for a year. The low price of corn has been the cause of the change, and the consequence is that less is made out of the land and labour is diminished. The landlord is generally required to repair the outside of buildings, but does not always do it. The tenants improvement is simply in the cultivation of the land, draining, fencing, and manuring. Sometimes the draining is allowed by the landlord; not in every case. The landlord puts up buildings for the stock, not oftener than he can possibly help. He also finds gates and posts which are put up by the tenant, occasionally, but not always. Manures and seeds are paid by the tenant. No compensation for improvements is given except for such as can be obtained under the Act, then the landlord generally has a counterclaim ready to put in which ousts the tenant or frightens him out of proceeding with his claim. Written consent for improvements is not often applied for, and is not often applied for owing to the want of fixity of tenure. Perhaps you, gentlemen, would like to see the lease of the farm which I occupied (handing same). Game is strictly preserved, also rabbits and hares. The tenants dare not avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act. Much damage is done by rabbits for which there is no compensation. Tenants are expected—as a rule they do it out of compliment to the landlord—to beat coverts for him. The landlord will not allow a tenant to keep a labourer if he has been seen even picking up a rabbit. When I entered upon this estate, as you will find by the lease there, the house and land comprising 12 acres was at the rent of 80*l.* a year on a lease of seven years. When the lease was up I applied for another lease, but was refused, not because it had paid me, but because it was my home and I wished to remain, but I could not remain so long as the rent was high and the buildings in such a state. I offered on a lease to renew it even if it was a high rent, and put up the buildings myself if I had a lease. The consequence was that I had to leave as soon as I could, but I had this privilege with the agent that I put somebody in after me to make the best bargain I could to dispose of my business. That is not always the case. At the same time I held land, 70 acres, of General Wood—Colonel Wood now of Gwernyfed—just the other side of the river and adjoining the town, at 102*l.* a year. I applied for a lease and failed to obtain one. I had it for about five years, and he came and asked me if I would grant him one privilege to give up seventeen acres of meadow land—the only meadow land on the property—for allotments. Before I would give an answer to that I asked him, "When will you want any more off me," because the year before he had come with the same tale, and asked me to give up the two little meadows, which were about four acres, as he wanted them for labourers. This I granted, but they were not given to the parties he said they were to be given to. Then afterwards he told me that he would give me his word that he would not disturb me for 12 or 14 years; he was going abroad. Under those conditions he would allow me 2*l.* an acre for the land that he took off, the land that I would allow him to have for allotments. The consequence was that I gave him permission to have the meadow land, he allowing me the 2*l.* an acre, and also to allow me to remain to have the land in my possession.

See 65,956–66,000.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,202. Was that arrangement put into writing?—No. Two years after he gave me notice for the whole of it, because he said there was a demand for allotments, but after the notice I felt that I was aggrieved for it, and I wrote to say that if it was not for allotments I should still keep it. I knew there was no demand for that ground for allotments, for it was not meadow land. It was rough pasture. In consequence of that I did some more manuring to improve it, because I took his word that I should have it for 12 or 14 years, he said, at least, but ultimately when the time came he had let it to another tenant farmer, a neighbour of mine, for the same money. I asked him if I should have the privilege of letting it to a tenant farmer, a tenant of his as well, and therefore I should be paid for my improvements, and that he refused to me. Therefore I failed to get any compensation for the improvements I had done.

Lord Kenyon.

52,203. Is that all your statement?—That is the substance of it.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,204. You are living on your own estate now, are you?—Yes.

52,205. What was this house and 12 acres of land that you gave 80*l.* a year for?—It is a grocer's shop.

52,206. In Glasbury Village?—Glasbury Village.

52,207. Was the land accommodation land?—Yes, it would be accommodation land. It is all meadow land and pasture.

52,208. Do you happen to know what the rent was that was given after you left?—It is still the same, but I had that privilege of putting somebody in there, and getting something out of it.

52,209. Had anything been done to the buildings?—No, I am sorry to say not.

52,210. Not now?—No.

52,211. Did you want increased buildings for your business?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,212. What were the commons that you alluded to in the early part of your evidence, Little Hill and Llanwhenip Common, and Llanstephan Common?—Yes.

52,213. Are they private property or are they manorial property?—Private property now.

52,214. You said, I think, that they were advantageous to the cottagers, and enhanced the rents and helped the landlord, but not the tenant?—They are private property now, not then.

52,215. They were enclosed under an Act, I suppose, were they?—Yes.

52,216. Then I was going to ask you about the cottages. Were there many cottages built there?—There have been a great many cottages, but they were getting into a bad state before that.

52,217. Were they built by squatters on the common?—I believe there were a good many of them, but they were all becoming very bad.

52,218. What has become of those cottages?—Oh, they have gone down.

52,219. Gone down?—Yes, the greater part of them.

52,220. The ruins of them are there still, I suppose?—The remains of them, yes; but a great many of them had gone down just before then.

52,221. Then you say that leases are rare. You had one?—I had one.

52,222. Afterwards, do I understand, you applied for a lease and that it was declined?—Yes.

52,223. Have any leases been given to other people in that neighbourhood?—No, I do not believe one that I know of.

52,224. Have they been applied for?—I do not know that they have. It is not usually granted.

52,225. Then you instanced a case of notice to a tenant to quit because he had killed rabbits?—It is often so.

52,226. Can you name any case?—Yes, I think I could.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

52,227. Do you know of your own knowledge that it was because he killed rabbits?—Yes.

52,228. You know that that is the case?—Yes.

52,229. What was the case that you speak of—on what estate?—On the Maesllwch estate—at least he told me himself that was the reason.

52,230. The tenant told you that was the reason?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,231. You say the rents were advanced on the Maesllwch estate in 1879?—Yes; in my memory they have been re-valued twice.

52,232. In 1848 and 1879?—In 1858. I was interested in that myself.

52,233. Was there a general valuation of the estate in 1879?—Yes, the whole of the estate in 1879.

52,234. And the result was an advance of 10 per cent. in the rents?—Yes, as a whole.

52,235. Do you think the times then justified an advance in the rent. What kind of season was 1879, do you remember?—I could not remember.

52,236. I thought it was a season that was pretty well impressed on the minds of most farmers as one of the most disastrous seasons that has been known in the last 50 years?—Yes.

52,237. Did not you get any sheep fluke in 1879?—I had a few sheep lost then.

52,238. Did the farmers generally in Radnorshire suffer from sheep fluke?—Yes. This valuation did not affect me for this reason—I wish it would—because the valuer was forbidden to come over my place. I had a notice with others to be revalued, and I was to take it at the revaluation.

52,239. Do you think that if he had gone over your place you would have profited by the revaluation?—Yes, and therefore I went to him before he left to ask him why he did not come and he went down to the estate to ask if he should come, thinking it was an omission.

52,240. What did they say?—They told him no, not to go over that place. I applied for it several times to have it revalued, and they told me they valued it themselves.

52,241. You think the revaluation was forbidden because the agent thought it would reduce the rent?—That is my impression.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,242. What estate was that you were speaking of when you gave that last instance?—The Maesllwch estate.

52,243. Why do not the tenants avail themselves of the Ground Game Act and kill the rabbits?—It would be as well to go at once, many of them: I do not say everyone of them, because those farmers near the preserves undoubtedly would have to leave; at least they think so.

52,244. You think if they did it they would have to quit?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

52,245. That is the unwritten law we hear of that you are all afraid of?—That is the impression that is given, but I know that many of the farmers do exercise that right.

52,246. What was the reason given that this land should be taken from you and let to another man?—I cannot say.

52,247. Do you differ in religion or politics from the landlord?—Perhaps both.

52,248. Might we suppose that that would be the reason?—Well, I do not know. He is very kind to me, very friendly in many ways, but as a landlord he is not so. I know he is very charitable when we apply to him for any donations towards any charitable purpose, as I do sometimes; he is very kind then; and also I may say of the Maesllwch Estate there are no more charitable people I find in the neighbourhood.

52,249. You do not think that religion or politics makes any difference?—It does not show with that whatever.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,250. I have only one topic to touch upon, and that is this agreement that you have put in. It is an agreement of 1869?—Yes.

52,251. Do you complain of any of the agricultural conditions in this lease more than in reference to the general topics that you have touched upon in the course of your evidence. Is there any special point you wish to bring to our notice?—Well, it is the game question.

52,252. I was rather referring to the other clauses. I was coming to that question of game. This certainly seems to me to go beyond what we have recently seen, of course it is an agreement of 1869. This is one of the clauses: "The "tenant to use his best endeavours to preserve "the game, hares, rabbits and wild fowl, upon "the demised premises (and to forewarn all "persons trespassing or in search of game on "his farm, or upon lands in the woods in or "adjoining to his occupation), and the fish in "the lakes, rivers, and streams in and adjoining "the same, and not to employ any person known "as a poacher thereon. The landlord to have "full power to use the name of the tenant in "and about any action or prosecution against "trespassers, or otherwise, which the landlord "may think necessary to institute or prosecute. "No tenant or shepherd to be allowed to keep "more than one dog, if his sheep are under 100 "in number, and only two dogs if his sheep are "above 100 and not be entitled for any claim "whatsoever for damages done by the game "either with the present land or any future "one?"—That is what I object to.

52,253. Is that in all the De Winton agreements?—I do not know; I never saw any more than that one.

52,254. Did you sign that agreement?—Yes I signed a copy of it.

52,255. You signed the counterpart?—I signed the counterpart.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

52,256. Has any damage been done actually by pheasants or other winged game upon your land?—Not winged game, rabbits.

52,257. Of course the Ground Game Act has done away with the effect of this clause. You could keep the rabbits down under the Ground Game Act. You think you dare not do so. Do you mean to say the tenants on the De Winton estate do not avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—Not generally. In some cases I know they do.

52,258. Are there many rabbits there?—Oh, yes, thousands.

Lord Kenyon.

52,259. Are you referring to the warren?—Generally.

52,260. Are you referring to the rabbit warren?—Yes, they come upon the land adjoining.

52,261. Is not the rabbit warren wired in?—No.

52,262. Not fenced in in any way?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,263. Do you know whether that particular clause about not being entitled to compensation is in the other agreement or not?—I am not aware; I do not know.

52,264. Have you any reason to believe that you were treated in any special manner?—I have no reason to believe so.

Lord Kenyon.

52,265. I have some questions to put to you by Mr. Vincent: "Are you as a matter of fact a "retired cooper?"—Yes.

52,266. "Are you an agricultural expert?"—No, I do not say that I am an expert.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,267. "Please state clearly, in order that "inquiries may be made, the landlords who gave "notice to tenants and the tenants who received "notice for killing rabbits"?—Give the names?

52,268. Yes?—Mr. Williams, Penaworlod, my neighbour, formerly of Maesyronen.

52,269. That is the tenant?—Yes.

52,270. Who was the landlord?—Mr. Lloyd. I have no further evidence than he told me himself.

52,271. Any other?—There is no other name that comes to my mind.

52,272. "Why is absence of uniformity of "rents a grievance: does it matter to one tenant "what another tenant pays"?—No, it does not matter.

52,273. "You object to the landlord's counter-"claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act: "would that counter-claim be a terror to tenants "if the landlords had not suffered substantial "injury"?—I do not know: all I know is by the treatment of Mr. Wood; that is all I know. I failed to obtain any compensation.

52,274. Did he put in a counter claim?—No, because I had not put in a claim I went to him—first of all I went to the solicitor to know if I could obtain something.

52,275. These are questions by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Did the land you rented from Colonel "Wood have any house or buildings on it"?—A cottage and buildings.

52,276. "Your only grievance is that Colonel "Wood took your land for allotments and small "holdings for workmen, is it not"?—No, because I did give him leave to do so. My complaint is that he let it to another party—the whole—without giving allotments.

52,277. This is another question by Mr. Vincent: "Are you aware that you are the only "tenant of whom Colonel Wood has got rid"?—Oh, there are others.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examine 52,309.

Mr. PENRY LLOYD called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See evidence of preceding witness.

52,278. You are agent to the Maesllwch Estate, are you not?—I did not intend to give evidence, I only wish to rebut what the last witness has said. I have been agent to the Maesllwch Estate 22 years.

52,279. You heard the last witness's evidence. What do you wish to rebut?—When I came there the last witness was a tenant on the estate and living in one of the best houses in the village keeping a cooperage, a grocer's shop and a butcher's. He rented accommodation land to the extent of about 12 acres on the banks of the river Wye and he paid for the whole, under that agreement which you have before you, 80*l.* a year clear, and continued to pay without any complaint whatever. As to the cases he has given with regard to the rabbit question, it appears now he gives the name of Mr. Williams, formerly of Maesyronen, his neighbour. Mr. Williams left the farm of his own accord. He gave us notice. We did not give him notice at all. Why, I do not know. I do not believe he left at all because of the rabbits, since he kept a rabbit catcher to kill the rabbits and the rabbits were a considerable source of income to him the last three or four years he was there. The last witness complained of the state of his buildings and said that nothing was done for him. Three or four years ago—I forget the exact year and I have not any notes by me now—there was a new slaughter-house put up for him and a new cow house and his residence was regularly coloured outside and painted whenever he asked for it, and in fact since I have been there for 22 years he has never made a request to me that I have refused. Generally, his evidence to my idea is very much biassed against the estate and against myself personally. He mentioned that the agent was capable in his business but that his son was not. I have no son in the business therefore I do not know at all what he meant by that. I managed the whole business myself and my son had nothing whatever to do with it, not even in my office, so I cannot say what he meant by that. With regard to the valuation, he mentioned the valuation of 1879 and an increase of rent in consequence; that is quite untrue. There was a trustee's valuation made in 1879 on the death of the late proprietor, Mr. de Winton, in order that the trustees should have some reliable information to go upon in future years, and not in a single instance was that valuation taken advantage of. The valuation was considerably higher in the aggregate than the rents then current, but there was not a single alteration or a single notice to quit given in consequence thereof. The valuation was principally made for mortgage purposes. There was another valuation made again four or five years afterwards for a similar reason, and again the valuation of the estate was considerably higher than current rents and no notice was taken of it at all and no notice to quit given or rents raised whatever; so I do not know why he brought in that valuation from the tenants' point of view.

52,280. Have you any knowledge of the 1858 valuation?—The previous valuation before I commenced was 1862 I believe. Then there was a readjustment of rents when the late proprietor came into possession of the estate, and practically those rents were then very much the same as what they are now. We have given an abatement regularly of 10 per cent. all during the bad years, and everything the tenants ask for is done for them.

52,281. Did Mr. de Winton refuse to renew this man's lease?—No, certainly not to my knowledge. I did not as agent anyhow.

52,282. Did he ask for a renewal?—I do not remember it. He continued there under the same agreement.

52,283. Why did he leave?—Of his own accord to put his nephew in. He bought a large estate in Breconshire having made his fortune, I suppose, where he was, and then asked me as a favour to put his nephew in, which I did at once, because we always do so.

52,284. Did he ask you for a reduction of his rent?—The last few years he did to a certain extent begin grumbling about his rent, and his rent, which was 70*l.*, was reduced 10*l.* I think, and I told him I could not reduce it any more because I could always get that money for it.

52,285. It was reduced 10*l.* you say?—To the best of my belief; I have not got the rent book with me, but I believe it is 70*l.* now. The tenants generally do avail themselves of their rights under the Ground Game Act and kill the rabbits. We have never turned a labourer off or a tenant off for killing rabbits in the 24 years.

52,286. Is the warren fenced in?—There is no warren except on the river Wye higher up which is disconnected from the estate altogether. It is quite a separate matter. It is a detached portion of the estate and it is fenced in from the enclosed land. There is the river boundary on one side and the wire fencing on the upper side.

52,287. Are there any rabbits on the upper part of the estate?—They are very much reduced to what they were. We are trying all we can to get rid of them but as in Australia we find it is very difficult indeed to get rid of them. We have had rabbit catchers constantly and our sole object is to get rid of as many as we can. Mr. Williams, whom the last witness referred to, had two rabbit catchers last year, and we did all we could, but still they are very difficult to get rid of.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,288. You do not think that any legislation like the Ground Game Act of 1880 will put an end to game altogether?—Certainly not.

52,289. You do not think the Ground Game Act of 1880 has a tendency to put an end to hares and rabbits?—I do not think so.

52,290. Then do you think that similar legislation which has been suggested to us—namely, that the tenants should have the same right with regard to winged game as they have with regard to ground game, would damage winged game?—No, I do not think so, and I do not think the tenants would wish it either.

52,291. That is not an answer to my question?—Well, I do not think so.

52,292. Do you think there would be any difference in the effect of such an Act?—I do not follow you.

52,293. As I understand your evidence, you think the Ground Game Act of 1880 rather tends to the preservation of hares and rabbits because it gives the tenants an interest in them?—Yes, it does so.

52,294. Then am I to understand that if tenant farmers were given a concurrent right to slay winged game with their landlords that would also tend to the preservation of winged game?—Enormously.

52,295. On the same principle?—On the same principle.

52,296. Now what have you to say in defence of clause 12 of this agreement?—That is the old agreement. Our agreements now are totally different. That is not in our agreement.

52,297. Then you agree that clause 12 is not a proper clause to have in?—Certainly not.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,298. If I rightly understood Mr. Williams, his complaint was that you had not allowed the valuer to go over his land to value it?—I suppose he refused to let the valuer go over it. The valuer was employed by the trustees.

52,299. That was not on your estate?—Mr. Davies, of Frood Vale, was employed by the trustees to value the whole of the Maesllwch estate on the death of the late proprietor?—Until I heard Mr. Williams say so now I did not know that he had not been over Mr. Williams' land.

52,300. I understood him to say that he had applied himself afterwards to have some one to go and value it?—Not to my knowledge. He was employed to value the whole estate and he went over the whole estate to the best of my knowledge and belief; but whether he was prevented from going over Mr. Williams' land I do not know. I understood him to say that he would not allow him to go over it.

52,301. Have you any restriction at all with regard to killing rabbits; can they kill rabbits at all times and can they shoot them or kill them anyhow?—At all times; no restriction whatever.

52,302. What was the reason you took this land from him?—We did not take it from him. He gave it up himself. He left it of his own accord.

52,303. He says it was taken from him?—That is not the truth.

52,304. You deny then what he says?—Totally. He went of his own accord and put his nephew in. There he is, and he cannot deny it. His nephew is there now, and I put him up a fresh barn since he has been there. We are always very glad to put relations in.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

52,305. This is a question by Mr. Nixson: "Did Mr. Williams apply to you to reduce the "rent several times"?—I think, as I said before, the last three or four years before he left the place he began to grumble about the rent. He said it was too high; but I considered he had done very well, and I thought there was no reason to lower it.

Sir John Llewelyn

52,306. It is accommodation land, I take it?—Yes, 12 acres of accommodation land with the best house in the village, a shop, and a slaughter-house.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

52,307. It is not 80*l.* for the land only?—Oh, no, the business there was worth a considerable amount of money. It was a very old-established business. It is called The Shop.

Lord Kenyon.

52,308. Mr. Nixson also asks: "Did Mr. "Davies ask you if he should come to value the "farm"?—I really cannot recollect. It is not to my knowledge. He had orders to value the whole estate. That is all I can say.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Williams recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,309. You have heard the last witness's statement?—Yes.

52,310. What do you wish to say?—I asked him several times to lower the rent.

52,311. He says you did the last two years. Did you do so before that?—Yes, and more than that I asked Mr. Davies to come and value it, and I was willing to take it at the revaluation. He went down to Mr. Lloyd the morning he left and he said he was not to come and value it.

I went and asked Mr. Lloyd again myself after that, and I was willing to submit it to any valuer to re-value it and he refused.

52,312. Did he build you a slaughter-house?—No, he did not, and the slaughter-house is not built yet. It was promised; but it is not built yet.

52,313. Is there anything more you wish to say?—I do not remember anything else.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Watkins Boore called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,314. You are Mr. John Watkins Boore, of Llanowen, Rhulen?—Yes.

52,315. Do you give your evidence in English?—Yes.

52,316. Have you a statement?—Yes.

52,317. Do you prefer to read it yourself?—I prefer reading it myself.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,318. You are guardian for Rhulen, and member of the School Board for Cregrina United District?—Yes.

52,319. And you occupy your own farm of 120 acres?—Yes.

52,320. Now what do you wish to say?—I recollect Llandegly Rhos and Cefndrewen Hills, being enclosed about eight years ago.

The enclosure certainly was for the benefit of the adjoining occupiers, but I think the expenses attending it too heavy. There is still a great deal of unenclósed hill land in the parish which could be put to better use if enclosed, and all the small tenant farmers wish to have it. All occupiers adjoining the hill have a right of turn-out. There is no limit in number, and much unpleasantness caused by one turning out more sheep to pastures than another. At the present price of young sheep and wool, it would be better that the hills were enclosed. Sheep are not now kept so much for the wool as they used to be, many are now reared for the market and not turned out on the hills at all. I can mention cases in which tenants have had their rents raised upon their improving their farms; my own father is one instance. My father rented the farm in 1854 at 62*l.* per annum. In 1858 he had to pay 65*l.* 10*s.* In 1860 his rent was raised to 75*l.* In 1876 his rent was raised to 80*l.*

52,321. What estate was this on?—Belonging to a landlord that had no other farm.

52,322. Who was he?—The late Mr. Thomas Lloyd to begin with, and Mr. Caleb Lloyd.

52,323. Did you buy this afterwards; the same farm?—No.

52,324. It is not the farm you are occupying now?—Not the farm I am occupying now. In 1882 a neighbour, a tenant farmer, went to my father's landlord and offered him 10*l.* per year more for his farm, and from that date my father had to pay 6*l.* per year more for his farm. The landlord would not accept the other farmer although he was willing to give 10*l.* a year more, but my father had to rise 6*l.* per annum, and then my father took it for six years. He let it to him for six years instead of on a yearly tenancy, and then the landlord felled a lot of timber in the six years, but did not allow my father for the damage done to his farm. That was what my father paid until about eight years ago. Then the Cefndrewen hills were enclosed and there were many acres of land enclosed which used to belong to my father's farm. Then the rent was reduced to 70*l.* per annum. I have the receipts, if you would like to see them (producing same). The average rental of land in my district is 1*l.* an acre. Rents are fixed by private treaty, a holding being practically let to the highest bidder. I know of farms on which the rents have been increased in the last 40 years. Temporary abatements of rent is occasionally given in bad times by some landlords from 10 to 15 per cent. The March rent is payable on 27th June, and the September rent on 6th December; farms in my district vary from 30 to 130 acres. There have been many consolidations within the last 40 years, a large number of farms were too small to be worked profitably. I think the farms on the hill sides should be larger, and the smaller holdings in the valley, near good roads, where fewer horses would be required to do the hauling.

52,325. What parish is this in?—Rhulen. The effect of consolidation has been that the land and fences have been neglected, houses and buildings left to go down, in many cases less crops and stock produced, employment for labourers lessened, population and inhabited houses decreased. Twenty years ago stock was very high, and also labour very dear. Many farmers put their land down to grass. The labourers had to leave the district. Many small farms were let as bye-takes. The consequence was that the houses and buildings have gone down. The land did graze for a few years, but now there are hundreds of acres of land that would pay better if it was cultivated, and would produce five, six, or ten times as much as it does now. The houses and buildings are going to ruin, and the men are gone out of the country, and I am afraid the landlord is too poor to put up the houses and buildings. Also, the tenants have not capital to work the land. Much less corn is now grown, and I know farms now worked by one man and a boy, where in former days five or six able-bodied men were required. There is much land going out of cultivation. Price of grain is so low and labour so dear, and a quantity of arable land has gone back into pasture. Few improvements are done either by landlord or tenants. Tenants generally have to pay for their own improvements. According to the custom of the district the outgoing tenant is entitled to so many acres of land, called "oddmark." He can either harvest the corn himself and sell it (not the straw), or agree to sell it to the incoming tenant. He is also entitled to the buildings and a boozy pasture until 1st May. The incoming tenant is entitled to enter the land on the 25th March or 2nd February as the case may be; also a part of the stable to put his horses in. I should like to say that not enough attention is paid to our bye-roads, which is a great drawback to farming. There are certain lengths of road in my district going through, not used but a very little by the inhabitants of the highway board they belong to, although the only roads for others to go to our market towns and so forth, but yet these roads have been neglected, and because they are not used by the inhabitants of the district—or ratepayers that they belong to—they are unwilling to do any repairs to the roads for their neighbours. I consider if we had a cheaper transfer of land it would benefit the landlord and tenant very much. Also encourage those that have their fields intermixed to exchange them and straighten their crooked fences. My opinion is that many poor landlords have been driven to do what they have done, buying their farms when land was dear for the sake of having them to live in themselves.

52,326. Your remedy with regard to roads would lie with the parish councils now, would it not, or the district councils?—Yes, but we have certain lengths of roads over the mountains that have been neglected simply because there has nothing been done to them within the last number of years, I suppose, and then we cannot compel those that they belong to. I want in each district or parish more power given to those that have to go through these roads that do not belong to them.

52,327. You think they should pay the rate themselves?—Yes, if I had the map I could show you lengths of roads over the mountains that are done up the one side of the hill so far as the parish goes, and then there has been nothing done, I suppose, for a considerable time, and those that live in the adjoining parish, because they do not use them, are unwilling to put them in repair and keep them.

52,328. The people in the middle do not keep it up for those that live on the other side?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,329. You are a freeholder, I think?—Yes.

52,330. Did you buy your freehold yourself?—I bought it.

52,331. Have you been a tenant farmer?—My father was a tenant farmer, and I was a tenant farmer about two years. Then my farm came to be sold, and the gentleman that had to sell it gave me every opportunity of buying it, and when I considered the way that my father had been treated I bought my farm.

52,332. Then do you consider now that you are better off as a freeholder or as a tenant farmer?—As a freeholder the difficulty with me is because when I bought my farm I could get any quantity of money, and now since land has gone down I have great difficulty in obtaining money. There is always somebody troubling me wanting their money. I borrowed, of course, and that is where the grievance is.

52,333. So you think you would be better off as a tenant farmer on an estate where good customs prevailed?—I should like, of course, to have a farm of my own.

52,334. You prefer that?—Yes.

52,335. Have you thought out the question of Government advancing money?—Yes.

52,336. What is your opinion about that?—My opinion is that it would be a great advantage. I consider that I am not the only man, but there are many farmers in my district that have been driven to do what I did.

52,337. In your own words, if a landlord was "too poor" to put up the buildings, who do you think ought to do it?—Well, I think it would be a great help to the country and to the nation, if the Government would lend the landlord the money to put up buildings. The reason I state there could be ten times as much produced in some parts of the district than there is by cultivation is because I have done so myself. I have broken up old land, and I consider that some years I have had ten times the quantity since I have broken it up, as what it was worth before to me, and I consider it is a great loss to the nation that there are not hundreds of acres more broken up.

52,338. Then you think that arable farming pays now?—Well, as I stated, I consider that the land in our district will not graze for any long time, and it does better to break it up in rotation.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,339. We have heard rather the reverse of that this afternoon. Did you hear the evidence?—Well, I was sitting in the room.

52,340. Did you agree with that?—I could not say that I heard it.

52,341. That witness did not think that you could better the land in that way; but I suppose the land you refer to is called damp land?—The land I refer to is dry land—sheep land—not deep enough to graze cattle on, but after it has been grazed for a time it grows moss.

52,342. Then you want to break it up again?—Yes. To break it up again for oats and roots.

52,343. What induced you, do you say, to buy your farm?—The gentleman that had the selling of it, and the treatment that my father received with his landlord and with his neighbour.

52,344. The landlord advanced his rent from 62*l.* to 86*l.*?—Yes, on his improvements.

52,345. You did not wish to go through the same course that he did?—No, I did not.

52,346. What interest were you paying for your money? You mortgaged your farm of course?—Yes, I did, and I borrowed a quantity on note of hand.

52,347. At what interest?—The gentleman who sold my farm told me, if I had not 50*l.* of my own, he would find me all I wanted at four per cent.

52,348. So you pay four per cent.?—Yes, but not for the money I borrowed on note of hand. They were coming and offering it to me at three per cent. Then times began to turn, and they all wanted their money.

52,349. They wanted it back again?—Yes.

52,350. Then you had to bring in the lawyers?—Well, the gentleman I had to do with behaved as a gentleman all through to me. I have had to push my way as well as I can, borrowing from Peter to pay Paul all along.

52,351. Then do you pay more interest on this money than you formerly paid in rent?—Well, I do pay a little more than when I bought it.

52,352. Then you think it hard, I suppose, that others around you have abatements in rent when you do not?—Yes.

52,353. Does the mortgagee give you any abatement?—No, he behaves very well to me. It is those that I have borrowed off on note of hand.

52,354. They are the worst?—Yes.

52,355. You mentioned with regard to the straw that you could sell crops, but you must not sell the straw?—Just so.

52,356. But you go out of the farm on the same condition that you went in?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

52,357. Then you have no occasion to grumble at that, have you?—Well, I think it is a bad law. It causes very much unpleasantness very often.

52,358. Why should it; I do not quite understand it?—The going-out tenant will take all the dung that he may make up to a certain time up to the wheat soil and then sow his oddmark, and of course, reap it and harvest it, and perhaps he will not thresh the corn until the 1st May, and the going-in tenant wants the straw at the same time, and then there is very often a good deal of dispute concerning the number of acres of the oddmark.

Lord Kenyon.

52,359. I have one or two questions to put to you by Mr. Stephen: "Are you a member of "your Highway Board?"—Yes.

52,360. "Are not the roads of which you "complain in your own district?"—No. They belong to the adjoining highway board.

52,361. These are questions by Mr. Cowper Coles: "What manor do you refer to?"—I live on Sir Joseph Bailey's manor.

52,362. I expect he means concerning the inclosure?—The inclosure was on Cefndrewen and Llandegly Rhos.

52,363. In what manor?—In the manor belonging to Sir Joseph Bailey.

52,364. You do not know what the name of the manor was beyond that. Is that the name of the manor?—I do not know any other name to it.

52,365. "You stated in the cases of Cefndrewen "and Llandegly Rhos inclosures that the tenants "adjoining the hill only had allotments. Did "not all within the township of Cefndrewen "have allotments and Llandegly Rhos all with-"in the parish?"—Yes.

52,366. "What is the rent of the inclosures "now on Cefndrewen?"—I do not know.

52,367. "Have not the landlords done very "expensive fencing?"—I do not know. I have not had any complaint. I believe that the tenants are very well pleased concerning the inclosure.

52,368. You wish, as far as I can make out from your evidence, that there were more inclosures?—I believe it would be better if there were more inclosures.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Morgan called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,369. Are you a yearly tenant of Miss Thomas of Pencerrig?—Yes.

52,370. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—I live at Noyadd Disserth and am a yearly tenant under Miss Thomas of Pencerrig, and am county councillor for the Colwyn district of Radnorshire, and I am prepared to give evidence for that district. My farm is about 170 acres. The lord of the manor is Sir Joseph Bailey. Labourers are very scarce and demand high wages—indoor servants chiefly—and the wages average from 15*l.* to 25*l.* a year for men. The fences, ditches, and watercourses are not kept up as well as they should be; the farmers cannot afford to keep them up properly. 40 years ago there was double the quantity of land cultivated for corn to what there is now, and most of the arable land has gone back into pasture. The cause is that labour is higher, and the price of corn is so small that it does not pay to grow it. The laying down of pasture has been at the tenant's expense. There are more roots grown now than 50 years ago. There is not much land kept in fallow. One effect has been to drive the labourers off the land and increase the amount of live stock reared. The landlords improve the buildings occasionally, they formerly used to do a little draining but do not now. Any irrigation done is done by the tenants but it would be trifling in quantity. New buildings for stock would be put up to replace old ones, when new gates and posts are required they are supplied by the landlord but paid for and erected by the tenants; repairs to fencing are done by the tenant, the tenant finds all manures and gets no allowance for them. If a tenant is going out the landlord or incoming tenant pays the price of seed sown the previous year. Many of the old tenants are under no agreement. When the Agricultural Holdings Act was passed the landlords gave notice that they would not be bound by the Act. Mr. Gibson Watts' agreements were very hard and fines were enforced for various things. The tenants cannot afford to put up any buildings or at any rate very few. The outgoing tenant is entitled to the off-growing crop of wheat, but gets no compensation for tillage or cultivation; a tenant whose tenancy expires at Lady Day is entitled by custom to a field and water to turn out cattle till the 13th May called a boozy pasture, the incoming tenant is entitled in February to a stable to turn his horses in for purpose of ploughing land. As executor for a deceased tenant I on one occasion claimed compensation for manure but it was refused. I know of no case in which a tenant has got compensation for the general improved condition of his holding The Agricultural Holdings Act is of little benefit to us. Rabbits and hares are not strictly preserved. My landlady gives the tenants 2*s.* 6*d.* for every hare killed by her own keeper, or friends; other game is strictly preserved. The tenants kill the rabbits when they like but leave the hares for the landlady. There is not much damage done, no compensation. Tenants are expected to beat coverts when there is a shooting party on and get treated to a lunch. There are occasionally

charges at petty sessions against farmers' sons for game trespass. A few apples are grown for cider; no market gardening. All tenants keep poultry although they do not farm them, and some keep bees. All this is on a small scale and the individual profit not large. There is market for produce of this kind at Llandrindod. Lessons in butter making have been given at Builth and Rhayader and other places in the county under the auspices of the County Council, and also lectures on manuring. The attendance of this was not very large, and they have not been availed of. Great complaints are made that railway rates for live stock are too high, and the price of stock would improve if they were cheaper. Tenants help one another to shear and sometimes in cutting corn. Insurance of stock is not general; some farmers insure their lives, and a few belong to benefit societies, as also do a few labourers, but they do not join them to any great extent. There are a very few small freeholders in my district, and their number has decreased of late years. The large landowners have bought them up. I know of a few farmers who have bought their own holdings. The condition of these small freeholders appears to be much the same as the rest of the tenant farmers, although they are more satisfied with their lot. Both tenant farmers and their wives and children do most of the work on their farms. The children would not receive any wages. Very few farmers are able to set up their children in the way of earning their own living. Present rents could not be maintained if the children were to be paid for their labour. Where hired labourers are employed their proportion would be about two to every four members of the household who assist. Nearly all the labourers lodge on the premises. Board and lodge is found for them. Boys' wages from 5*l.* to 10*l.*, and men from 15*l.* to 25*l.* The accommodation for servants is much improved, and they generally have their meals with the family. There are hardly any agricultural cottages in my district. There has been a considerable migration among the farmers and labourers during the last 50 years. They generally go to the works. I think very few farming accounts are kept. The present depression commenced from three to four years ago. One cause in the last two years is bad seasons for farmers. I would suggest a reduction of rents and appropriation of tithes to assist the rates as a means of improving the profits from land. The relations between landlord and tenant are friendly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

As you have gone over the ground so fully and well, Mr. Morgan, I shall not ask you any questions.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,371. I will just ask you about one thing you said in reference to farmers' children. Do you think that farmers at the present time are able to set up their children in business or in farms the same as they have done in former times?—No, I do not think they could—but very few whatever.

52,372. You mean the times are so bad that they would not be able to do it?—Yes, I do.

52,373. Do many of the farmers' children go elsewhere than on the farms?—They go to the works.

52,374. Some to business and shops?—Some go to work in the coal mines.

52,375. Do they do better than those that are at home?—Well, they appear to do, but I do not know.

Lord Kenyon.

We have no further questions to ask you, and we are much obliged to you for your evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN POWELL WILLIAMS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,376. Are you a tenant farmer at Cefnllan?—Yes.

52,377. On whose estate are you tenant?—I have four holdings belonging to Miss Thomas, of Llwynmadoc, Sir Joseph Bailey, Sir John Llewelyn, and Mr. Griffith, of London.

52,378. Will you proceed with your evidence?—The first farm I rented was with the late Sir Joseph Bailey's agent, about 11 years ago. The farm used to be 90*l.* rent. I asked for a 10*l.* reduction, which was immediately complied with. The agent told me Sir Joseph was always pleased to see his tenants doing well. He did not wish to rent them too high. We have had since some very bad times, and we have been treated very well with 10 per cent. given us back half-yearly, which has encouraged us very much to get on. I feel sure that Sir Joseph would always like to see his tenants doing well. He is willing to give every possible assistance in good buildings, gates, and so on. I really think the tenants ought to be proud to occupy under such a good landlord and agent. I do not believe that difference of language or politics creates any bad feelings between landlords and tenants. The holdings which I occupy are on yearly tenancies, which I prefer, as good landlords always give us a good per-centage in bad times. If it was by lease we should have to pay full rent and have bad buildings, fences, and other things generally going down before the leases are up, and the place would not be kept so good. There is always a demand for good land under a good landlord, such as on Llwynmadoc, Glanusk, and Penllergaer estates, as I know. The landlords are not asked to reduce the rents, but the farmers outbid each other. I think our farms are fairly secure. Penalising clauses are not enforced against good tenants. I believe that the present arrangement now between landlord and tenant is far better than a Land Court. If there was such a court the landlords would naturally decline to spend so much money on their estates.

The present understanding between landlord and tenant is very familiar indeed. The Agricultural Holdings Act is a dead letter in our district, and should be amended so as to establish full rights to outgoing tenants to sell their hay, straw, turnips, and so on. I believe that farmers should have the opportunity of doing their best with the stuff when retiring or going abroad. The farms are sold in our district with the poor farmer's improvements on them and in them, not receiving a penny compensation for all money laid out, manure, fencing, hauling, and so on, which they ought to be compensated for by all means.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,379. Is that the whole of your statement?—Yes.

52,380. Do you consider 10 per cent. a sufficient abatement under the present depressed state of affairs?—Yes; pretty fair when we had the rent 10*l.* lower.

52,381. You say penalising clauses are never enforced against a good tenant. It is not likely that they are; they are made for bad tenants, are they not, and they are not intended for good tenants?—We would not sign them only we know we are going under a good landlord. I do not think they would be used otherwise.

52,382. Are there many farms sold in this neighbourhood?—There have been four or five in our district.

52,383. And no allowance made to the tenants for any improvements they have made?—No; but not on large estates.

52,384. Generally small estates?—Yes, generally small estates.

52,385. And the tenant's improvements have been sold along with the farm, and no compensation whatever made?—Yes, nothing at all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Powell called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,386. Do you reside at Llwyngwilym, in the parish of Llangammarch?—Yes.

52,387. Will you give us your evidence?—I have lived for 43 years at Maesllech, in the parish of Llanlleonfel, on the Garth estate, ever since I was three years of age. My father died some 17 years ago. Then I and my brother succeeded to the tenancy. W. Fuller Maitland, Esq., M.P. for the county, was the landlord. Some six or seven years ago Mr. Thomas Fuller Maitland, uncle of the previous landlord, Mr. W. Fuller Maitland, bought the estate and became my landlord. Some 13 months ago Mr. T. Fuller Maitland died, and Mrs. Maitland, the present landlady, succeeded to the property. The rent was 100*l.*, and after taking one field from me of 25 acres my rent was 89*l.* I had several times complained that the rent was too high, and had appealed for a reduction, but had no hopes held out to me of any reduction. I never had any allowance owing to depression, &c., while other tenants had occasionally such allowance granted to them. The result of the high rent, depression, and no allowance, was that I latterly gradually began to fall behind in my rent. Consequently I was served with notice to quit in March 1893. Having a large young family and no prospect of another farm, I began to become anxious for my future, and appealed to my landlady for the retaking of the farm last October. When I applied for the farm the only condition on which I was promised the farm was an advance of 1*l.* on the old rent, making it 90*l.*, and I was further told that no one should have it for less rent than 90*l.* When I appealed for repairs I was told I must either do the repairs myself or pay 5*l.* per cent. interest on the outlay. In consequence I said I could not take the farm on those conditions, as it would be impossible for me to pay for it. Since, the farm has been taken by the present tenant, and I am given to understand at the reduced rental of 80 guineas. Before the end of September a distraint was put in for the rent then owing, and I then promised to pay on a certain date, but the bailiff notwithstanding impounded enough of my stock to cover what I owed them, and in order to get rid of them I did pay all the rent owing up to March 1894, on the 23rd of November, 1893. I wish it to be clearly understood that I have no complaint to find with my previous landlord, W. Fuller Maitland, Esq., M.P. Respecting the game on my farm, the birds were very plentifully preserved as the covers were closely adjoining. The gamekeeper of my former landlady, Mrs. Fuller Maitland, sent a letter to my present landlord, Mr. Greenly, stating that as many as 150 pheasants were killed in one season on a farm then in my occupation. During the tenancy of my brother and myself a threshing machine by water power was put up, and I wanted my landlady to take to it, when I left, by valuation, and so far nothing has been done. The landlady is unwilling to take to it further than the part of it outside the barn ee 4,351–4,364.

unless the new tenant is willing to take to the part inside. Now I have left the place, and the machine is still in its place, and so far I have had nothing for it, but am waiting for something to turn up.

52,387A. I think you have stated your case so fully, and it is so perfectly intelligible, that I will not ask you anything at this late hour. I think you have made your points very clearly.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,388. Would you like to have some outside authority to appeal to when you could not deal with your landlord?—Of course I should like that very much.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Rhayader.

SIXTY-FIRST DAY.

The Magistrates' Room, Rhayader, Radnorshire, Thursday, 10th May, 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON IN THE CHAIR.

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.
Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. STEPHEN W. WILLIAMS, F.S.A., called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,389. I believe you are a land agent and surveyor at Rhayader?—Yes.

52,390. Will you give us your evidence?—I have not prepared any statement, but I will go shortly through the points upon which I am prepared to give evidence.

I have been in practice as a land agent and surveyor at Rhayader for 32 years, and during that time I have been employed in valuing and surveying estates in the counties of Radnor, Brecknock, Cardigan, Montgomery, Salop, and Hereford. I have also been largely engaged as an enclosure valuer, and in that capacity I have carried out the allotment and enclosure of extensive tracts of common land in the counties of Radnor and Salop. I have a list of the inclosures here which I carried out:—

In Radnor.

Iscoed	in 1863	1,000 acres.
Uwchcoed	„ 1865	4,152 „
Rhysllyn	„ 1865	2,960 „
Hayston and Wolfpits	„ 1870	700 „
Cefn Drawen	„ 1879	916 „
Bettws Disserth, Hendy Bank, Llandegley Rhos	„ 1879	1,000 „

In Salop.

Llanfair Hills	in 1890	1,600 acres.

The total for which I have acted being nearly 12,500 acres or thereabouts.

I am now the agent for the Corporation of Birmingham, and have the management of all their estates within the watershed area which they have recently acquired by purchase; the total acreage of the watershed area acquired and to be acquired by the Corporation of Birmingham being 45,000 acres in round numbers. I have not the exact figures of the number of acres we have bought, but you may take it we have purchased about 30,000 acres. All the matters in relation to that are proceeding, therefore I am not in a position to give you exact figures at present.

I am also a landowner to a small extent in the counties of Montgomery, Radnor, and Brecknock.

With regard to the effect of inclosures of commons in Radnorshire and Shropshire, there can be no doubt whatever, and I am quite sure I shall be confirmed by every practical farmer, that it has been a very great benefit to the country at large. There have been large tracts of waste land reclaimed; lines of good roads have been made through the country; those roads having been made at the expense of the freeholders, either by rates raised upon them towards the expenses of making those roads, or otherwise by a sale of a portion of their waste lands. These roads have opened up districts which before were without roads. Considerable tracts of the lands that have been enclosed have been brought under cultivation, and I may specially mention that in this county, although it was not an enclosure in which I was engaged, the Swydd Neithon enclosure, carried out about the same time as the Iscoed in 1863, a considerable town sprang up upon what then was nothing but a tract of unenclosed, wretched wet boggy pasture land, well known as Llandrindod common. Since then a rising watering place has sprung up, an enormous amount of capital has been brought into Radnorshire, and a large rateable value created, and a very large amount of money every year is brought into this county and circulated by visitors who come to Llandrindod. Had those commons not been enclosed and the roads and other improvements carried out, I take it Llandrindod might be now in the same condition as it was some 35 years ago.

Upon the higher tracts of land the division of the sheepwalks into severalty instead of their being occupied in common, has tended to peace and good neighbourly feeling amongst the occupiers in the district where the enclosures have taken place. There used to be constant disputes between the farmers and the shepherds. Cases of assault were constantly coming before the magistrates, and, going back to perhaps not very ancient history, murder has taken place upon these sheepwalks, owing to disputes between the rival shepherds and rival occupiers and owners.

Legislation of late years has gone in the direction of stopping the enclosure of commons in Wales, I think because the Legislature has rather acted in ignorance of the nature of our so-called common land. They have supposed that our commons here were like commons in the neighbourhood of large towns that are familiar to me—because I valued a large estate in Surrey some years ago—where in the vicinity of great populations it would no doubt be an injury to those great populations to deprive them of those open breathing spaces. Here we have enormous tracts of land lying open, unreclaimed and waste, which would be improved by enclosure, and even upon the mountain land of Cardiganshire and Brecknockshire I am assured, and I know it of my own knowledge, that if those lands could be divided in severalty, and to a certain extent fenced, it would largely increase the value of them as sheep pastures, I may say from 10 to 15 per cent., owing to the very great loss of stock that takes place. When you once get on to the summit of the great range of hills that stretch from North to South Wales, it is all open, and great losses take place in consequence of the number of sheep that stray away from their walk, and are never recovered, and the farmers who occupy those lands will say that if means could be taken to enclose them to a certain extent, the occupation of those tracts of land would be improved.

With regard to the occupation of the existing unenclosed commons and mountain pastures in the counties of Radnor, Brecknock, Cardigan, and Montgomery, you have already had considerable evidence upon that before your Commission, but I have only read a portion of it, and there is one peculiarity with respect to this district which I should desire to point out, which is that the landlord in many cases provides the stock; he lets the stock of sheep with the farm, and the sheep walk, the tenant paying him interest thereon.

In dealing with the estate which the Corporation of Birmingham have purchased, I may say that, up to now, the Corporation of Birmingham have become possessed of about 11,000 sheep. Those 11,000 sheep are let with the farms. I think there is a system in Italy called the Metayer system, under which landlord and tenant share the produce, and it is very much the same thing here; they are let to the tenant, he paying 5 per cent. upon a fixed price; he takes the produce of the flock, and at the end of his term he has to return that flock intact, that is to say, if they are below the number delivered to him he will have to pay for the losses, and if they are increased he is then paid for the increase at the price per head at which the flock is let to him, upon which he pays 5 per cent. I may mention that the prices vary on that estate that I am now speaking about, and those that I have to deal with in this neighbourhood, from 15*s.* up to 1*l.* a head; the lowest is 15*s.* and the highest 1*l.*

52,391. He pays 5 per cent. on that?—He pays 5 per cent. on the price of the sheep, that is separate entirely from the rent of the farm; in point of fact he is provided with so much capital by the landlord for working the farm, and thereby he becomes a sharer with the landlord. He, the landlord, takes all the responsibility and risk of the flock, taking 5 per cent. on the price. I should like to say a few words upon the general condition of the farming population, having known this immediate district now for more than 35 years, and having been 32 years in practice here. In my opinion the condition of the farmers, and especially of the labourers, has very much improved. I remember when I first came into Radnorshire the labourers in the parish of St. Harmon were living in mud huts covered with straw, and if there was any glass in the window it was of the smallest size, and they were living under the most insanitary conditions. I scarcely know of one of those mud huts left now. The farm houses also have very much improved. The introduction of railways into Wales, as elsewhere, has enabled the landowners to obtain materials, and a very large amount of building has gone on to my knowledge in this district in the way of improving the farm houses, especially upon the larger estates; and where you find very inferior or bad farm houses now, it is very often the case of a small freeholder who perhaps has an encumbered estate and is unable to improve it. But taking the general run in this country there are estates here where very great improvements have taken place. I could mention several, but I will not mention names; I think it is an invidious thing to do. I say that generally. With regard to the relations between landlord and tenant in this district I can say that I believe they are of the happiest possible nature. I do not know any district in which the landlords and tenants get on better than they do here. There is no undue game preserving, and when a farm is to be let there is no difficulty in letting it. There are no farms lying vacant, or waste, as there are in many parts of England. With regard to the emigration of farmers and labourers, there is no doubt there has been considerable migration amongst the farmers' sons and labourers to the great works in South Wales. Trade has been good in South Wales, more or less for many years, and the young fellows have found that they can get better wages there than by working as labourers at home, and consequently there has been a great lack of labourers for some years owing to the great works in South Wales tempting the young fellows away to labour in the iron works and collieries. I know of two or three sons in a family going away to South Wales. This has come under my personal knowledge. There are a large number of independent freeholders in this district, perhaps more so than in any part of South Wales. Radnorshire is especially a county of small freeholders, many of them, I may say, men of ancient families who have lived upon their estates for generations.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,392. Lived and owned the land?—Yes, lived and owned the land.

52,393. Not recent purchasers?—No; many of them are old families that have held their estates for a very long time.

Lord Kenyon.

52,394. Do you mean the old yeoman class?—The old yeoman class. Within the last 50 or 60 years there has been a reduction of that class no doubt; many of them have gone into trade and business, and their properties have been sold, and purchased by capitalists, who have thereby been able to build up large estates in this county. Probably many of the ancient freeholders are represented by our merchants and manufacturers in the great cities. I am not aware that there is anything else I can tell the Commission, but I shall be very pleased to answer any questions.

52,395. In what parish is this large estate purchased by the Corporation of Birmingham?—I will give you the particulars of that. The watershed area is in the counties of Radnor, Brecknock, Montgomery, and Cardigan.

52,396. Give the Radnorshire parishes?—Llansantffraid-Cwmdeuddwr—one parish. In Brecon there is one parish also, the parish of Llanwrthwl. In Montgomery, one parish, the parish of Llangurig, and the Cardiganshire parishes are Caron Uwch Clawdd, Yspytty Ystwyth, and Gwnnws.

52,397. What is the river?—The watershed is entirely the tributaries of the River Wye, or rather of the rivers Elan and Claerwen; the rivers Elan and Claerwen, and their tributaries.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,398. Cwmdeuddwr means the "vale of the two waters"?—Yes. The Elan and Claerwen are the two rivers.

Lord Kenyon.

52,399. That is all purchased for the water scheme for Birmingham?—They have purchased a large portion of that watershed, and they are intending to purchase the whole of it before the period expires under their parliamentary powers. They have seven years for the purchase of the bulk of it from the time when they acquired the Act in 1892.

52,400. I may take it there will be a certain number of evictions?—No, there will be no evictions really. You will understand that the actual surface occupied by the lakes is about 1,500 acres. When that is covered with water of course it will naturally evict the tenants, but the Corporation of Birmingham will be compelled to provide accommodation for the tenants of the lands not covered with water. They look upon it as a property which may become more valuable hereafter, they require to purchase it to preserve the purity of the water, and furthermore to prevent blackmail in the future. I can give an instance which came under my notice a very short time ago of a town which is now about to buy its watershed, the town of Torquay, and they will now have to pay through the nose for it, because their very existence as a favourite watering place depends upon the purity of their water. I could instance the case of Worthing, which has been utterly ruined by the impurity of the water. Birmingham thought it was wise to ensure the purity of the water in the future, by securing the whole of the watershed now.

52,401. Have you had any difficulty in obtaining the land?—No, we have not yet had a single case of arbitration, but we do not know what may be before us in the future.

52,402. You have found the landlords easy to deal with?—I am afraid you are now asking me a question I would rather avoid answering.

52,403. With regard to the letting of sheep, that seems to be singular in this county?—So far as my knowledge goes it is. I was discussing that matter with Lord Lisburne's agent the other day, and he informs me that Lord Lisburne has no sheep let that way, and I think Sir John Llewelyn will tell you as to Breconshire customs better than I can. I can only speak of my own district here.

52,404. We did have one instance of it yesterday; that was the first I heard of the landlord and tenant co-operating with regard to the sheep. Do you find the system works well?—I think it works very well, because it provides a man with capital, and, if he is a good tenant, and a thoroughly honest man, instead of having to provide 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.*, or whatever the amount may be, he gets that provided for him by his landlord.

52,405. Who carried out the inclosure at Llandrindod. Did you?—I did not carry it out, I was engaged in it largely, but I was not the official valuer at Llandrindod.

52,406. What was the date of that inclosure?—In 1862 and 1863, and it might have gone on to 1864. I was engaged for some of the landowners and others in the matter, and in the preparation of the preliminary plans.

52,407. Have you any particulars of that enclosure?—The particulars of all inclosures are to be obtained from the award which is deposited with the clerk of the peace of each county, and also at the Board of Agriculture. There you can have all the information.

52,408. Mr. Brynmor Jones was very anxious to find out all the details of the inclosures?—He will simply have to make an application to the Board of Agriculture and they will furnish him with every particular with regard to that.

52,409. We have the particulars from the Board of Agriculture. We want the details?—They can furnish every possible detail.

52,410. We can get it from the clerk of the peace, no doubt?—If I may suggest it, I think you will find you will get that information almost better from the Board of Agriculture, because they keep records of everything that goes on with regard to inclosures.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,411. Do you know whether any hardships ever existed owing to the taking away of this water by the town of Birmingham?—I am unaware of any hardship at all that could possibly arise with regard to that—quite unaware of it.

52,412. The surrounding farmers have not suffered by the loss of water?—We have not yet taken the water, and I cannot conceive that they can suffer in any way by it. In fact, I think during the next 10 years they will be very largely benefited by the expenditure of something like two millions of money within a radius of five miles of this town.

52,413. Has much land in this neighbourhood been laid down to grass?—Yes, I consider a very large area has been laid down to grass compared to what would be in corn some 30 or 40 years ago, certainly. There is a very large area of grass now. I think the reason for that is that corn has been a very bad paying business for many years past, and the price of stock being good, it has paid the farmers better to raise stock than to grow corn. Moreover, since the introduction of foreign corn and foreign flour the farmers do not even grow corn for their own use to the extent they used to do in old times. They buy their flour in the towns. Radnorshire farmers consume, I expect, a very large amount of American flour, especially in this part of Radnorshire.

52,414. I made that remark coming along. I do not think it would pay farmers in this part to grow corn?—No, I do not think it would.

52,415. Stock of late years has depreciated very much in value as well?—For the last seven years there has been a great depreciation, and what has been much more serious to our farmers has been the very heavy drop in the price of wool, which is a commodity we grow very largely.

52,416. Do you think the land that used to be corned has not depreciated in value?—I am rather of opinion that there is less cultivation. I think the land has been let out in some instances in very bad condition, and I do not think our farmers pay the same attention to top dressing and irrigation as they used to do in this county. Irrigation is of the greatest importance. Now there is very little; the old irrigation gutters are there, but they are never used.

52,417. We found in several places that they were obliged to plough up the land again?—There is no doubt that a cold clay soil if laid down in bad condition will go poorer and poorer every year.

52,418. Do you consider that that sort of land cannot be cultivated with any profit?—At the present price of corn I do not see that it is possible to cultivate it at a profit. If stock became a better price they had better adhere to the present system.

52,419. Then you mention that labourers and farmers' sons have left the neighbourhood and gone to the mining districts?—They did for some years, but I expect now we shall get them back again. Many of the people belonging to the district are now coming back again to the Birmingham works. I do not think the wages on the farms were ever quite so large as they could make in the mining districts, but on the other hand wages on the farms have become a very serious item since I have known this district. That is a question you could not do better than ask a practical farmer about. I am quite sure that is one of the outcries of the farmers in this district, that wages have become a very serious matter to them. They are paying much higher wages than when I came into this district many years ago. They are all getting very good wages now. There is the temptation of the large towns which draw people away, and freedom and absence from parental control, and so on, all those are matters which tend to take the young people away to the towns and manufacturing centres.

52,420. I think you said the labourers' cottages are very much improved from what they were in former days?—I think they are, taking the district generally. I consider there has been a great improvement.

52,421. Do many labourers keep a cow or two?—There are a good many what we call little places in Radnorshire, small farms running from 10 to 15, 20, and 25 acres, where men labour part of their time and the wife manages the farm. I have a case of my own in which the tenant has, during the whole of this year, been labouring and his wife has managed the little place, and I think they keep one or two cows.

52,422. Do they seem to do very well?—I believe so. He pays his rent regularly and they seem attached to the land. I am very much an advocate for these small places, because if a man is frugal, and so on, he gets into one of the little places, saves a little money, and in time gets a larger place. I am quite an advocate for that in a district like this. I do not think large farms are adapted to this district.

52,423. Are they generally let by the landlord to the labourer or by the farmer?—In some cases sub-let by the tenant, in other cases let by the landlord. I do not think there is any rule about it in this district.

52,424. As to the commoners, do they suffer hardship from not being able to send sheep to the mountain?—I do not think so, for this reason, in all cases of inclosure we have set out allotments for the labouring poor, but you must bear in mind with respect to all these commons that there are no people who have a right upon the commons except the freeholders, and if a man was a freeholder, no matter how small, he was entitled to an allotment in respect of it; so far from suffering hardship, if I go back over my experience of 30 years, I should consider that the poor people who live alongside those commons have benefited. I notice that they are living under more satisfactory conditions. The man who built an encroachment on the common generally ran up a little hut. I recollect one case in which they lived in a little van; it was called "the morning surprise," from the idea that if people wheeled their van on to the common and stopped there they acquired a right to the site. I remember "the morning surprise"; it was the only case in which I had to evict a squatter, and he certainly had no right to be there.

52,425. You have heard what we call about the country "tai unnos"—"one night houses"?—Yes, but I do not understand Welsh, unfortunately; there was only one case that came under my knowledge.

Professor Rhŷs.

52,426. Is "Morning surprise" the English translation of "ty-unnos"?—I believe it is.

52,427. It used to be pretty generally believed that if you could put up a house in the night, and light a fire so that the smoke could be seen in the morning, this established the right of the squatter?—It was a popular belief, but I am afraid, like many other delightful myths of one's childhood, it has died away.

52,428. Had it any foundation in law?—I believe it had no foundation in law. I have not been able to discover it.

52,429. You mentioned the growth of wood about here. When it is sold what is it chiefly used for?—A great quantity of the larch in this country goes down into the mining districts and is used for pit wood, and a variety of purposes—telegraph poles, and so on—but the buyers who come here are generally from the colliery districts.

52,430. That is a steady demand?—Yes.

52,431. But the prices have gone down?—Yes.

52,432. To what do you ascribe that?—Foreign competition. Foreign timber can be delivered at Cardiff and Swansea from Sweden and Norway, and also again from the forests of Brittany at prices at which we can only put our timber on to the rail at Rhayader Station, consequently we have no chance of competing, except at a very low price.

52,433. Have you had any complaints about forest trees being now attacked by a certain kind of disease?—Yes, I have had painful experience of it. I have lost many trees myself. I think it was owing to a great extent to the long continuing wet seasons we had many years ago. It was attacked by a parasite in consequence of that, I believe. The late Sir Gilbert Lewis, now represented by Sir Herbert Lewis, lost a very fine plantation owing to the larch disease. In this district too there was a great deal of loss.

52,434. With regard to allotments, I forget whether you said that any ground was put aside for recreation purposes?—Yes, there were lands set aside for recreation, and for the labouring poor in every one of the inclosures I carried out, because it was laid down by the Inclosure Commissioners before the recent Act of Parliament. It was in the sixties, you remember. Those allotments were set out and fenced at the expense of the inclosure. The only case in which I know they are occupied as garden allotments is at Llandrindod, because there is there a population to make use of them, but in the other cases they are let by the overseers and applied in the reduction of the rates. No doubt that is the best thing that could be done with them.

52,435. Are these grounds set aside for recreation purposes made use of as such in any case?—The last case I dealt with was a plot of 10 acres on the top of Llanfair Hills, in the county of Salop, through which Offa's Dyke runs. This piece of land was the only level piece of land that they could find anywhere on the hill-side which they could use for football. It was set out as a football ground, but as it is miles from anywhere, and I do not think football has ever been played upon it, I should think the churchwardens and overseers have dealt with that as they do in other cases. They have found it derelict on their hands; they have let it to an adjoining farmer, and applied the money to a local purpose. I think they told me they thought of applying it to the purchase of coal for the poor at Christmas.

52,436. Is football popular here?—In this district, very.

52,437. Then a little walking to reach the football ground would not do them much harm?—Well, I am not a football player myself, but I am afraid the football players would not like to play on the top of any of our hills.

52,438. I suppose your powers of enclosing generally end with the allotment?—Yes. The duties of a valuer under the Inclosures Act is to carry out under the directions of the Inclosure Commissioners the allotment and subdivision of the common land amongt those people who are interested therein. He has to value the ancient lands in respect of which the parties claim allotments, and then he has to exercise his judgment and discretion in setting out for them the allotments that are to compensate them for their loss of common right.

52,439. Do you not think it is rather regrettable that in a case like that at Llandrindod there is not some power to look after the arrangement of houses and the streets instead of their being built higgledy-piggledy as they are now. I suppose there is no power?—Yes, I think so now. They have established a local board of health, and they have byelaws, and under the byelaws they can regulate in the future all the additions.

52,440. It would be a pretty extensive work to remedy what has been already done?—Yes, it would be.

52,441. I think you said there were a great many small freeholders in the county?—Yes, there are in Radnorshire.

52,442. Are they better off or worse than the tenant farmers as a rule, do you think?—That is rather a difficult question for me to answer, but speaking generally I think the freeholders of Radnorshire are relatively wealthy. I mean they are wealthy for the position they occupy.

52,443. They are not men who have bought recently at enormous prices?—No; those men who have bought recently have suffered materially, as I can speak to from personal experience.

52,444. Your freeholders I dare say do not object to pay tithes, for instance?—I think there has been no tithe difficulty in Radnorshire; not to my knowledge, at any rate.

52,445. What parts of the district that you know are still Welsh in language?—The only Welsh-speaking people in Radnorshire now would be a few families in the parish of Llansantffraid-Cwmdeuddwr, and there are in this town of Rhayader a certain number of people of my own age who speak Welsh; a few.

52,446. Are they importations?—No, they are natives. I think I can see one or two on my left here. Mr. Morgan, our county councillor, I think speaks Welsh. I know his wife does, and his little boy is brought up to speak Welsh; but Welsh is not the language of Radnorshire.

52,447. You referred just now to a very interesting custom of the sheep being held in a sort of partnership. A similar sort of custom seems to prevail in parts of Carmarthenshire, where it is called Maeroniaeth. Do you know any technical name for it in this county?—No, I do not; but I am rather inclined to believe that it arose first of all from the period of the monks at Strat-Florida Abbey, and the monks of the other Welsh abbeys. They were the owners of enormous flocks of sheep, and I think in later times they took to letting them out in this way, because I find they were in the habit of receiving a rent of wool and corn; in fact, they were taking rents in kind from their tenants

52,448. You have touched on Strata Florida, and I know you know the whole history. Do you know anything interesting with regard to land tenure or anything else in Strata Florida?—I am afraid I am going to contradict a very able man, and that is the honourable member for the county of Merioneth. I think in his evidence before your Commission he makes out that there is such a thing in Wales as public land, that is to say, land that is no-man's land. So far as my investigations go, and I can go back to the 12th century, I find that Rees Ap Gruffydd, who was then Prince of South Wales, gave all the land, and all the territory which he gave to the Abbey of Strata Florida, in fee. He not only gave it in fee, but he gave it with every possible right and privilege that could be attached to an estate in fee. He gave the moor, the woods and the fishing, and the river, the lakes, and everything else to the monks in fee. These are the words of the gift over: "Moreover, whatsoever " is contained within the afore described bounds " all round, in plain and in wood, in waters and " in meadows, and in pastures, in cultivated " and uncultivated ground, I, Rhys, and afore- " named sons, and my whole posterity, do give " in fee, by perpetual right, to the monks of " Strat Flur, and their successors." From those monks it descended to the Crown in the reign of Henry VIII. The Crown held it up to the time of Elizabeth, when Elizabeth sold it to the freeholder. The Crown gave the same title that Rees Ap Gruffydd had given in the first instance. I fail to see over that enormous tract which extended all the way from here to the sea on the one side, from a long way up in Montgomeryshire in the north to Carmarthenshire in the south, a single trace of anything like public or common land, or land which was no-man's land.

52,449. Perhaps you would not mind defining a little more exactly the boundaries of the property of the ancient monastery of Strata Florida?—It is all defined in the map I have now before me.

52,450. That is a map in your book on Strata Florida?—Yes. I will pass up the map for you to see it. The map shows the whole of the estates which were granted by Rees Ap Gruffydd, his sons, and by other landowners at that time in Wales. It was not all given by him; it was given by him, and his sons, and his relations, and by other landowners.

52,451. It reaches down to Aberaeron and Cardigan Bay?—And up to Builth and Llangurig, with a large tract again in Montgomery.

52,452. So that it takes in all the Builth part of the northern part of this county?—Yes, and right away to Cardigan Bay. There are intervening tracts of other people's property.

52,453. Does that coincide with the ancient diocese of Llanbadarn-fawr?—I think it does.

52,454. Could you trace any customary tenures, or anything of that sort, to these Strata Florida possessions? You have already mentioned some with regard to the receiving of rents in kind, and so on?—I think that was one of their tenures; they were also entitled to other rights and privileges, which appear to have been part of their rents. That rental of theirs is a very long business; but you will find that they took their rents, to a large extent, in kind. They took sheep, poultry, wool, and corn, in kind. Then they had a Cylmerch, which was a right that the lord had to stable his horses when he was travelling through the country, and his tenant had to provide him with corn, hay, and straw. Instead, the tenants appear to have made a money payment in respect of that.

52,455. I think there is something of that sort to be found in the Record of Carnarvon?—I think there is.

52,456. What are the dates of entry here?—25th of March and 29th of September in Radnorshire, as a rule; and in Cardiganshire I find they are generally 29th of September entries on the sheep farms.

52,457. Are there any hiring fairs here?—Yes, in May. They are very popular fairs, some of them, especially Penybont, in the centre of the county.

52,458. Are there none at other times?—No; our hiring fairs are in May, very much as they are in Shropshire. There are May fairs there, in my native district.

52,459. I believe the 12th of May is one of the dates?—Yes, that is one of the dates; for instance, we quit houses here on the 12th. A tenant farmer is entitled to retain his house, and the boozy pasture, and to consume the hay and straw on the premises; therefore he gives up the farm on the 25th of March, but he holds on to the house to the 1st or the 12th of May. In some instances it is the 1st of May.

52,460. We have had some interesting statistics about the morality of various counties. Have you studied that at all in Radnorshire?—No, I have not. I think you will get that probably from a gentleman who follows me. He is Chairman of the Board of Guardians, and Chairman of the Bench of Magistrates.

52,461. If you can think of any antiquarian fact of interest to us we should be glad if you would mention it. There is one question I might ask for one of my colleagues who is not here to-day. Do you know anything about leases for three lives. Are they usual in these parts?—Not in this district. I do not happen to have come across one, at any rate. There may be some, but I have not come across one in this district.

52,462. Do you remember anything more of antiquarian interest?—I do not remember anything more, except what I have stated, that I have not found any trace of the ancient laws of Wales which have been quoted in some of the previous evidence given. I have not myself very great belief in the documentary evidence proving those laws.

52,463. You would not say that that was absolute proof that they did not exist elsewhere?—No, I do not say that.

52,464. It would not be absolute proof that there did not exist something of the kind elsewhere?—I think there were ancient laws of Wales, but I do not know whether the modern translations and deductions drawn from those are exactly correct.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,465. What became of the tithes belonging to the Abbey?—The tithes reverted to the Crown at the dissolution, and were sold to laymen, I think; they became possessed of a good deal of the tithes.

52,466. They became "impropriators"?—Yes.

52,467. And I believe that signifies there was something "improper" in the dealing?—Yes. I know of one or two cases, but I need not mention them.

52,468. The lands, having reverted to the Crown, were sold?—The land reverted to the Crown, and the Crown sold it. It was held together up to the time of Queen Elizabeth. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth there was a sale of the estates—the Radnorshire estates—that is to say, the Grange of Cwmdeuddwr, was bought by two Herefordshire gentlemen who were apparently about the Court of Queen Elizabeth. One was a Croft of Croft Castle, and the other was his son-in-law, Wigmore of Shobdon.

Those two gentlemen bought this large estate and butchered it, cut it up into small pieces and sold it, and when they sold it, they sold it to freeholders in this district, and that was the commencement of many of the estates in this neighbourhood. With regard to the large area in Cardiganshire, they sold it to a family of the name of Stedman, they are represented now by Earl Lisburne and the Powells of Nanteos.

52,469. Did the Crown part with the whole of the estate?—Yes, in the time of Elizabeth, with the whole.

52,470. There are such things as Crown lands in many parts of Wales?—The Crown retained all their manors in Radnorshire which came to them from the Mortimers.

52,471. I speak of freehold land?—I am not aware of the Crown having any freehold land in Radnorshire, unless it has been an encroachment on the waste.

52,472. That will explain what you said before, that there was no such thing as public land?—Exactly so.

52,473. The nearest approach to Crown land would be public land which is administered for the benefit of the tax-payer?—Yes, the Crown became possessed of the whole of their Radnorshire property through Lord Mortimer of Wigmore, who became Edward IV., and by that means brought the whole of the great Radnorshire estates, belonging to the Mortimers, into the possession of the kings of England, and it remained in their possession until the Commissioners of Woods and Forests were appointed, and in whom the Crown lands are now vested, paying the Crown an annual subsidy in respect of them.

52,474. Is there much uninclosed land in this county which might be usefully inclosed?—Yes, a very large area of land, and I may say that in the Crown manors, in which are situated the parishes of Llanbister and Llanbadarn Fynydd, only two or three years ago meetings were held for the purpose of getting the inclosure of their common land. Lord Ormathwaite, the Lord Lieutenant of the county, took the chair, and he advised the freeholders, and gave them very good advice, not to commence upon it unless they were quite sure what the result of their application to Parliament would be. Lord Ormathwaite at the time he was in the House of Commons took great interest in inclosure matters, and he was perfectly well aware of the tendency of modern legislation to prevent all inclosures, and the way in which the Legislature has done so, has been to make it most difficult and most expensive and costly for any body of freeholders to obtain an inclosure now. They must go to Parliament for a special Act of Parliament, and that is a very costly proceeding.

52,475. So that all inclosures, of course, are done now under an Act of Parliament?—Under a special Act of Parliament. Before the recent legislation they were included in a sort of omnibus Bill. Now you have to get your special Act. Here is one of them.

52,476. The lands with which we are now dealing are manorial lands, and not public lands?—Manorial lands.

52,477. Do you think that the commoners who have rights over those lands understand the difference between public rights and commoners' rights?—If you attempt to take away their common rights from them you would find that you would be destroying their estates, because the freeholds in respect of which they exercise those rights are often small. Their rights upon the commons are large, and they treat that right upon the commons as a portion of their freehold estate. It is appendant and appurtenant thereto. If they have bought the estate they have bought it with the rights appurtenant thereto.

52,478. Do you think they are fully alive to their rights when any inclosure takes place?—I am sure of it.

52,479. And those rights have been respected in all the inclosures with which you have been connected?—Undoubtedly. Every man who had a freehold within the boundary of the manor or township which was being inclosed was entitled to an allotment, and got an allotment in respect of his ancient freehold land.

52,480. Do you know Cregrina?—Yes.

52,481. One of the witnesses yesterday from that district appeared to have a grievance with regard to the common lands, as he called them, in that immediate neighbourhood?—The parish of Cregrina is not yet inclosed, therefore, if he s a landowner in the parish of Cregrina, he is still occupying his ancient rights of pasturage, whatever they may be, upon the waste lands of Cregrina.

52,482. That has not yet been inclosed?—No, it has not yet been inclosed.

52,483. Do you know that district?—I do.

52,484. Do you think if any inclosure took place there that it would be in the public interest that it should be done?—I am quite sure in many places in Radnorshire there are large areas of land that could be cultivated and improved, and upon the principle of making two blades of grass grow where one grew before, it would be very much to the public interest. I was informed by a Brecknockshire man the other day, who has a large area of sheep walk, that it would add to the value of his sheep 10 to 15 per cent. if it were inclosed, to prevent the damage and loss which he sustains now.

52,485. Can you tell me who are the owners of the Llandrindod Common now?—It has become split up among a great number of people now. It has been cut up and divided into plots.

52,486. It has been in the market?—Yes, it has been in the market. It is cut up into the smallest possible slices, selling at very big sums.

52,487. Who was the principal landowner?—In old days it was Mr. Edward Myddleton Evans, of Llwynbarried, and Mr. James Gibson Watt, of Doldowlod, was lord of the manor.

There were a great number of other freeholders.

52,488. But since it has been inclosed it has been cut up into building lots?—Yes, all over the place.

52,489. Your opinion is, that that is in the public interest?—I am quite sure of it.

Lord Kenyon.

52,490. Did you read Mr. Russell Sowray's evidence given in London?—Yes, I did. I have read over that evidence, and I have it with me.

52,491. Do you see what he says about the number of small holders, and the way in which they have been created. Just look at that part of his evidence now, you will find it at question 27,530?—Well, I know all these parishes, and I expect a good many of those encroachments are additions to existing farms—straightening the fences. You will find that where a farm adjoins a common, and where that common belongs to the Crown, the tendency of the farm is like a tree to grow in outward rings; and I think you will find it is a gradual growth. Each one of those would be separately surveyed by the Crown surveyor, and reported upon when he goes round every now and again; he would report to the Commissioners that he had found an encroachment on so-and-so. I do not think they are necessarily what you would suppose by little squatter freeholders. I know that district. There is one place called the city of Marlborough, where there are apparently a few squatters who have lived up there for a good many years.

52,492. Was there much disturbance on those enclosures being made, do you suppose?—No, I do not think so. I never heard of any disturbance up there at all. I think these have been of gradual growth, the encroachment upon a waste which goes on in some districts.

52,493. If they have encroached over 60 years they are perfectly safe?—Yes, perfectly safe. I cannot refer to the actual words of Mr. Sowray's evidence where he speaks of the Manor of Iscoed. That was part of the Manor of Iscoed which was inclosed long before my time. It was called the Llanyre inclosure. A very curious thing with regard to that is this: Mr. Watt was lord of the manor, having purchased from the Crown. They got into their Act of Parliament a clause enabling them to sell to the encroachers all the encroachments in the other manors, that is to say, in Uwchcoed, Swydd Neithon, and Rhysllyn. The whole of the encroachments were sold to the people who made them, and a lot of little freeholds created by that. They took all that money, and made roads with it in Llanyre. The money ought to have been spent among the freeholders of their own manors; but they did those things in the forties. Llanyre is on the western side of the Ithon, bounded on the east by the Ithon. Mr. Sowray refers to that. I happen to know of it. It came before me in my early inclosure days.

52,494. There are two questions that I have to put to you; the first is by Mr. Stephen: "Is there any demand for allotments in this "neighbourhood"?—I am not aware of any demand for allotments here. I think the county council have had a committee appointed upon that matter, and I think it is quite possible that there are members of that committee here.

See 53,445; 54,365–54,413.

52,495 There is a question by Mr. Cowper Coles: "Cannot the Llandrindod Inclosure "Award be seen at the Llandrindod Rectory"?—Yes, I think it is possible it can be seen there. You can have the Llandrindod Award placed before you on application to the churchwarden, Dr. Bowen Davies. It has been suggested to me that I have omitted to mention one thing, namely, that under the inclosures I have carried out, land has been set out for turbaries; I forgot that entirely, and the cottagers have the right to go and cut turf on these turbaries.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,496. Do they avail themselves of that right?—Well, to a certain extent. Coal is coming into the country since we have had the railways, and consequently they do not require to exercise that right so much. There is another suggestion made to me with reference to the Corporation of Birmingham erecting new houses for the persons displaced. I may say it is the intention of the Corporation of Birmingham to provide houses for the farmers who may be displaced. We have no intention of disturbing the people; in fact, we should be cutting our own throats by so doing. How are we to occupy that enormous tract of land except by having tenants on it? I may mention that the Corporation of Liverpool have had to do something of the same kind to get their land occupied at Vyrnwy.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined, 52,819.

Mr. Roger Walker called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,497. You are Mr. Roger Walker of Talcoed?—Yes.

52,498. Are you a tenant farmer or a freeholder?—I am a freeholder now, and I have been for the last two years.

52,499. You are a guardian of the poor?—Yes.

52,500. What parish do you live in?—In the parish of Nantmel.

52,501. Please give us your statement?—I farm 270 acres of my own land and I have been a tenant farmer all my life till two years ago. All the common lands in Nantmel district have been inclosed within the last 30 years, comprising "Hosfa" and "Gwasteddin" commons, Rhewgraith and others, by Act of Parliament. I think the inclosures were for the general benefit of the population; many farms were improved by it. The owners of small farms adjoining the commons lost by it. Before the inclosure they exercised equal rights with large owners, and when the commons were inclosed they only received land in proportion to the tract. A small portion was allowed to schools, but nothing for allotments or the use of the poor. I think the squatters had the option of buying their cottages, but they would be of little value to them when the commons were inclosed. They virtually got no compensation. In Cwmdauddwr parish, near Rhayader, there are large uninclosed hills. The tenants on the adjoining farms on Nantgwyllt and Dderw estates have the right of turning out sheep, cattle, and horses, to pasture without stint. When tenants leave the farms they are under an agreement to leave a certain number of sheep on the open common, which are taken to by the landlord or succeeding tenant at a certain fixed price. It may happen that the sheep are worth more than that value, or they may be less. It is an uncertainty, and the arrangement hardly works fairly. I think the general bulk of farms would be benefited by inclosure of the commons. The tenancies commence generally at Lady Day, and they are generally yearly. Changes are more frequent than in former years. The rents are too high. The Agricultural Holdings Acts are of little use, the landlords generally contract themselves out of it.

52,502. Out of which Act?—Out of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

See correction at 52,871.

52,503. Which one?—Out of the 1883 Act.

52,504. Do you mean out of the whole of it?—Well, as regards game and those sort of things. There is generally a penalty attached for breaking up meadow or pasture land, and I am now defending an action brought by my late landlady for, as she alleges, doing this, although I deny having done so. Rent averages from 10*s.* to 15*s.* an acre. Hauling is sometimes required of the tenants. Rents are as a rule fixed by private treaty, although occasionally by valuation. I think rents should be fixed on the basis of the average value of the stock and produce at the time a farm is taken. Rents have risen very much since 50 years ago. The standard rent has not been reduced, although a reduction of from 5 per cent. to 10 per cent. has occasionally been made. Farms vary from 50 acres to 300 acres. Many holdings have been consolidated. The result has been that they are not so well tilled, but more stock is produced for less labour. I do not think it makes much difference in the rent, but it has been the cause of many houses becoming uninhabited, and decreases the population. In my opinion the occupiers of small farms till more carefully than those of larger ones, but the occupiers of the latter are better able to withstand the depression, owing to their not employing so large a staff of labour in proportion, and, therefore, they are better able to provide for their families in bad times

See rebuttal of Mrs. Stephens, 80th Day.

There is a deal of land which could be broken up and drained and which could be made more valuable, but the tenants could not afford to do it without the landlord's assistance, which he does not get. According to the custom of the country the outgoing tenant is entitled to be paid for clover and grass seed, if kept up from 2nd November preceding expiration of the tenancy, and he is entitled to sell the offgoing crop to the landlord or incoming tenant, or he can hold it till harvested. A boozy pasture and the buildings are reserved to the outgoing tenant till the 1st May, with the exception of the stables. A deal of the labour is done by tenant farmers and their wives and families. There are not half the number of labourers in the district there were 30 years ago. The depression has been coming on for many years. Many farmers have suffered a great deal from fluke in sheep. The rents are too high, and must be lowered, and railway rates must be reduced. A portion of the tithe should be devoted to assisting taxation, or it should be reduced. When I left the farm as a tenant my landlady said she was going to divide the farm that I held on account of having three or four votes for the Conservative member; that was her meaning, and that caused me to leave.

52,505. Did you leave of your own accord?—No.

52,506. With regard to these sheep, does that refer to what we heard from Mr. Williams just now?—Yes, similar to that.

52,507. I suppose those sheep are bought at a fixed price by the incoming tenant?—Yes, there was a fixed price put on them to begin with in the cases that I have heard of since, a number of years back, and it is always the same, so far as I have heard.

52,508. Is it considered a hardship if the tenant receives the same price as he gives for them?—No. Of course, the stock rises, and of course it would be to the advantage of the tenant when the stock rises, but on the other hand it may be reduced, and I do not see that there is much difference.

52,509. Is it not fair that he should receive the same as he pays?—Yes, in one way it is, but that would not be to the advantage of the tenant if he farms well.

52,510. He may get the advantage of good times or the disadvantage of bad times, in the other case. Were you an owner of land before, while you were a tenant farmer?—Yes.

52,511. Now you are residing on the farm which you own?—Yes.

52,512. Are you of opinion that the inclosure of these commons is of benefit to the community, as a rule, on the whole?—Yes, I think to farmers generally it is. As to cottages, I think it is of interest to them.

52,513. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, do you know the provisions of that Act?—Not all through.

52,514. Because any attempt to contract out of the 1883 Act is void, with the exception of one section, which refers to six month's notice?—At the time the Agricultural Holdings Act came into force, my landlord sent me a notice to sign not to be under it—to sign out of it—not for me to have any power over it.

See correction at 52,781.

52,515. With regard to any particular section of the Act, or with regard to the whole Act?—The Act altogether.

52,516. That was a proceeding which was of very little use to her, because it was quite void?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,517. What is the size of your freehold?—That I hold now?

52,518. Yes?—About 270 acres.

52,519. Have you any other land besides that?—A small quantity.

52,520. Do you let that?—Yes.

52,521. May I ask what acreage that is. I do not want you to answer it unless you like?—It is no great quantity; some 60 or 70 acres.

52,522. You farm your own farm. What is the name of that farm?—Talcoed.

52,523. Is that in Nantmel parish?—Yes.

52,524. Where was it that you were a tenant farmer—in the same parish?—In the same parish.

52,525. Adjacent land?—No, not attached.

52,526. Not close by?—No.

52,527. But still in the same parish?—In the same parish.

52,528. How large was that?—From 400 to 500 acres since the inclosure was made.

52,529. With the mountain land?—Yes, a good deal of it was mountain land.

52,530. How long is it since you have left that farm?—Two years.

52,531. At that time were you holding both farms, or were you sub-letting Talcoed?—I was sub-letting Talcoed.

52,532. So that you changed from being a tenant farmer in consequence of what you have told us?—Yes.

52,533. Have you any labourers' cottages on your land?—No, not now. I have a cottage adjoining the land, but not on the land.

52,534. Perhaps your house is large enough to take in the labourers you employ?—The labourers I employ live in the house generally, besides the man that lives in that cottage. He works for me most of his time. He has a cottage so that he can keep a cow and things.

52,535. What wages do you give to your labourers?—I pay very high wages to some of them.

52,536. Is that on account of competition?—Scarcity of labour—scarcity of men.

52,537. I suppose the best men and the young men go off to Glamorganshire, do they not?—There are a great many who have gone many years ago, and they are getting better wages. The farm labourers are getting now extraordinarily good wages.

52,538. That is the effect of the competition, I suppose?—Yes, more competition.

52,539. You are obliged to pay higher wages or you would not get them at all?—Yes.

52,540. Do you find that the men have a tendency to come back again to the land?—Not so much to the land, but they come back to the neighbourhood—such as these waterworks going on now they come back to, but not a great many come back to the land.

52,541. That is a fresh source of competition, I suppose?—Yes.

52,542. Labour is very high now?—Yes, very high.

52,543. Do you think it has ever been so high before?—No, I never remember it being so high.

52,544. What is the general condition of the labourers' cottages about here: are they good?—Not all good, but they are better than I remember them.

52,545. They have been improved?—Yes, they are in a better state of repair than I remember them 20 or 30 years ago.

Professor Rhŷs.

52,546. You mentioned just now a rise in the rent. About when do you consider that took place?—Rents were raised, say, from 20 to 30 years ago.

52,547. On the farm you sold, or in the neighbourhood generally?—In the neighbourhood generally the rents were raised about that time. Stock was better, and this depression was not going on, and rents were raised generally to what they were 40 years ago.

52,548. To what extent do you think; can you give us an instance?—Many farms were raised almost double.

52,549. Have they come down since?—No, there has been no general reduction. Perhaps there is 10 or 15 per cent. taken off in some cases, and in some cases not. I had only an allowance of 10 per cent. for about two or three years during my tenancy.

52,550. Abatements or reductions?—Abatements.

52,551. How many servant men do you keep in your house?—Three.

52,552. Do they sleep in the farmhouse?—Yes.

52,553. Is that the usual arrangement in the district?—Generally, a good deal of this neighbourhood is under that rule.

52,554. Then the farmers generally have sufficient room to give sleeping accommodation in the house to their servants?—Generally they have. I think most farmhouses are built so now.

52,555. Is the scarcity of cottages for the labourers one cause why they leave the district, do you know?—Well, they are not employed. There are a great many houses and cottages round this neighbourhood which are vacant now.

52,556. So it is not because there is a lack of cottages?—No, there are plenty of houses vacant in the neighbourhood.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

52,557. It is because they think they will get better wages elsewhere?—Yes, that is what it is, I think.

52,558. You had to leave your farm about two years ago, I understand?—Two years ago this May.

52,559. You had notice to leave?—Yes, I parted with a portion of it the year before. I held as one farm what used to be two or three farms.

52,560. You held under two or three people?—No, two or three farms under the same landlord. He bought one farm and put it to the other—it had at one time been three farms.

52,561. Then you gave up those farms at different times?—The one was under lease, and of course I was forced to part with that, one year before the other—I was obliged to.

52,562. Why were you given notice to quit?—The landlady wanted to raise the rent, and she said she wanted more votes, or something, and she wanted to divide these farms, or something, but she wanted more rent than I could pay, and the rent was very high then.

52,563. You are saying rather more than I can follow. First of all you say she wanted more tenants?—Yes, she wanted more tenants.

52,564. Instead of one tenant she was going to put in how many: was she going to put in several?—She was going to put in three, at all events, to have votes for the Conservative member, she told me.

52,565. It is not fair for me to ask you whether you vote on the Conservative side or not, but in any case there would be more votes?—Yes, there would be more votes.

52,566. Did she raise the rent?—I do not know what she did when she rented it to other parties. I objected to give her the higher rent.

52,567. You do not know whether the rent has been raised?—I cannot say really; I should think perhaps not much; I do not know, so that I must not answer.

52,568. Has she put up buildings on these separate forms, or were there buildings on each of them?—She has repaired the buildings on the one since. I do not think she has done much to the other.

52,569. She has repaired the buildings on one of the farms?—Yes.

52,570. Were there buildings on the three farms?—There was no building on one; there was an old barn on it, and a cottage, but still the house, as it used to be, was gone down many many years before I saw it, and I lived there 38 years.

52,571. The acreage in all was from 400 to 500?—Yes, between 400 and 500 acres.

52,572. How much of that was a sheep run?—About 150 acres.

52,573. Then there was about 350 acres of better land?—Yes, some of it was better, and some of it was not much better.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,574. With respect to the arrangement as to sheep, you say that it does not work satisfactorily, because you have to sell the sheep at the same price that you give?—I do not say that it is very unsatisfactory, but still, if a tenant has improved a stock of sheep very much, and things like that——

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

52,575. That is the very question I was coming to?—Yes.

52,576. Do you think it is possible to improve the breed of hill sheep?—Yes. There is a great improvement in the breed of sheep in this neighbourhood to what it was some years ago. There are a very different class of sheep altogether now to what they were years ago.

52,577. We were told by a landlord at Llandovery, the other day, that it was impossible to improve the breed of sheep, and I disputed his statement. I believe that tenant farmers are generally of the same opinion—that it is possible. Under the present arrangement, where you say the price is fixed, there is no encouragement to improve the breed of sheep?—No, it does not matter what the breed of sheep is there, you get the same price for them.

52,578. Is there another disadvantage with regard to it?—I do not know.

52,579. It is useless in one sense, the same as fixing rent for a long period?—Yes.

52,580. The prices fluctuate so much, and it may work well, and it may work otherwise?—Yes, it is quite an uncertainty.

52,581. Have you any suggestion to make to meet this difficulty?—Not as I know of, but I think it would be fairer for the stock to go all at a valuation.

52,582. That is the way it is done in Merionethshire, and, as a rule, the sheep are valued higher than the market price, perhaps 1*s.* 6*d.*, 2*s.*, or 2*s.* 6*d.* a head higher, and that meets the difficulty. Of course it is a great advantage to the succeeding tenant to have a flock settled on the mountain?—Yes, it is sure to be.

52,583. No suggestion has been made in the neighbourhood to establish a system of that sort to take sheep by valuation?—I do not know of anything of the kind.

52,584. With respect to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, you say that the landlords generally contract themselves out of it?—So I understand, and I know my landlord did with me.

See correction at 52,781.

52,585. Was it out of the whole Act?—Yes, out of the whole of the Act.

52,586. You understand it was not legal; he could not do so?—Not in every way, I believe.

52,587. You have not a copy of the agreement?—No, I have not with me. One farm I was under an agreement for, but I had no agreement for the two farms I held; consequently that would not interfere with them.

52,588. What was the date of that agreement, do you know?—It would be about 1862 or 1863—1862, I should think.

52,589. When did you receive a notice from the landlord?—It was after the Act was passed.

Lord Kenyon.

52,590. Did I understand you to say you signed that paper?—Yes. He sent it to me to sign for this farm that I was under agreement for.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,591. You say that changes of tenancy are more frequent?—Because of the depression of trade, and there will be more changes yet too, if rents are not lowered. There is no doubt about that.

52,592. What is this dispute that there is between you and your landlady over the breaking up of the meadow?—I do not know. She claims against me for breaking up land that I ought not to have done, and I do not know anything about it. I never heard anything about it until after she came into possession. The landlord always used to give his consent for me to do anything I liked, but there was one farm I was under an agreement, and, of course, it says in the agreement about meadow land, but I never ploughed any meadow land. I do not know why she claims it against me.

52,593. Have you ever ploughed up any green pasture which has been down for a number of years?—Not but what had been ploughed—there are men in the room who ploughed it before me, all.

52,594. So that really the dispute would be over that field, whether it was meadow land, properly speaking?—Not over that field only, but she claims almost all that I ploughed—she put in all that I ploughed. The land has been ploughed regularly almost, or else I do not know what rotation farming is.

52,595. You say that the rents should be fixed on the basis of the value of the stock and produce at the time a farm is taken?—I should think that would be the fairest way. That would be my opinion.

52,596. But, of course, you would admit this, that something besides the stock and the produce should regulate the amount of rent; the price of labour would have a good deal to do with it?—The price of labour would have a good deal to do with it.

52,597. You think that if these things were taken into consideration the rents would be much reduced?—I think the rents ought to be reduced.

52,598. To what amount?—I could not say to what amount, because they vary very much now. Late takings are very much dearer than old takings in many cases.

52,599. You find there is no uniformity in the rents?—No, there is great variation in the rents.

52,600. Have there been any permanent reductions made?—Not any that I know of.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,601. Did any of the squatters you mentioned just now have a real loss when the commons were inclosed?—Of course there were a good many small cottages near the place where I lived before, and there was an open common, and they used to pasture a cow and a few sheep, and perhaps a pony there, and I do not say they were trespassers.

52,602. Were they there on sufferance, or had they a right to go there?—They took these cottages, and they were keeping these cows and things there. If they had a plot of land to get a bit of hay for the winter they would generally run to the common for the summer.

52,603. Did you make a claim in leaving the farm?—Yes, for the one farm.

52,604. What was the nature of the claim you made there?—For compensation for cake and lime—unexhausted.

52,605. Did you send in your claim according to the Agricultural Holdings Act, then?—No, not for the farm I had the lease on; I could not get anything for that. By my signing out of that I would not get anything for that one. Being in hopes up to 25th March of re-taking the farm, I had no opportunity of sending in a claim.

52,606. Yes, but by signing out of it you could have got it all the same, because it was illegal?—I was told I could not get it by the party that claimed for me. I was told I could not get anything for that, because I had signed that document.

52,607. What is the system you recommend for regulating rents?—The price of stock and the price of labour, and everything else, as a farmer would require to pay at the time he took the farm.

52,608. Who would you recommend to settle that question?—I do not know. Nobody knows better than the landlord and tenant himself if they could come to the agreement.

52,609. The landlord and the tenant?—The landlord and the tenant by mutual agreement, the same as it is now.

52,610. But you do not know of any such scale being adopted now, do you?—No. I could not mention anything where rents are lowered so much.

52,611. Then you spoke of much land that was improved by the co-operation of the tenant and the landlord. What sort of land is that?—Such as wet land that has been dried, and things like that. There is a great part—half of many farms—that has been of very little value, because having been so wet it is useless to till it, and very little herbage comes on it.

52,612 If it was dry it would be valuable?—Yes.

52,613. There is much land that requires draining in this part of the country?—Yes, a great quantity in this neighbourhood.

52,614. Then, with regard to the loss of sheep upon these lands, who would sustain the loss of sheep in a bad year?—So far as I know it is the tenant. The tenant is obliged to return the number of sheep that he takes at that price; it does not matter if they die; he is bound to find them.

52,615. Is there much of this land that is wet?—Not so much where the sheep are taken. I do not think they get losses from fluke so much in that district as in the districts further down—lower down in the county.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

52,616. Is there not a possibility of what we may term over-improving the sheep for a mountainous district?—Yes, no doubt it would be possible that you could breed the sheep too good for the land. See 52,898.

52,617. By crossing them with other sheep? Yes, there is a possibility that you could breed the sheep too good for the pasture.

52,618. There is a passage in the report in 1867 by Mr. Boyle* with regard to the immorality in that district; of course it is a long time ago, and it is not the same in this district, I hope, now, as it was then. I will just read it to you. It is written by the Rev. W. Williams, and the passage I refer to is as follows: "The "morals of the young women in this district "are, I fear, very much corrupted. It is with "much regret that I state that it is quite the "exception for young women of the rank of "farmers' daughters and downwards to be "married before they are far gone with child." I hope things have improved in this district since that time. Have they?—Yes, I should think so, anyhow.

52,619. Still, things were so then?—They were in some cases, no doubt.

52,620. Why should it be more so in this district than others?—I do not know that it is. I do not know what other districts are like.

52,621. We find in other districts that things are very much improved where we have been. You cannot account for it?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,622. Have the farmers suffered any loss from fluke since the year 1879?—Oh, yes, there has been a great deal of loss since then. In some places, of course, in many farms it is very much worse for fluke than in others, what we call fluke, the decay in sheep.

52,623. I suppose the farmers take as much care as they can to put their sheep on dry ground?—Of course I always kept the dry ground on the farm which I held for the sheep, and left it without ploughing it, as much as I could, because one half of the farm was best for keeping the sheep on, so that they would not get the fluke, and they would not die, and I ploughed as much as I could of the wet land, and the landlord used to drain the field for me. Then I would plough down at the bottom as well as I could, and leave the dry land unploughed.

52,624. Do you think the farmers exercise as much care in a matter of that kind now?—Yes, it is a general thing that is done in the neighbourhood, I think.

52,625. Do you think that if any draining were done it would prevent fluke?—The land would be in a better state a good deal. There would not be as much fluke. If the land was drained of course it would be better. It is in the wet land that they get the fluke.

* See "Third Report of the Commissioners on the Employ- "ment of Children, Young Persons, and Women in Agri- "culture" (1867), p. 164.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

52,626. Do you think that those farmers, if they had the capital, would drain in order to save their sheep?—The farmer cannot afford to drain when the rent is high.

52,627. In co-operation with his landlord, say?—Yes, with his landlord. I always did all the hauling and everything like that, and of course I had to pay interest on the money for some time after.

52,628. What is the custom in respect of draining, does the landlord supply pipes, and the tenant open the drains?—The general way is to put 5 per cent. on for drainage.

52,629. Is that it?—Yes, as I know in a good many cases, that is done.

52,630. A lot of the tenants would rather risk the loss of sheep than pay 5 per cent. for for drainage?—Well, their rents are so high already, that they fear they cannot afford to.

52,631. They are sacrificing the future?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,632. You had in your late holding three farms?—Yes, they had been three farms at one time.

52,633. What were their names?—Penffynnon, Bwlch Llys, and Fron.

52,634. How large were those three farms: in the aggregate nearly 500 acres?—Yes, nearly, with the inclosures.

52,635. Were there buildings on the three farms?—Yes, some buildings on the three. There was only a cottage with Fron, the building had gone down that was on Fron; in fact, it had been in four farms at one time. There was a part of it called Tymawr, and I have no doubt in old times that had been a farm.

52,636. They have been consolidated?—Yes.

52,637. Is there much consolidation about here?—Yes, a good deal.

52,638. Is that popular?—It was a few years ago, very popular.

52,639. Do you think it is a good thing or a bad thing?—I really do not know. The farms are easier paid for—the land is easier paid for the larger the taking is.

52,640. Are they now separated?—The farms I held?

52,641. Yes?—It is in two now.

52,642. I think I followed you correctly then. Would you mind telling me what your rent was?—The whole rent?

52,643. Yes, the whole rent?—201*l.*

52,644. That is rather less than 10*s.* an acre?—Yes. Of course there was common land, and it was more than 10*s.* an acre on the other land.

52,645. They are now occupied by two different families?—Yes.

52,646. Do I understand that the third is inhabited in any way?—Yes, the other farm goes with the one. Fron and Penffynnon are together.

52,647. Is the house on the lower part inhabited?—No, I think not.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

52,648. It is not inhabited?—No, it has not been for many years.

52,649. Then the division is merely from one to two?—Yes, from one to two. It is in two now. It was in one.

52,650. Do you allege that you were evicted from that farm?—No, I could not say that; I had the chance of it again at a very much higher rent.

52,651. Could you say what the rent of those two places is now?—No, I cannot.

52,652. Whether it has been increased or not?—I rather think they increased it somewhat, but not nearly so much as she asked me.

52,653. You alleged, as I understand, that you were turned out for political reasons?—I do not know that it was that, but of course——

52,654. You do not know?—I am not certain of that, but she told me she wanted to rent it in two or three farms, to get different votes for the Conservative member.

52,655. Do you know whether any condition was made with the incoming tenants as to their politics?—I do not know anything at all about that. I do not know anything as to her conditions with her new tenants.

52,656. There was another reason besides a political reason, and that was a question of the amount of rent?—Yes, the amount of rent.

52,657. How much extra rent was demanded?—50*l.*

52,658. Fifty pounds more, making it 251*l.* instead of 201*l.*?—Yes. Trade was very bad, and was getting much worse at the time.

52,659. Then you declined to give the higher rent?—I offered her more rent.

52,660. But not the full amount that she wanted paid?—I offered her more, because I had lived there such a number of years, and I thought that I would like to remain there.

52,661. May I ask what amount of rent you were receiving for your old farm, Talcoed?—For the Talcoed farm it was 125*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

52,662. Is much of Talcoed farm, hill land?—No, not any.

52,663. Who is your landlady?—Mrs. Stephens of Presteign.

52,664. Where does she live?—She does not live in Presteign now. I think she lives at Cheltenham. The late landlord used to be agent for Lord Ormonde. He was clerk of the peace for the county of Radnor.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,665. Were the times so good two years ago as to justify an advance in the rent of 50*l.*?—I think not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,666. But you offered more?—Yes. I am sure it was so; I am sure I was turned out of the farm for it. For many years I very often paid the rent out of my own pocket, and never made a farthing out of it owing to the death of sheep.

52,667. And yet you were willing to pay more rent?—Yes, I lived there a great many years, and I used to get a great death of sheep.

52,668. Of course I take your answer, but you were not in the position that some tenant farmers are in; you had a place of your own to go to.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,669. May I ask when you offered to retake your place at an advance of rent?—The first thing she did after my landlord's death was to bring a valuer up there to value the farm, and she came up there herself and brought a solicitor along, and a valuer came across the farm, and she sent to meet me in Rhayader on a certain evening. I came over, and she said that there were some gentlemen coming on the morrow morning, but she did not tell me what their business was. But I saw the man; I had known him before; he was Mr. Bamford of Hereford, and he said "I daresay you guess my business." I said, "Seeing you here, I can "imagine what it is." "Well," he said, "I shall "do you no harm, because your farm recom- "mends itself; I have not seen anything done "better in the country since I came here, and "I shall recommend you to go on; I think you "suit the farm and the farm suits you." I do not know what he recommended, but that amount was above his valuation; she increased the rent.

52,670. Was it before or after he valued the farm that he told you that, do you remember?—It was after that. I would not be certain whether it was before or after, but of course she kept writing to me for nearly 12 months, wanting me to take it at this rent.

Professor Rhŷs.

52,671. If it was a question of paying a higher rent, how did she come to talk about the votes at all?—She talked about dividing the farm as soon as ever her husband died. About the first time I saw her she said, "I "thought I would like to divide the farms," "and I said "If I took any I would like "to take the whole of it, because I should "not like to take one without the others; I "should hold the whole if I had any."

52,672. Then she said, what?—She said she wanted to divide it to have more votes.

52,673. What were her words, do you remember?—She said she was going to divide it in three, to have more votes for the Conservative member.

52,674. She said so?—Yes, she said so.

52,675. About when was that?—Really I could not say when it was. It was somewhere about July 1890.

52,676. That was before she asked for a rise in the rent?—Yes, it was.

52,677. You say it was soon after her husband's death?—It was soon after her husband's death. The first time she came up she talked about these two cottages, which were vacant at the time. I had them in the last years, and nobody was living in them, and she wanted me to put them in repair, and I did not feel inclined to do so, because I think it is the landlord's duty generally to keep the place in repair unless it is what they call an old-fashioned place—thatched building—and then the tenant has generally to do it. In other agreements there are clauses binding them to keep the buildings in repair.

52,678. How far is Fron from Penffynnon. It seems to be a considerable distance on the map?—It is not above 200 or 300 yards, or a quarter of a mile anyway, and Bwlch Llys would be about as far again.

Lord Kenyon.

52,679. I think I understood that you still let some land of yours?—Yes.

52,680. Have you lowered those rents?—No, I have only just recently bought it—what I left.

52,681. You still think it is worth while buying land then?—I do not know. It is adjoining the one I had. Adjoining Talcoed is another place called Talcoed.

52,682. I understand you do not know Mrs. Stephen's present address?—No, I do not know her present address. There are plenty in the room who do.

52,683. You were not able to inform her that you were coming here?—No, I was not.

52,684. But you have made certain allegations against her, and it will be necessary to inform her of the evidence that you have given. I should like to know her address if you can find out?—I could not.

52,685. Will you try to find it out for us, please?—I do not know. There are plenty here who can give it.

52,686. If you can find it out in the course of the day, do so please. I have some questions to put to you, which are handed in by Mr. Vincent. "When did your landlord send you the notice "to sign out of the Act—at what date"?—I do not think I can answer that, what date it was, but still that notice is somewhere now.

52,687. It was subsequent to 1883, I think you said?—Yes, after 1883; it would be about 1885 or 1886. That was only as to the one farm that I was under an agreement for. See correction at 52,781.

52,688. This is my own question, may I ask you whether you were under a six months' notice?—Yes, six months' notice.

52,689. Under that agreement?—Yes, under that agreement.

52,690. That would probably be the clause you contracted out of?—Yes.

52,691. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Do you produce any agreement purporting to "contract out of the Act." You do not produce any agreement, do you?—No.

52,692. "Do you think it safe to state the "effect of written documents without producing "them"?—I really do not know. Of course, I can prove what I have said, and I can produce the document.

52,693. Probably, if you came to examine the document, you would find that you only signed out of that particular clause, which allows the landlord to give you a six months' notice instead of a 12 months' notice. It is allowable to contract out of that clause, under the Act?—Well, that is all that I knew, he did contract out of. Of course it was connected with the notice.

52,694. That is all you contracted out of?—Yes, anything further I know nothing about.

52,695. You said just now that you contracted out of the whole Act?—Not the whole Act, of course, only so far as notice was concerned.

52,696. That is a very different thing?—Well, I had nothing else to do with it.

52,697. That is a very different thing, because you gave us to understand that he contracted out of the Act so far as regards compensation and everything else, and you said something about game?—So far as the compensation goes, I did, because I failed to get any compensation for that.

52,698. I do not know why you failed to get compensation?—But it would be in the agreement. The agreement would throw me out from compensation as to that.

52,699. Was there a schedule in the agreement as to compensation?—I really do not remember.

52,700. Another question by Mr. Vincent: "Do you mean to say that any solicitor or "man of business told you that you had "forfeited your claim under the Agricultural "Holdings Act by signing any document'?—He said I could not claim anything from that farm.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,701. But was that by reason of signing the document?—I do not know, but he said, of course, that I could not claim anything from it, I do not know the reason why.

52,702. Did he simply say you had got no claim?—He simply said I had no claim from this farm that I had the agreement for.

52,703. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Did you receive 46*l.* for unexhausted improve-"ments"?—Yes.

52,704. "Did not your late landlord spend "over 1,000*l.* in putting up a new farm-house "and buildings on your farm"?—I do not know the amount, indeed.

52,705. Did he put up a new farm-house and buildings?—He put up a new farm-house.

52,706. And buildings?—Well, part of the buildings. Of course a great part of the building was built before I went there—a new building when we went there.

52,707. "Is not the reason of your receiving "notice to quit the subject of a pending "action"?—I do not know. Of course it was to raise the rent sufficiently she sent me three different notices.

52,708. Is there any action at law arising out of it?—Yes.

52,709. There is?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,710. What was the nature of the unexhausted improvements that you had compensation for?—For cake and lime.

52,711. Not for manure?—Manure to some extent.

Lord Kenyon.

52,712. May I ask what the action is: have you brought an action against the landlady or the landlady against you?—I have not brought an action against her.

52,713. Then what is the action?—The action is for damages I had done to the farm.

52,714. She has brought an action against you for dilapidations?—Yes.

52,715. I understand you are contesting that, are you?—Yes.

Re-examined 52,781.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM HUGHES called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

52,716. Do you understand sufficient English to understand your statement if it is read?—Yes, I am willing to try it. It is my hearing that is very bad, rather than my knowledge of English.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

I live at Alma Cottage, Rhayader. I lived at a farm called Ty Mawr, in the parish of Cwmdeuddwr, Radnorshire, as a tenant for 23 years. When I took possession there was no fence round a single field, nor one gate hung on its hinges on the whole farm; it was quite open to the hill adjoining. During my tenancy I drained about 12 acres of the land, and hauled all the stones from the river to fill the drains. I also carried about 400 loads of soil, and made stanks to prevent the river breaking into the land. The timber only was given me by the landlord. I made all the ditches and hedges that were on the farm, also all gates.

52,717. Is that right so far?—Yes.

Statement continued.

Also a few years before I left I fenced a great deal with wire and stakes. The wire I paid for myself, as well as a good quantity of the stakes. The buildings were repaired the last year of my tenancy, and I hauled all materials, slate and timber. I built a turf-house, cart-house, and granary above, there being none on the farm. I also bought a large grate, with oven and boiler, for the kitchen, which I had no allowance for, and was obliged to leave it in its place. I spent during my tenancy hundreds of pounds in improving the farm. I lost some money for the first few years, but when I had to leave it was paying me very well for my outlay. The farm was sold, and the new landlord let the farm to a neighbour of mine who had a very large farm, and I was obliged to leave without receiving any compensation for all the improvements I had made.

52,718. Is that correct?—Yes.

52,719. In what year did you take your farm?—Forty-three years ago this month.

52,720. It is 20 years since you left it?—I was there 23 years, and from then it is 20 years.

52,721. Did the new landlord give you any reason for giving you notice to quit when the farm was sold?—No, I had none. They sold the farm. Otherwise I had confidence in my old landlord that they would not send me from there.

52,722. Was there any reason why the new landlord did not take you on with the farm?—No, I know of no reason, but perhaps that there were so many that wanted to have it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,723. What is the number of tenants that applied for the place?—I only know of one neighbour who was undermining me, and who had been undermining me for many years. We were unable to agree. When I did go there the hill was lost, and the ground was awkward. The hill was lost, and when I did go there to try to keep the hill a bit, my neighbours were very much against me, and I am very glad I am free to-day. I did only try to do what was fair there.

Lord Kenyon.

52,724. What was the size of your place?—I do not remember. Probably Mr. Williams knows; somewhere about 70 acres I think the land was; I am not sure. It was not 100 acres whatever.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,725. Who was your old landlord?—One of the Hughes's from London. It was Sir Loftus at first when I went there, but he died.

52,726. Did you have an agreement with him?—No, there was no agreement. There never was any written agreement, only a verbal taking. Mr. Davies, of Gwardolau, was the agent when I took it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

52,727. Why did you not buy the farm yourself?—They were bad neighbours there, and I never had peace on the mountain there at any time.

52,728. Would you like to have a law to prevent one tenant undermining the other, as you say?—I really do not know. I preferred to go away from there to living on there, and it became too dear.

52,729. Who was the new landlord?—Mr. Prickard, of Dderw.

52,730. Is he a large landowner?—Yes, he has a considerable estate. It is close to the town.

52,731. Did you try to take the farm under him?—Yes, I tried, but I had no offer of it. I asked him the very night of the sale, before he went home, if there was a chance of my having it.

52,732. What did he say?—He said there was no chance for me to have it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,733. If you expended so much money on improvements, and if you had such confidence in the old landlord, why did you not ask him for some compensation before he sold the place?—No, they would not do anything. There is Mr. Williams there, and I have done a good deal of haulage from time to time from Claerwen Valley over as many as eight roads, and he has never paid even a turnpike toll.

52,734. Did you do the haulage to these buildings during the last year of your tenancy?—Yes, in the last year.

52,735. Was the rent advanced by the new landlord to the neighbour who took the farm?—Yes.

52,736. How much?—I do not know what the increase was. I believe it is now 100*l.*

52,737. What did you pay for it?—45*l.*

52,738. So that it has advanced 55*l.*?—Yes.

52,739. And, of course, you make out that the rent was advanced on your improvements?—Quite so. It would be easier for me to pay double the rent when I was leaving than when I went there.

Professor Rhŷs

52,740. Are there many people at Rhayader here who talk Welsh now?—Not many.

52,741. How many?—I really do not know; but there is not a considerable number.

52,742. People of what age?—Somewhere about 60, as a rule.

52,743. Where is the nearest part of this county where they talk Welsh?—I really do not know.

52,744. Do they talk Welsh in Cwmdeuddwr?—Yes, they have Welsh at Cwmdeuddwr, but they have English as well. The two languages prevail there.

Lord Kenyon.

52,745. The following questions are by Mr Vincent. "Thomas Price was your neighbour, "and the man who succeeded you, was he "not"?—Yes.

52,746. "Had it not come to this, that either "he or you had to go"?—Oh, dear me, no.

52,747. "Were you not the contractor for the "repairs of your house, and were you not paid "for your work and labour"?—I am a bit of a carpenter. I was paid for the woodwork done in the last repairs, but for the haulage I was paid nothing. I built the granary and the cart house, and the turf house, myself, and was paid nothing for them, but I had the wood.

52,748. "You did buy another farm, did you not"?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. EDWARD WOOD called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,749. You are Clerk of the Peace and Clerk to the County Council for the county of Radnor?—Yes.

52,750. And you wish to give evidence on behalf of the Dderw estate?—Yes.

52,751. Will you proceed with your statement?—I have acted as agent for the trustees of the Dderw estate since 1881. My predecessors, including my father, acted as agent for the estate for 50 years, practically before; at least since 1849. I propose to give information as to the rentals of this estate since 1849. The acreage of the estate is, roughly, 4,000 acres enclosed land, and about 12,000 acres unenclosed.

52,752. That is rights of sheep walk?—Exactly. As to that a portion of it is what they call exclusive rights, that is to say, exclusive rights attached to these holdings belonging to this particular estate. The total rental of the estate is 2,460*l.* per annum, and the average rent per acre, to take it per acre, is about 11*s.* 8*d.* for the enclosed land. That is, I should say, exclusive of sheep walks and of certain houses in the towns. As to the 64 tenants, 31 of the holdings are the same as they have been practically for the last 50 years. Practically, on all the holdings on the Dderw estate the rents have been the same for the last 50 years.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,753. You said before that 31 were the same as the last 50 years?—Yes, there are some trifling additions either one way or the other, but as to 31 I think you will find this. I propose to hand up to the Chairman a statement showing exactly every decade from 1849 to the present time, what the rentals are, and what alterations there have been, so that your Lordship and the Commissioners may have before you the exact facts with regard to this estate. There are six cases, I think, where additions have been made during the period I have referred to, and I think twenty-six per cent. of the farms have had their rents slightly reduced during the same period. The relations between the landlords and the tenants on this estate have been most friendly and cordial at all times. The rents are in many cases extremely low, in very many cases, in fact, I may say, almost in the majority of cases, much below the rateable value, and the rateable value has been also very low.

Lord Kenyon.

52,754. The rents are lower than the rateable value?—In a great many instances. I propose to hand to your Lordship a statement showing the rent and the rateable value of this estate. My instructions have always been since I have acted as agent to let the farms to the tenants at a fair rent, such a rent that they can obtain a livelihood and something more. No distinction has ever been made as to politics or religion. It has been practically a custom on this estate to allow, so far as possible, the son to succeed the father as a tenant. Whenever a farm has become vacant I have received very many applications, sometimes so many as 25 or 30 applications for a farm, but the landlords have invariably told me that I was not to select a tenant simply because he was prepared to pay a higher rent than all the other applicants, and in every case I think preference has been given to members of the family, if they existed, of the late tenant. The average size of farms, I think, is about 80 to 90 acres. With regard to repairs, I have made a calculation, from which it would appear that during the last 19 years something like 20,818*l.* has been expended on this estate for repairs, drainage, and improvements, the average being roughly 1,095*l.* spent out of a total income of 2,460*l.* I may say that the landlords, not only of the Dderw Estate, but also Mr. Lewis Lloyd, as the owner of the Nantgwyllt Estate and the Cwmelan Estate, instructed me to communicate with all the tenants, informing them of this inquiry and expressing their desire that they should have the fullest opportunity of stating any grievance which might exist, and inviting them to attend to-day. I wrote the letter partly because I thought that a large number of these tenants might not have an opportunity of seeing the advertisement in the papers, and I thought it would be a proper thing that they should have the fullest notice of this inquiry. I would ask your Lordship to allow me to put this in.

"Rhayader,
"April 28th, 1894.

Dear Sir,

"BAILEYNEUADD ESTATE.

"I observe that the Welsh Land Commission will meet at the Magistrate's Room, Rhayader, on the 10th prox. I think it right to apprize you of this, as possibly you may not have observed the notice in the paper. Your landlord is anxious and desirous that all his tenants should have the fullest opportunity of stating any grievances which they think may exist, and invite the tenants to attend before the Commission on the 10th prox.

"If you intend to give evidence you must please remember that you have to give seven days' notice to the Assistant Secretary of the Land Commission (Cecil E. Owen, Esq.), whose address is—

"Trafalgar Buildings,
"Charing Cross,
"London, S.W.

"Faithfully yours,
"EDWARD WOOD."

I wrote that letter not only to the tenants of the Dderw estate and to the tenants of the Nantgwyllt estate, but to all the tenants whose rents I have received in different parts of the county. I should say that I have received two letters from other tenants, one a tenant on the Dderw estate, which, perhaps, your lordship would like me to read. I do not know whether it is evidence or not. He is not here. It is addressed to me.

52,755. Anything pertinent to the inquiry you may read?—This is the letter, "Newhouse, "Cwmdeuddwr, 9th May 1894.—Dear sir, I "beg to inform you that I have lived on the "Dderw estate for 48 years, and during the "whole of that time neither my father or "myself have had any reason to complain of "the landlord. When repairs were needed they "were always carried out in a substantial "manner, and the landlord has always been very "kind. Yours obediently, JOHN PRICE. To "Edward Wood, Esq., solicitor, Rhayader." The other letter deals with an estate quite different, in the same county, but near Builth.—"Cwmshenkin, Glascwm, April 30th, 94.—Dear "sir, I received your letter, and am very much "obliged to you for the information about the "Land Commission. I am happy to say that "I have no grievance to complain of. I always "have had whatever I asked for. Yours truly, "DAVID POWELL." Now, my Lord, I think I have finished my general evidence for the moment, but I should just like to refer for a moment to the position taken up by the landlords in connexion with this Birmingham water scheme. I think it might be interesting to the Commissioners to hear what I have to say upon that. As you know, my Lord, it was a huge scheme involving gigantic interests, and affecting to a very great extent the position of a very large number of farmers and tenants in addition to the landlords. The tenants met, and after considering the scheme of the Bill, in the absence of any possibility of arranging clauses for the Corporation, instructed me to petition against the Bill. In pursuance of those instructions I did present a petition, and subsequently I attended before the hybrid Committee of the House of Commons on behalf of the occupiers and farmers. Before that was done I consulted the landlord of the Dderw estate, and Mr. Lewis Lloyd, the owner of the Nantgwyllt estate, and also General Sladen, who was interested, and I am glad to say that they all co-operated, so far as it was in their power, with a view of assisting the tenants in securing proper protection against the Birmingham Corporation. The Corporation coquetted with us for some considerable period and we were necessarily detained in the Committee room of the House of Commons for some time, but eventually we obtained clauses which are contained in the Act, and which, I think, will tend, and have tended, very materially to assist the tenants within the area of the watershed comprised in the Act, and now the property of the Birmingham Corporation. Under clause 17 of the Act the Corporation are compelled to grant leases for 21 years to all tenants who may desire the same and who at the time of the passing of the Act were in occupation of any land which the Corporation acquired or might acquire under the provisions of that Act, excepting lands, of course, which were covered or would be covered by reservoirs.

52,756. Were they compelled to give those leases at the existing rents?—Yes, my lord. The words are, "And such tenants shall be "entitled to such leases on the same terms "and conditions as those under which they at "present hold and occupy such land." Then, section 47 is a clause providing that the Corporation were not to acquire common rights except in certain cases. Clause 48, which is an important clause for the protection of the tenants is in these words: "That if, in the opinion of "the Corporation it should be expedient, with a "view to preserve the purity of the water, to pro-"hibit the washing of sheep in any waters which "the Corporation are authorised to improve or "take under the provisions of this Act, the Cor-"poration shall have power to prohibit such "washing of sheep, provided that before they "carry this provision into effect where it has "been the practice to wash sheep, the Corpora-"tion shall provide and maintain in the nearest "convenient situation on their own lands, "another suitable washing place and enclosure, "and shall also provide means for pasturage of "such sheep during such period as may be "necessary to keep such sheep at their own cost, "and on their going and returning shall provide "the necessary accommodation for the shepherds "accompanying such flocks." That was a very important matter, because the effect of the Birmingham Corporation scheme was this, that tenants owning thousands of sheep used periodically to take those sheep to be washed at particular places, many of which were taken up by the Corporation, and if it had not been for a provision of this kind being inserted in the Act, a very great injustice would have been done to the tenants and much hardship inflicted upon them; but I think that has now practically been provided for, and as I say, in addition, if the Corporation cannot find suitable washing places convenient, then they have to keep such sheep at the washing places that they do provide and find pasturage for them, and provide the necessary accommodation at their own expense for the shepherds accompanying those flocks. Another clause which we secured in the interests of the tenants was that the Corporation should provide suitable and convenient drinking places for cattle, sheep, and horses, in case it should become necessary for them to interfere with existing drinking places on any lands acquired by them under the Act. I do not propose, my Lord, to deal with the question of commons, because that, I understand, has been disposed already to a great extent by Mr. Stephen Williams, but there is a clause in the Act of Parliament which prohibits the Corporation from enclosing commons. I should say that the landlords co-operated with the tenants in securing this protection and these provisions being inserted in the Act. They not only subscribed towards the costs, but also gave their support before the Committee, and also gave evidence. So far as I know the relations on the estate to which I particularly refer, the Dderw Estate, have been, as I said before, most friendly, and I trust they always will be. I think I have dealt with everything that I need refer to except there may be any specific questions that you would invite me to speak to.

52,757. Have those tenants of the Birmingham Corporation now taken any of these leases?—I do not think so; not to my own knowledge.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,758. With respect to the unenclosed land on the Dderw Estate are the boundaries well-defined, that is, the boundaries of the land allotted to each tenant?—Of course there are no fences; but a tenant would very likely describe to you a certain place by a certain stone or a certain dip, or say to you "As you go over the "breast yonder, that is yours and this is mine."

52,759. But is the boundary sufficiently well-known to prevent anything like disputes between the tenants?—Well, I do not suppose there would be any boundary that would actually prevent disputes, but, so far as we are concerned on our estates, they are practically few. Sometimes there are disputes, but comparatively very seldom; they know what their rights are, and I think the sheep do too.

52,760. The sheep do, if the boundary is pretty well defined, that is true?—Yes.

52,761. You do not know anything in this neighbourhood of the practice of having a common shepherd—a shepherd to tend several flocks?—Oh, yes, that exists.

52,762. How many flocks would the same shepherd attend to?—I cannot speak absolutely of my own knowledge, but in one or two cases, one case particularly, I know that a shepherd attends to about three flocks.

52,763. The system answers very well?—Yes, they seem to agree between themselves. The shepherd likes it, and prospers, I think.

52,764. Who are the owners of the Dderw Estate?—Mrs. Prickard, a lady over 80 years of age, is the tenant for life, then the Rev. William Prickard would succeed her as tenant for life; there are trustees of the will of the late Mr. Thomas Prickard.

52,765. Have any abatements been made on the estate?—No, none whatever. I have never been asked for abatements. The rents are so extremely low that in some cases I consider they are almost better than freeholds.

52,766. Have you a sufficient practical acquaintance with the value of land to know whether a farm is cheap or not?—I have sufficient practical acquaintance with the knowledge of men that, when I get 20 people who come and offer me double the rent for a taking or holding, I know that these farms are absurdly cheap for some of them.

52,767. You are prepared to say that people are ready to offer as much again?—In certain cases I am distinctly prepared to say so, and I can enumerate them; but, as I have told you before, my clients do not entertain any applications of that kind. They are anxious and willing to keep their tenants at the same rent if it is possible to do so. They wish them to do well and to thrive.

52,768. I suppose the landlords carry out all the repairs and improvements that are done on the estate?—Yes, practically everything. I think I gave the figures as to what was expended. They practically expend 1,095*l.* out of 2,460*l.* a year, so you can form your own conclusion as to what repairs are done.

52,769. Do you know whether any claims have been made by tenants on leaving their farms as to improvements?—Yes. There was a claim made and it is still pending.

52,770. For specific improvements?—The claim is for 190*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.*, which includes marling, manuring, liming, and hauling, and also a claim for 49*l.* for clover lay and fallow, and making fencing, 6*l.* Those claims having been made, I instructed a well-known land agent and surveyor to investigate them. He advised my client and myself that they were untenable. I told him that the landlords wished to meet the tenant, or rather the tenant's claim, in a most generous manner. However, they were unable to agree. Eventually they appointed arbitrators and an umpire. After the umpire was appointed and agreed upon, the tenant refused to accept the umpire, and a long time elapsed. The rent was not paid. I wrote and said that something must be done. Eventually the tenant, or rather the tenant's arbitrator, suggested another umpire. I was consulted about it. I said, "Yes, certainly, let him name his own." This gentleman was named and nothing more has been heard of it. See 53,07 –53,209.

52,771. You say there was a claim for making fences?—Yes, 6*l.*

52,772. Did the tenant write to the landlords to obtain their consent?—No.

52,773. Because it is under the first schedule. I suppose no counterclaim was put in by the landlords for dilapidations?—No, but we have a little counterclaim for the rent which has not yet been paid, and for payment of which we have not pressed.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,774. What class of people were these applicants for farms; were they already in possession of farms, or were they fresh applicants?—A good many were already in possession of farms, many of them, of course, about to vacate their farms, or desirous to do so.

52,775. Some, I suppose, in farms which were rented rather high, and they thought this farm a little lower?—That I cannot say; that is outside my knowledge. I can only deal with the farms that I am agent for.

52,776. Then you mentioned some six cases in which additions were made. How do you explain that. I did not quite catch it?—I can give you those, I think. Those cases would be, as to most of them, where the old tenants had died, or given up their holdings themselves, and where there were new takings, and where, therefore, the landlords considered that they were perfectly justified in adding some slight increase to the rent. In other cases, for instance, take the case of the adjoining farm here, close to the town, where it was accommodation land, and where a sewage farm had been made, there there was a slight increase; but, as I say, no old tenant has been raised. It has always been where there have been vacancies and new tenants have applied. The additions are very slight, but as I propose to put in a detailed statement showing to the Commission every single alteration on this estate for the last 50 years, perhaps you will be able to follow it better (handing in a statement).

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,777. I suppose the umpire has not made his award in that case?—We have never heard anything more of it since then. We are waiting to proceed with it, but the arbitrators have not met.

Lord Kenyon.

52,778. This statement only gives the Dderw estate from the beginning of 1849, I suppose?—That is all.

52,779. The others are purchases?—Yes, I have distinguished the time when we acquired them.

52,780. You have added up the totals as they have been purchased too?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined, 53,122.

Mr. ROGER WALKER re-called and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 52,503, 52,514, 52,554, 52,687.

52,781. You wish to correct a statement of yours?—Yes. It was the Act of 1875, not the Act of 1883, that I contracted out of. The size of the farm was 400 acres, not 500, with the allotment.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. RICHARD MORGAN called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,782. Are you a tenant farmer or a freeholder?—I am a tanner, not a farmer. I occupy land.

52,783. You are a Justice of the Peace for Radnorshire, and County Councillor for Rhayader?—I am.

52,784. What is it you wish to give evidence about?—My Lord and Gentlemen, my object in coming forward to give the little evidence I can, is to prove that more security of tenure is required to encourage tenants to do more improvements on their holdings. To prove that, I will, if you will allow me, just read a statement:—Up to September 1892, I had rented two pieces of accommodation land of about 3½ acres, for which I paid 10*l.* 10*s.* per year. In September 1890 I received a six months' notice to quit. In the April of that year, the Board, that is the sanitary board, of which I am a member and my then landlord was chairman, changed the chairman. When I received the notice, I wrote and asked him the reason. I received his reply, which I produce (I have the letter here if required) that it was to oblige a gentleman whom he knew to be his friend.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,785. Will you read the original letter?— See 52,8[illegible]

"Rhydoldog,
"SIR, 11th October, 1890.

"I HAVE received your memorandum asking me to give you a reason for sending you a notice to give up the fields of which you have been a tenant for some years. I am not in any way obliged to give you a reason, but I will give you one. It is that I wish to oblige a gentleman whom I know to be my friend, and who himself, being a tenant, received notice to give up a piece of land situated very conveniently for him. Our fields being perhaps more convenient to his house, will, I hope, compensate him for the loss of the one he had to give up. I must tell you, however, that I gave you notice of my own will. I held no consultation with the gentleman, and he did not ask me for the fields.

"Yours obediently,
"J. R. SLADEN.

"Mr. Richard Morgan, farmer, Rhayader."

When asked a second time for the reason, he stated that I had done him a d—— nasty turn, in turning him out of the chair.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,786. He does not say that in this letter?—He has said that verbally to me. I am of opinion that there should be given the tenants more security of tenure, and that they should not be allowed to contract out of section 33 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. You see, my Lord, it is a six months' notice that I received to quit. When I went to pay my rent, of course I told him that I would not accept it, neither did I accept it; therefore I hold the tenancy for another 12 months, because I had not complied with that section of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

52,787. I see this letter is dated 1890?—1890.

52,788. You remained in your holding till September 1892?—I remained in my holding till September 1892. I had a second notice, a 12 months' notice to quit the next time.

52,789. I suppose the notice might have been served at Lady Day, 1891?—Then it was served.

52,790. Then why did not you leave at Lady Day, 1892?—I did not get my notice. In September I received the notice. I can produce that if you like.

52,791. I was only wondering how it was that you remained six months beyond the time?—It was in September I received it.

52,792. These are mostly Michaelmas takings in this country?—That was a Michaelmas taking.

52,793. You said 3½ acres?—About that.

52,794. Had you had any quarrel before with General Sladen?—Not a word.

52,795. I understand from this letter that the present tenant, or the tenant who succeeded you, had been turned out of some other accommodation land?—That was before then.

52,796. But he had been turned out?—For what reason I do not know.

52,797. But he had been?—He had notice to leave, I believe.

See evidence of next witness.

52,798. And General Sladen says he did that to accommodate him?—To accommodate him. That is his statement, to oblige him; and still he says the gentleman did not ask him. There is another statement I wish to make with respect to inclosures. There has been one inclosure made, I believe it is called Uwch Coed. It is down below the town here, two miles. There was in that inclosure a large quarry from which the whole neighbourhood were accustomed to carry stone for building purposes, and also the highway authorities, and the turnpike trust had been accustomed from time immemorial to carry stone from there, for the repairing of the road. At the inclosure it was given as a private allotment, and a small portion on the corner of the hill given for the public, which was very inaccessible, and very hard to be worked. Now, being a member of the highway board, we had the other day bills sent in, and attached to that was 4*d.* per load for this stone, in order to metal the road. I think that kind of inclosure is not of very much benefit to the neighbourhood. It is rather a hardship.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,799. What was the date of that inclosure do you know?—I cannot tell you.

52,800. What is the name of it?—I think it is Uwch Coed.

52,801. It is 4,070 acres. Do you say some portion was given for recreation?—None for recreation, but for a small quarry in the corner.

52,802. It does not say in the award that any was given?—It is either Glascwm or Uwch Coed, I am not quite sure.

Professor Rhŷs.

52,803. Where is it from here, north, or east or west?—It is south; two miles south-east; two miles below the town here.

Lord Kenyon.

52,804. Was any opposition raised to the inclosure at the time?—I do not know, it is some years ago.

52,805. Now will you proceed. Have you anything further to say?—I have nothing more.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,806. What chair were you referring to?—The chair of the sanitary board.

52,807. Then the conclusion you come to is that tenants should have better security. You have so many elections now, school boards, and parish councils, and county councils, and you think they should have more security?—More security to be able to use their own opinion without having to suffer for it.

52,808. Who was it that claimed this 4*d.* a load from this quarry?—It is the Dderw Estate.

52,809. Was this apportioned out to that estate?—That was apportioned out to them, I believe.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,810. With respect to General Sladen's action. What do you think would be the influence of an action of that kind upon the tenant farmers in general?—Well, it would take different effect. There is no doubt the more general effect it would take would be that it would prevent them acting on their own opinions at elections.

52,811. Prevent them exercising their rights as citizens?—Because the gentlemen who did that was a Conservative, or supposed to be.

Lord Kenyon.

52,812. These are questions sent up by Mr. Vincent. "Was this the state of things? Was "the friend of General Sladen turned out by "a landlord of the same party as yourself, "viz., Mr. Evans Williams? And were you "turned out to make room for the victim of "Mr. Evans Williams"?—Mr. Evans Williams was of the same party as myself.

52,813. Did he turn out the other gentleman?—He had notice to quit; for what reason I cannot say.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,814. Did he give the other gentlemen notice to quit?—Yes, I believe he did.

52,815. And were you turned out to make room for the victim of Mr. Evans Williams?—From that letter it appears he was.

52,816. "These are only a couple of accommodation fields, are they not"?—Two small accommodation fields.

52,817. Is there any other accommodation land to be got in the neighbourhood?—I have some other accommodation land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,818. Just one question. Do you know whether this other gentleman had offended Mr. Evans Williams, or given any personal offence in anything?—I do not know anything at all about it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Stephen W. Williams recalled, and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,819. You wish to make a statement, Mr. Williams?—I can explain that matter of the quarry very simply.

52,798. 52,820. Will you kindly proceed?—The quarry which Mr. Morgan refers to is on the boundary line between the manors of Uwch Coed and Rhysllyn. In the manor of Uwch Coed there was an application made to set out a quarry for the use of the freeholders, and for roads, &c. That quarry was set out, and it was set out absolutely on the boundary line and near to the old quarry, which happened to be in the manor of Rhysllyn on the opposite side of the boundary line. Consequently there being no application in Rhysllyn to set out a quarry, it could only be set out in Uwch Coed. Therefore it was set out in Uwch Coed. I have put it on a diagram here. It is exceedingly rough. I do not know whether I have made it clear, but I will hand it up (handing a diagram).

52,821. It is a question of boundary lines, then?—A question of the boundary line. I have endeavoured to explain it on that sketch. The actual boundary line runs down on the western side of the old quarry where the principal building stone is. That portion on the east side is in Rhysllyn manor, where no application was made for a quarry. It would not be the duty of the valuer to set out a quarry unless application was made for it in Rhysllyn, and a quarry was set out at the nearest point to where the stone had to be got.

52,822. Then he was mistaken in thinking that it ran inside Uwch Coed manor?—Yes. It is quite easy to make a mistake. I have been asked many times myself where is the boundary line. You might just as well ask, where is the equator.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,823. Are the people in the neighbourhood in the habit of getting stones there?—People were in the habit of getting stones on the mountain in various directions; but after the inclosure took place it was the duty of anybody who wanted stone to make application to the Commissioners to set out a quarry. If they failed to do it, in such a case as that I am afraid it was their own fault. The people in Rhysslyn could have made the same application as the people did in Uwch Coed. They did not, and therefore it was not set out; that is all The only thing is this quarry is exactly on the boundary line, and the best part of the building stone, and the easiest to get, is in Rhysllyn, and the worst part of the stone, and the most difficult to get, is in Uwch Coed. That is the explanation.

The witness withdrew.

Major-General Sladen, called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,824. You are Major-General Sladen, of Rhydoldog?—Yes.

52,825. Do you wish to give evidence as to your own property in this neighbourhood?—I have nothing special to say, only that I am landlord in right of my wife, who is the owner of the property. I think we own something to the extent of about 3,500 or 4,000 acres, and about 1,300 acres of that is mountain land which is rented by the tenants as pasture for their sheep. Our tenants I believe to be perfectly satisfied; at least I do not hear any complaints, and since the hard times have commenced, I have given abatements to them for the last six years. During the four first years of that term I abated 5 per cent., and the last two years between 7 and 10 per cent., and many times they did not even expect it. I do not think the tenants care for leases at all; they would much rather be yearly tenants; they do not like the responsibility of leases, as they do not know how times may go with them—hard or otherwise. We have had tenants on the estate living from generation to generation. Six of our tenants have been there for three generations. I could easily name them. There have been two notices to quit. One was to a tenant mentally incapable of managing a farm, and another was where a tenant wished to leave of his own accord. I believe there are See 52,827.

many instances in the country of farmers doing so well that they have been able to purchase their own farms and purchase other farms in the neighbourhood. As regards buildings and repairs, I have always done what has been required to the satisfaction of the tenant, and as regards doing any drainage for the farm, I have always helped them materially in the way of giving pipes, and they have opened and filled, and they have been perfectly satisfied. The tenants have always hauled for repairs, and I have not stinted. I think all my tenants will say that all our buildings are in good order. Of course I think there has been depression. I think that is all owing to foreign competition. I shall be happy to answer any questions. I think I must remark upon what Mr. Morgan has stated against me as having been influenced by political motives. I will leave my notice to answer that question as far as possible. I do not think I can improve upon it. Party feelings do run high in this place, and there is a great deal of party feeling. As to these 3½ acres of accommodation land, I considered myself perfectly justified in giving it to a friend, particularly as I considered he had been politically turned out before.

52,826. Why did you give the tenant notice to quit when he wished to leave himself?—I think I have made a mistake in saying that. I do not quite follow that.

52,827. It seems curious?—Yes, as I read it I thought it was curious. It was a case of Penrhiw. He wished to leave because I would not give him a lease. There is no other man on our estate who has a lease at all, and it is so contrary to all the general principles of the whole tenantry that I did not wish to make an exception in his case.

52,828. He would not stay on as a yearly tenant?—No, he was not a good neighbour to the other tenants, and altogether he was not a pleasant man to have there at all.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,829. Is land cheaper when it is sold now than formerly?—I should say so decidedly. In this neighbourhood I think, land has always sold well. People are anxious to gain possession of their own land very often, I think, if they can buy it, and they will even mortgage to any extent to buy it.

52,830. You say farmers buy the farms out of family savings?—I think so.

52,831. At what rate of interest do you think money is lent within the family?—I think one member of a family would buy the farm, and mortgage it to him.

52,832. Mortgage it at what rate of interest?—I could not say; I should think about 5 per cent.

52,833. Within the family. We have been told that the farmers sometimes buy the farms out of family savings?—Yes.

52,834. If it meant his own savings there would be no rate of interest payable upon it?—Sometimes their own savings, too. I think they are able to put their sons out into very good farms.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

52,835. So far as their own savings are concerned I quite understand, and I did not ask the question, but I mean when the money is lent by some member of the family, a brother or a cousin, or an uncle, or any other relation, what is the rate of interest?—I could not tell you what percentage, but I know the sons are helped to buy farms because I believe in the late sales here of the Bryntilion property, a man bought his own farm with the help of his brothers; I cannot tell you what percentage.

52,836. Probably borrowing within his family he would get it at a lower rate of interest than if he went to a stranger?—Probably.

52,837. That is the inference I should say from his borrowing it within the family?—I should say so.

52,838. Can you tell me what the rate of interest would be on a mortgage made to a stranger?—I think if you could buy land for it to pay you 4 per cent., it would be a very good thing, but I do not think they get anything like that.

52,839. Do you think there is much land lately bought by the sitting tenants?—I think that when the Cwmelan property was sold the tenants bought some land then very well. I do not know whether tenants have been buying much land since, but I think at the sale of the Bryntirion property, which was some time ago, some of the tenants bought their own property.

52,840. Do you consider that the men are better off as freeholders or as tenant farmers?—I think they are better off as tenant farmers, at least I have been told so by tenants.

52,841. You told us that no account of the amount spent in material improvements has been kept on your estate?—Well, I have a rough account, but I have not brought it here.

52,842. From that rough account could you tell us what percentage it would be on the income of the estate?—I have never calculated that, but I know if a barn is required to be built I have built a barn in several places, if a house is required to be repaired I have repaired the house, and if an addition is required I have made the addition in many places. The generality of our buildings, I think all our tenants will say, are in very excellent repair.

52,843. I take it they would vary very much?—Yes, according to necessity. I could not tell you what percentage, but it has been a fair percentage.

52,844. You say that all the relations are perfectly friendly on the estate?—Most cordial and friendly.

Professor Rhŷs.

52,845. How about labour on your estate?—I think, generally speaking, the farms are not large, and the tenants themselves with their sons usually do a good deal of the work—some of them have servants.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

52,846. But, generally speaking, they do most of the work themselves?—A good deal themselves.

52,847. Supposing a farmer has two, or three, or four sons, he cannot find farms for them all?—In instances where our tenants have had three or four sons they have generally managed to put them out in farms, allowing them to work on their own farms for some time, and paying them some time, because when a young man comes to a certain age he expects a certain amount of payment for his work. Then they are put out on good farms afterwards.

52,848. Are they able to find farms for them and put them on farms of their own?—Well, in some instances. I remember one of our tenants put out three sons on three farms, one taking a farm at about 300*l.* or 400*l.* a year, another one taking one of Mr. Watt's best farms, the third one taking another farm close here. That was a man who started with us at little or nothing, so he did not do badly.

52,849. But it is not always that the farmer is able to get farms for his sons. Do they not sometimes go to Herefordshire?—Sometimes they go to Herefordshire. One of these men that I spoke of went to Herefordshire.

52,850. And took a farm there?—Yes, and the two others have taken farms in this neighbourhood.

52,851. Then generally speaking farmers' sons take to farming in some shape or form?—I think so if they can; I think they prefer that.

52,852. In some counties we have heard about some of the sons going into the towns to push their way there?—As far as our tenants are concerned I do not think any of them have done so.

52,853. They stick to the farm?—They stick to the farm as much as possible.

52,854. But, of course, it would create a sort of congestion in time if every farmer's son wanted a farm of his own?—Well, if he cannot farm he labours.

52,855. Then you touched on the question of labour again. Do you know of any cases of labourers being able to get to be farmers; to get farms of their own?—In some instances; in one case they commenced as labourers and became farmers, and got well to do afterwards.

52,856. So that on the whole you do not think the farmers in your neighbourhood do so very badly?—Well, of course, in depressed times they must suffer more or less. In general times they do very well. I think before this crisis came on of depression our farmers were doing better than they were doing in England a good deal.

52,857. That is as long as stock fetched pretty good prices they did not suffer as much as the farmers were suffering in England?—As long as stock fetched good prices and wool was at a fair rate they did well here, but I do not think it has ever been what you call an agricultural country; that is to say, they simply raised corn sufficient for their own food; that is to say, wheat and oats, and things of that kind. I do not think they ever raised sufficient of that to sell to make a profit of. Their profit has been upon stock and upon sheep and upon wool.

52,858. Wool is a very important article here?—Wool is a very important article in the hills particularly.

52,859. How does it stand now?—Wool is very low, but it has been just as low years ago.

52,860. Have you any farms held on the joint system of your providing the sheep and of the farmer attending to them?—Yes, we had, but the Birmingham Corporation has relieved us of all that.

52,861. You have none now?—We have none now, but the system was that you let your sheep at a certain value, so much a sheep, to pay you 5 per cent.

52,862. Did you find that work?—It worked very well. It gave no trouble. They did very well, and we did very well, I consider.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,863. In your statement here you say you made a 5 per cent. abatement in 1887; is that so?—Yes, I commenced then, and I went on for four years, and then matters mended, and for one rent audit or two, I am not quite certain which, I did not give the abatements. Then again, directly things looked worse, I abated again from 7 to 10 per cent.

52,864. What struck me was that you had really recognised the depression before anybody else. I do not find anybody else starting till 1889?—Well, I rather surprised some of my tenants by doing it.

52,865. You say that you made 10 per cent. abatement during the last three years?—Yes.

52,866. Do you think the tenants were satisfied?—They did not express dissatisfaction; they were very pleased to get it.

52,867. But do you mean to say that the fact that they did not complain to you is conclusive evidence that they were satisfied?—Well, what would you expect me to do.

52,868. May you not put this interpretation upon it, that if a person grumbled you might consider him as such and punish him in some way or other?—I certainly should not. I certainly never have and never should.

52,869. When you let a farm, has politics anything to do with it?—Nothing whatever.

52,870. I thought you said politics ran very high here?—So they do, but it has never influenced me in that way. I never made politics or religion the slightest obstacle to my letting a farm, but I get many applications if there are any farms; they are very seldom taken, but if there are any vacant by any chance, by death, or whatever it is, there are any number of applications to take them; but generally it falls from father to son.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

52,871. Is it something more than an inference on your part that Mr. Evans Williams punished that man by turning him out for some political offence?—If there was any political feeling in the matter it was Mr. Evans Williams who started it. I had nothing whatever to do to the matter at all. I wished to accommodate a friend. It is accommodation land, and he had been turned out, and I felt pretty sure that politics influenced him in being turned out. At all events, whether I was right or wrong, that is my impression, and I thought if I had a friend to accommodate I should do so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROBERT LEWIS LLOYD called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,872. You are Mr. Lewis Lloyd, of Nantgwyllt, a landowner in Radnorshire, are you?—Yes, my Lord.

52,873. Have you a statement that you can read?—I have got some heads, that is all. I and my family have held my property here for many years past, and I still hold a considerable portion of it, but a very large portion indeed has been sold to the Birmingham Corporation. I have been Chairman of the Board of Guardians here for the last 20 years, and I am a County Councillor in two counties.

52,874. Can you give the acreage of your property?—I cannot give it you exactly; it is some 6,000 or 7,000 acres, with a large right of common in addition.

52,875. Is that what you have now?—No, it it is what I held. I held that up to last year, last July. With regard to general details I see questions are asked here. I think it much better for properties in general and for the tenants in particular to have property held by a landlord who holds the property entirely unencumbered. I think I may omit a great deal that I have in my evidence here, because Mr. Stephen Williams has already explained to you to a large extent the state of affairs. He is the agent now for the Corporation. I was lord of the manor on the greater portion of the land that they bought, and they bought a good many thousand acres of me. There is one thing I may say here at once. Mr. Wood mentioned the clauses that were secured for the tenants. The tenants did me the honour to ask me to be chairman of their committee. Mr. Wood omitted one of the most important clauses that we got for them, which bears rather largely on the question you have heard a good deal about, of sheep rented in the parish of Cwmdeuddwr, which is almost the only parish where they do hold on that custom. The clause is this, and the tenants set large store on it now. It is that the Corporation shall on a tenant being compelled to leave his farm buy his sheep on the basis and price of a settled flock; that is to say, that a man who goes out this year will be paid a sovereign, or whatever it is for his sheep instead of the market value which he would receive, which would be much lower, because it is a very low time indeed for sheep. That is a very important clause, because now the tenant would certainly not get above 13*s.* or 14*s.* per head if he were to sell his flock all round. We were able to secure better terms for the tenant.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

A good deal has been said as to its being a hardship for the tenant to have to return his flock at the old price, but I think the Commission will see that it is a very considerable benefit to the tenant to receive the stake he puts into his farm if he happens to leave compulsorily at a very depreciated time. With regard to the property, I have lived with my tenants, and I have always been on most friendly terms indeed with them. I have had properties in other counties, but in this county the tenants hold almost at the same rent that they have held for many years past. I have a statement here showing the rent first of all in 1830, then in 1861, then in 1892, embracing a period of 60 years. I have got in each case the acreage and the gross rateable value.

[The following statement was handed in]:—

52,876. It is rather the opposite to what one generally finds, I think ?—Exactly. Then I have a few farms that I bought in 1875. They were bought from the Cwmelan property of which I think you have heard. I have the rent of those farms in 1873 and 1875 and the rent in 1892, and the acreage and the gross rateable value. Perhaps I had better put in the statement. (The following statement was handed in):—

From these two statements you will see that there are many holdings that are rented now at the same rate almost that they were in 1830. Here is one, Caemelin, which was 31*l.* 10*s.* in 1830 and is 32*l.* now. Another one was 25*l.* in 1830 and is 21*l.* now. That is 4*l.* cheaper than it was 60 years ago, and there are several others in the same case. I have been able, as a rule, to keep the same tenants on the farms. Of course here and there changes have occurred, and in three or four cases I have been able to put tenants in who have been labourers on the property themselves. It is those cases particularly where that sheep custom comes in and helps us. I have let one farm to a man who had been a labourer of mine only some 10 years ago. He began by paying off a certain proportion of his sheep, then he followed on, and he has been paying 50*l.* and 100*l.* at a time till now he is holding the whole of his stock. That was a man who was merely a labourer, and he has been able to rise in the world through that custom, and even in these past 10 years he has certainly done very well. He will be now turned out by the Corporation. With regard to the rents I may say the Lady Day rents are received in August, and the September at Christmas. The tithes are paid by the landlord. Then in the syllabus there is a question as to the rates. I have here the table of the rates in this union, dating from 1879 up to 1893, and they have been very largely reduced. In 1879, the first year, the rate was 3*s.* 1¾*d.*; the past year it was 1*s.* 10¾*d.* I should like this statement to go in (handing in the following statement):—

With regard to my property here I have endeavoured to keep it up in a fair state of repair. It is not, perhaps, as good as I should wish, but the buildings are fairly good. We have been for many years spending very largely in other districts where I hold property, but I hope now that with the little property that is left to me I shall be able to get on with it, and put it in a satisfactory state. I may say that, ever since 1867, I have held a farm in my own hands of some sort. I hold one now, a sheep farm; that was my own, but I am now still renting it from the Corporation. As far as I can see, I find I can still make some little money of it, and I am still holding on to it in the hope that matters may improve. I do not think that matters here, on the hill farms particularly, have been as bad as they have been in England. I have considerable property in Devonshire now, where I live, and I see a great deal of difference between that country and this, and I must say I do not think till 1892, that we had here what they would call in England a really disastrous year. There I see far more land laid down than in this country, and land that certainly ought not to be laid down, because it is not land that will grow grass and that will lay down well. In the past two years it has been, of course, a very different matter, because our stock has been fetching such low prices. Last year it was not quite so bad as it was the year before. Farm stock, of course, has been very low indeed, but as to sheep stock, I sold my sheep a little bit better last year than in the year before. When we come to wool, which is a very large product indeed on the hills, I am sorry to say it has become almost unsaleable. I have very seldom been a holder of wool, but I have now the two past years on my hands, and I do not know when I shall get rid of it. That is a very serious matter, indeed. I think we have the remedy at hand in some respects, because stock is beginning to improve, and I think it will improve still further. What we want is better seasons and better prospects for the farmers themselves in England who take our stock. Then I think what we do want, particularly with regard to wool, is that other Governments should treat us as we treat them, and give us the benefit of the free trade that we allow to everybody, and let us have a fair bargain while they get a fair bargain. We have not heard a word about a Land Court to-day, but I am of opinion that it could hardly do us very much good, because I am sure we should incur long bills to both tenants and landlords in going before a Land Court, and what is worse than all in my idea is, that the freeholder will suffer most of all, because, as many of us know, he has got, as they say, his bit of money on the farm, and I am afraid that might be withdrawn altogether if his security was depreciated at all; if you depreciate one security you must depreciate the other, and either his interest must rise, or possibly the whole of the money may be called up, and that may put him into great difficulty. I think, my Lord, that is all I have to say.

52,877. Is there any instruction in butter-making, or anything of that sort, in this county?—Oh, yes; I may say that the County Council have held a dairy school here, but before that we held one; it was got up chiefly by myself, or rather by my wife, who took great interest in it. She had been in Pembrokeshire a good deal and seen a good deal of it there. She took up the matter, and we had a very excellent dairy school here long before the County Council school was started. It certainly was an advantage to them, but I am afraid now they are getting rather slack in attending it, as the farmers' daughters have had a good deal of instruction and are rather tired of it. In addition to that it is not so very much suited here, because we cannot manage it on a large scale. Of course, down in Devonshire I see it on a large scale, and I see where the benefit is, because there they have a big co-operative dairy, and farmers send all their milk to it direct; and they are able to do a great deal in that way which of course would be quite impossible here.

52,878. You could not start such a thing as a butter factory here?—I do not think it could be done here on that scale. There are many times in the year when the cattle are wanted; during the lambing season they use a lot of milk, and so on, and I do not think it could be done here.

52,879. There would not be a regular enough supply of milk?—I think not.

52,880. I suppose the old cloth mills have quite gone out of the district; have there ever been any in this district?—Yes, I think there was one here, but it failed.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,881. Perhaps, if there was a revival in the wool trade, it might return?—Perhaps so. I may say there is considerable co-operation among the farmers here in sheep-shearing time, and so on. We could not carry on our sheep-shearing without. We all meet and join together. I myself joined at a meeting last summer, and we sheared 3,000 sheep in one day.

52,882. Do you shear, yourself?—No, I do not.

52,883. Do the cottages have gardens, most of them?—Yes, all of them have gardens. There is another thing I can put in if you wish it. I have sat as magistrate here for many years, and I have the prosecutions under the Poaching Act, if you wish particulars of them. I find the average is about one conviction a year.

52,884. One per cent.?—No, one conviction yearly for trespass in pursuit of game. (The following table was handed in):—

Then I can give you for seven years the profits made on my farm. I do not know whether you would like to have that.

52,885. Yes, I think we should like you to give it to us?—I have not put it in a table. I have not the last two years, for the simple reason that I cannot make up the profits for those years, because I cannot get rid of my wool. It begins in 1885, and goes on to 1891. The worst year is 1886, and the best year is 1889.

52,886. Can you give us the details?—I may say that I have held this farm since 1885, in partnership with another gentleman. We put our rent at 50*l.* a year between us; and I received my 50*l.* a year first. In 1885 our profit was 177*l.*; in 1886, 151*l.*; in 1887, 181*l.*; in 1888, 234*l.*; in 1889, 360*l.*; in 1890, 264*l.*; in 1891, 229*l.*

52,887. You made more than your three rents then?—We had a capital between us of 2,000*l.*

52,888. What was the size of the place?—It was a small farm, but a very large hill sheep-walk to it.

52,889. Would 50*l.* be the average rent in the district?—I rented it previously at 45*l.* It was let out for years. As to 1892, of course I do not know how we should have stood. I am afraid we should have very nearly balanced accounts—very little profit indeed. It came down suddenly to that.

52,890. Would you put in that table too?—I can get it tabled out properly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,891. Are there many freeholders?—Well, there are not a great many in my parish; very few now. There have been more; but a good many vanished some years ago.

52,892. But your experience in the county goes beyond that parish a good deal?—Oh, yes, there are a good many in the county; but in my parish there were a good many more, but they disappeared; now they are holding their own much better than they did a year or two ago.

52,893. You think so?—Yes, certainly, in that parish.

52,894. Why is that?—A small freeholder is not so well off after all. It does not do for everybody.

52,895. But why should you say they are doing better now than formerly?—Oh, I do not know. There are many instances. I know they are doing better, from my own knowledge.

52,896. Do you think that the farming is better; the system of farming?—Well, I think it is. Generally, in hard times, men cannot put so much time on their farm; they do not do them so well.

52,897. I suppose sheep farming is the principal industry of the district?—Yes.

52,898. Has the breed of sheep improved?—Well, the breed of sheep has improved in some farms a good deal; but they had rather a warning in 1879. As one of the Commissioners said, it was possible to over-improve sheep for the hills; and in 1879 they had a warning, because where the sheep had been over improved they had a loss in that summer. It is a summer everybody will remember. See 52,£.6.

52,899. The Radnorshire sheep have a very good name?—Oh, yes. The Radnorshire sheep would be too good to grow on the Cwmdeuddwr Hill. It is the highest and roughest bit of the whole of Radnorshire.

Professor Rhŷs.

52,900. Is there any cheese-making in your district?—Oh, no; very little indeed. They just make cheese for the farm-houses. There is none made directly for sale; hardly any.

52,901. I did not quite understand what you said as to encumbered estates?—A question was put in the syllabus, and I said it was a great disadvantage to a property to have its landlord encumbered.

52,902. Would you explain that a little bit?—I mean if a landlord has a couple of thousand pounds a year in rents, and he has to pay interest to the amount of 1,000*l.*, he cannot assist his tenants, and he cannot do any improvements, or help his tenants in any way.

52,903. We have had some witnesses, I think, before us, who denied that it made any difference. You are not of that opinion?—No, I am not at all.

52,904. Are there any Welsh-speaking people in your district?—In my parish there are some. There are a few, a very few, who can hardly speak English now.

52,905. Which parish?—This is Llansantffraid Cwmdeuddwr; but that is almost the only parish in the county where they can understand Welsh now The rest of the county is almost entirely English.

52,906. Would the majority in that parish understand English?—Oh, I should think there might be one in a hundred who could not understand English.

52,907. But there are some people who would scarcely know English?—Yes, one in a hundred, perhaps; not more than that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,908. Since you have been in Devonshire, and have had experience in Devonshire, would you say that the agricultural depression has been more severe in that country than here?—Oh, dear, yes.

52,909. You think so?—I am sure of it.

52,910. Do you see any great difference in the custom of land tenure in Devonshire and here?—No.

52,911. No great difference?—No, very little. There is one question that has been before the Commission a great deal, and that I should like to say a word upon: that is the question of hauling for building by the tenants. I asked the question one day in Devonshire what was the custom there, and I found it is precisely the same there as it is all over Wales. I see Sir Joseph Bailey mentioned it, and he suggested a remedy which I think a very fair remedy.

52,912. He suggested a remedy (and we heard it suggested elsewhere) which you think a fair one — that if the tenant is disturbed in his holding within a certain time of the repairs being done, he should have compensation to the extent of his hauling?—Yes, ten years, I think, was the limit.

52,913. But generally speaking, you do not see any great difference between the customs in the two countries?—No, I see very little difference indeed.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,914. What is the explanation you have given of the reduction in rates in this period?—Well, I do not know. We have reduced the number of paupers very largely.

52,915. So that really it is economy in administration?—It is chiefly, I think. The number of paupers has gone down in this union. We had a very large number indeed, 23 years since. I think they have gone down from something over 700 to 200.

52,916. Do you apply the workhouse test?—No, we are rather lax, and we are blamed very much for not being stricter, but we try to find deserving cases if we possibly can.

52,917. The tenants, of course, profit by the reduction in the rates?—Yes, they certainly do to that extent.

52,918. Are there any school boards in the district?—Yes. I beg your pardon, I should have mentioned that. I cannot put in the school board rate. There is one school board in the district with, I think, a rate of 4*d.*; and then there is another in the district. There are, in addition, two local boards—this town and Llandrindod.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,919. You say that sheep are let out on commons without stint. What has been the effect of grazing sheep without stint?—That commoners would not be limited in numbers.

52,920. I quite understand that; but what has it led to; do they do as well in that way?—Well, we have never been able to keep the numbers too large. The hills are very large in proportion to the farm.

52,921. They never keep too great numbers?—No, they have not of late years, the seasons have been too bad; we have had the most terrible destruction in one or two years.

52,922. You say that the tenancies are yearly. Is it once a year that they pay their rent?—Oh no, twice a year. They pay their Lady Day rents in August and their Michaelmas rent about Christmas.

52,923. Then you say again that there is no bidding for farms. How do you explain that?—I never asked a bid for a farm.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

52,924. But you often have biddings, do you not; I thought you said so just now?—If I have ever had a farm to let I have always let it to some one I knew, and have offered it at a rent which I thought sufficient.

52,925. But notwithstanding that you do have offers from outsiders?—Well, I very seldom have, I think, in this country.

52,926. I thought you said so just now?—No. They hardly think it worth while coming to me; they always know I have a tenant ready.

52,927. You have had a good deal of experience as to assessment committees. In your experience do they allow the rates to be reduced when tenants have had abatements of rent?—No, we keep it at our valuation always. We do not go by the rents at all. It was all valued by a competent valuer. If we began to reduce one man in that way we should have everybody applying.

Lord Kenyon.

52,928. Was there any disposition to resist that valuation on the part of the landowners or tenants—I mean the valuation for your rate book purposes?—No, I think not.

52,929. When was it done?—Oh, it was done a considerable time ago. It is quite time we had a new one now for many reasons, but the ratepayers are afraid that it would cost a good deal of money, and the guardians are afraid to embark upon it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,930. Do you get any appeals to the assessment committee?—Yes, we do very often.

52,931. How do you treat them?—Well, it is a very difficult question indeed. When an appeal is made as to a new house, and so on, we have to find a similar house and a similar farm if we can; that is the only way.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,932. You say in regard to tenants' cottages that they all have gardens. Are they sufficient or do they wish to get any more?—No, I think the gardens are quite sufficient for the cottages. Of course some labourers manage to keep a cow, but I think almost every cottage in my parish has a garden.

52,933. And they have as much as they require. They do not want any allotments?—No, I have never heard of anybody asking for any allotments. There have been some applications for allotments. Of course there is an allotment committee in this county, and there have been a few applications at the other end of the county, and I think they have all been satisfied. I am not on the committee myself. See 53,445, 54,365.

52,934. Then you have had experience in England; do not you find some differences in the style of living in England, as compared with that of the Radnorshire people?—Well, not so much. The Radnorshire people live better than they do in Cardiganshire. They live harder in Cardiganshire than they do here. I know Cardiganshire pretty well.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

52,935. But the farms are much smaller than in Devonshire, are they not?—No, not materially.

52,936. Do you think that the farmers work as hard there as they do here?—Yes, they are very hard working there, and they have to work hard now, too.

Lord Kenyon.

52,937. There is a great deal of similarity between Devonshire and a good deal of Wales, is there not?—Yes, there is; I have found that.

Mr. Griffiths.

e 48,045, ,097.

52,938. Then you have something to say about something that was said at Aberayron. I do not think you have referred to that?—I wish to make a remark about some evidence given at Aberayron by Dr. Garrod Thomas with regard to a farm held of me, and which he has bought now. His father was a tenant of my farm and Dr. Thomas considered that he had to pay rather a higher price than he should have because the farm had been improved very much. The farm was let to the late tenant by my father in 1843, and, curiously enough, there was a valuation made then. Dr. Thomas's evidence is that the farm was in a very dilapidated state when he took it. I find, curiously enough, the farm was valued in the same year; it was in the very year my father came into the property, and it was valued under a partition deed; between joint owners. He took it at a rent of 60*l.* and the valuation was 75*l.*, so that it does not appear that it could have been in such a very dilapidated state. Still, as I know perfectly well, the buildings and all that were in a very bad state indeed, and we spent all round that district a very large sum indeed in re-building. That is why I think my buildings here are not as good as they otherwise would be perhaps We rebuilt every house and every building on the whole of that property. Well, he held that farm for 30 years at his 60*l.* a year rent, the valuation having been 75*l.* only up to 1873, which was, of course, the farmers' best period. I thought it was only fair that I should have a re-valuation. The re-valuation came to 119*l.* 10*s.* on his 60*l.* I did not put him up to that, nor were any of the farms put up to their valuation. I put them half way between the rent and the valuation—I thought we should fairly deal between each other. His farm was valued at 119*l.* 10*s.* and I put it up to 110*l.*, which I considered afterwards rather high, and reduced it to 100*l.* Then a very few years afterwards I gave him back 10 per cent., which reduced it again to 90*l.* I sold this farm in 1889 (I had sold the greater part of the property in 1875 to buy a property here), and as the tenant had had the benefit of all we had done, and had had it for nearly 30 years, I thought it was a very fair case for re-valuation. and, moreover, I can only say that I am afraid Dr. Thomas, if I had sold the farm in 1875, would certainly have had to give 500*l.* more than he gave in 1889.

Sir John Llewelyn.

52,939. You did not tell us the date of these repairs?—I cannot tell you, but I am certain they were done before 1850.

52,940. Then, do I understand he had the benefit of these buildings for 30 years before you sold?—Oh, yes, and his son is still in the farm—I beg pardon, his sons' widow. I thought his son was still in the farm, but I learnt the other day that he was killed last year.

52,941. Then he had the benefit of the repairs which you did. You did the repairs?—Oh, yes, all of them.

52,942. And he had the benefit of them?—Yes. The chief amount of labour he spent was on the fences—in repairing the fences. I have no doubt he did do that, but he certainly had the benefit of it for 25 years.

52,943. When the property was sold, was it sold by public auction or private treaty?—Public auction. It was the trustees who were selling, and they did not consider that they were entitled to sell by private contract. There were three cases in that district. Another case was that of a man who put up a water wheel. That farm was sold in the same way and he had the benefit of his water wheel. In that case we re-built all the buildings that are on his farm in the same way. I certainly agree that he was entitled to sell his water wheel, or take it away. I know cases down there where they have taken their water wheels away from my farms when they have given them up. The third case was a similar case, where the tenant's rent was not raised when I had the re-valuation made, simply because the farm did not come above the old valuation, and the tenant was only there afterwards about six years, and he is still remaining on the property at the same rent.

See 48,365.

Lord Kenyon.

52,944. These are questions by Mr. S. H. Cowper Coles: "Do you not remember Aberithon "Farm at Newbridge was reduced in the rate- "able value to the rent now received?" Do you remember that case?—No, I do not remember Aberithon coming up on appeal, but there must have been some outside reason for it.

52,945. "Is there not a strong feeling that the whole Union should be re-valued?—I think there is in a great many parts of it, but the difficulty is that the guardians are so frightened at the expense. It would cost them a 4*d.* rate for about three years to pay the expense, and they are rather frightened. I know I should be very glad, indeed, to see it re-valued, because I know we are rated at 30 per cent. below our proper value, and the rates would look very much better, indeed, if we were re-valued.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,946. This farm of Dr. Thomas was near Aberayron?—Yes.

52,947. It is a very short distance?—Yes.

52,948. And the nature of the improvement is quite permanent; indeed, I should think the fences are now better than they were then?—

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Of course, it was done so long ago — I do not remember what the fences were previously.

52,949. I happen to know the district?—He was a very good farmer, indeed; a very excellent man.

52,950. Yes, I quite endorse what you say with regard to that?—It was the best farm on the whole of my property there, and he himself was a very good man, indeed.

Lord Kenyon.

52,951. As bearing on your fairness and impartiality, I may ask you this: you have acted as umpire in the boat races between Oxford and Cambridge, I think?—I have for many years.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Llewellyn Pugh called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

52,952. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

52,953. Where do you live?—Glanrafon, St. Harmon, near Rhayader.

52,954. Who is your landlord? — General Sladen.

52,955. Are you satisfied with your landlord? I am.

52,956. Do you find that differences of religion, politics, or creed make any difference between you?—No, not at all.

52,957. Are you satisfied with the security you have in your farm—in your tenure?—I am.

52,958. You do not want anything further?—No.

52,959. You do not wish for a lease?—I do not.

52,960. How long have you been tenant on the estate?—Fifty-three years.

52,961. On the same farm?—On the same farm.

52,962. What rent do you pay?—70*l.*

52,963. How big is your farm?—Inside and on the sheep land?

52,964. Both?—About 200 acres.

52,965. That includes the sheep walk?—Yes, it includes it all.

52,966. Do you find your rent is too high now?—No, I pay all the time.

52,967. Have you any difficulty in paying now?—Well, it is rather harder than it has been, but it is very good; he gives 5 or 7 per cent. back.

52,968. Have you got an agreement?—Yes.

52,969. Do you know what is in it?—Yes.

52,970. Have you got it with you?—I have.

52,971. May we see it. (Witness handed in agreement.) What do you think about what they call a Land Court?—I do not think anything at all about it—the landlord himself, for me.

52,972. You do not want anybody between you, then?—No.

52,973. Has your landlord done any improvements for you?—Yes. He assists me in anything that I ask.

52,974. Have you been very troublesome to him in asking for things?—Sometimes.

52,975. Do you think that the farmers are afraid to come forward to state their grievances?—Oh, not at all. Why should they?

25,976. They say they might be turned out of their holdings, or something of that sort?—No, nothing I should think, so far as I could learn.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

52,977. You do not think that that is the case?—No.

52,978. Do you think they are contented with the present state of things, the majority of them?—So far as ever I could understand.

52,979. In your part of the world they are?—Yes.

52,980. Do you go and talk to them much now?—No, not much.

52,981. You see them sometimes, I suppose?—Yes, sometimes. I hear no complaints.

Mr. Griffiths.

52,982. Do you speak for any farmers besides farmers on this estate?—Yes, sometimes.

52,983. Are you speaking for them now—are you speaking on behalf of any other farmers?—Of course I do.

Mr. Richard Jones.

52,984. You said that you hear no complaints. Have you never heard it said that the farmers always grumble?—Well, there is no heed paid to the man that always grumbles.

Professor Rhŷs.

52,985. Can you talk Welsh?—No.

52,986. Are there any of your neighbours who talk Welsh?—Not near me.

52,987. Do you remember any talking Welsh in your district when you were a boy?—Yes.

52,988. A good many?—Yes, 60 or 70 years ago.

52,989. You are now 84, I think, are you not?—I am.

52,990. If you represent the farmers on your estate, I think there is nothing much to complain of?—Well, there is no use to complain. I have been in the same place these 53 years, and I never heard much complaints at all.

52,991. By the way, there is one thing I should like to know before we leave this district; how do the farmers live in your district? What sort of food do they have?—Well, as good as any other district.

52,992. They vary very much in some districts. In some districts they live very hard?—We do not live very hard.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

52,993. I thought you did not live quite so hard as they do over the borders—in Cardiganshire ?—No, I think not.

52,994. Would you mind telling me how you do live, or how your neighbours live. You have sometimes been to your neighbours' houses ?—Of course.

52,995. Now tell me what they have for breakfast ?—Sometimes tea, sometimes milk, and so on.

52,996. And wheat bread or barley bread ?—There is no barley bread in our country. We eat as good bread as anybody in the kingdom.

52,997. Then in the middle of the day what do they eat ?—Meat—bacon and beef.

52,998. Do they ever have fresh meat ?—Oh, yes, on Sundays, now and then.

52,999. Otherwise it is bacon and salt beef, or what is it ?—Salt beef or fresh beef.

53,000. Fresh beef every Sunday or so ?—Yes.

53,001. In the afternoon do you have anything ?—We shall have tea about 4 or 5 o'clock in the evening.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

53,002. Then for supper what do you usually take ?—We shall have boiled milk or broth, or something of that sort.

53,003. Do you remember any great change in food since you were a boy ?—Yes, I do.

53,004. Did they live harder when you were a boy ?—I believe they did, not the tenth part as well.

53,005. But which is the best to produce men who can live to 84 in such strong health as you are—the fare of that time or the fare of the present day ?—I should think this is the best for living.

Lord Kenyon.

53,006. I have some questions to ask you which are put by Mr. Nixson. "Are you of "the same politics as your landlord" ?—Of course.

53,007. "Do you think your rent should be "reduced" ?—That it should be reduced ?

53,008. It is Mr. Nixson's question, not mine. Do you think your rent should be reduced ?—No, I do not think it should.

53,009. You think it is a fair rent ?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Lloyd called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,010. You are a tenant farmer of Argoed ?—Yes.

53,011. On the estate of Mrs. Gibson Watt ?—Yes, the Doldowlod estate.

53,012. Have you a statement ?—No, I have no particular statement, but I am prepared to answer any questions that you will ask me that I can answer.

53,013. Have you got a paper like the one I have here ?—Yes.

53,014. Will you go through that ?—The question asked in this paper is, "Do you believe "that differences of language, creed, or politics "make any difference to the relations between "landlord and tenant ?" My answer is that I have not known of a single instance on the Doldowlod estate where politics, religion, or language has made any difference. I know of instances on the estate where a father and four sons are farming four separate farms, and a married daughter farms another farm, and I believe they are all Nonconformists. In the prosperous year of 1874 I was offered a lease, which offer I declined. I had confidence in landlord and agent. There were not wanting at that distant date signs that agriculture would become depressed. Merchants were making preparations on a large scale for the rapid and cheap transmittance of commodities from distant lands to Britain. The tenant that farms fairly well is, as a rule, secure in his holding. I have a copy of my agreement.

53,015. Have you it with you ?—I have not. I was told that the real agreement was sent to the Landowners' Association, and that I need not bring mine with me, and that is the reason

Lord Kenyon—continued.

I did not bring it. I have not known of the penalising clause being enforced against a good tenant on the Doldowlod estate. I have always farmed in my own way, and have never been interfered with in any way. I object to a Land Court for the reason that it would prevent me having a free hand to make my own contracts. I cannot say what landlords would do if Land Courts were established. Looking at the past if Land Courts had been established, my impression is the late Mr. Gibson Watt would not have spent his money so freely to try to get two blades of grass where one grew before. Years ago the bills for improvements frequently covered the rental of the estate. Buildings such as farmhouse, out-buildings, cottages, and repairs are all done by the landlord; in case of additions, such as French barns, there is a percentage charged in most cases. Frequently new buildings are let by contract In some instances the tenant is asked to do the hauling, a part of the hauling, for repairs. Draining has been done on the Doldowlod estate by owner. I do not believe anyone is afraid to come forward to give evidence here. I believe Radnorshire men to be too independent for that We take a pride in believing that we are descended from the countrymen of Hamlet the Dane; we are not exactly Cymry in Radnorshire. I have farmed on the Doldowlod estate 29 years, and have always found a cordial feeling existing between landlord, tenant, and agent. The late Mrs. Gibson Watt was always ready to assist and encourage a tenant in any improvement, and the agent, Mr Grant, is always ready to listen to any grievance a tenant may have.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,016. You said that years ago the bills for improvements frequently covered the rental of the estate?—I did say so.

53,017. How do you account for it. That is not the usual thing on every estate, is it?—By no means. It is not usual at all, but Mr. Gibson Watt, when he came and took possession of the estate, was such an impulsive man; his ancestor, the great engineer, was a great man in his day, and Mr. Gibson Watt is a great agriculturist, and he was determined that his estate should shine and be a pattern to the whole country. He was not entirely dependent upon it; he could do without the rental of the Doldowlod estate, as he had other property, and he laid out money freely.

53,018. Was the result known by the excellence of his buildings, and the improvements on his estate; was his estate distinguished above other estates in the country in consequence?—Yes, it is distinguished to-day for better cottages and better buildings, generally speaking, and more drained land.

53,019. I am very glad you have brought that out. I think it deserves to be put on record. Then you say you are not a Cymro; would you tell me how you came by the name of David Lloyd?—I am afraid to do that; I should have to hunt up ancient history, and I really have not the time; probably you have, but I have not.

53,020. Do you think, perhaps, that some of the Danes may have escaped from the battle of Buttington or somewhere else, and that the Welsh women afterwards proved too much for them?—I think you will find on record in history that there was a colony of Danes who came and settled in Radnorshire, and that is how I base my calculations upon Radnorshire being more Danes than Cymros.

53,021. But do you not think that the mother's side would be possibly the more important side of the pedigree?—I could not enter into that; I am not an expert in that direction at all.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,022. Very well I will not ask you anything more about it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,023. Do you know anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have never been in contact with it much. I know there is such an Act.

53,024. Is it operative at all in your neighbourhood?—I do not know anything to bar it being in operation. Before the Agricultural Holdings Act was passed in 1863, or whatever it was, the Doldowlod estate used to allow for improvements. I could send a copy of my agreement to you, my Lord, in any place. I was not aware that it was wanted.

Lord Kenyon.

53,025. I do not hink it signifies.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,026. The question is this, whether there is any provision in the agreement for compensating a tenant for any claim he might make?—No, I do not believe there is, but the custom has been, all the same, to compensate a good tenant when he made improvements. I am reminded that there is a clause in the agreement, which slipped my memory, for giving compensation.

53,027. Consequently the Agricultural Holdings Act, so far as compensation goes, does not operate on the Doldowlod estate?—I do not see why it might not. If the outgoing tenant was dissatisfied with the compensation he got from the estate, I daresay he would put the Agricultural Holdings Act in force.

53,028. But he would not put it in force, you see, if there is already a compensation clause in the agreement?—I cannot tell about that.

53,029. Perhaps you have come into contact with farmers who have had some experience of the working of the Act: do they think it is simple enough to settle the claims that may be made by a tenant for unexhausted improvements?—I could not say of my own knowledge, and I have not come in contact with a great many that have had much to do with the Act, so that I could not give an opinion.

53,030. I should think that you might be able to express an opinion upon it?—I daresay it is intricate enough; I have no doubt of that; but I could not follow it, or give any explanation of how it is carried out.

53,031. I will just pursue the question a little further, as you have raised it again: a suggestion was made by Mr. Miller, at Brecon, that it would be advisable, and a cheap method of settling claims, that there should be a public arbitrator in every county to settle claims for unexhausted improvements—that is, a cheap way of settling claims. Would you have any objection to that?—I cannot see any objection to that idea. See 51,5 51,527.

53,032. An arbitrator nominated by the Board of Agriculture?—I cannot see any objection for the moment.

53,033. Is there any interest charged upon buildings or draining?—There has been none charged to me.

53,034. But you know what is the rule of the estate?—I have already stated that I believe when there is an addition, such as French barns, there is a percentage charged in most cases, but not otherwise.

53,035. To what amount?—Five per cent., I believe. I have not been charged, consequently I cannot state positively.

53,036. Then what about the draining; is there any percentage charged upon the draining?—There was 35 years ago, perhaps a great portion of the estate drained by the West of England Company, and I am not aware, but probably in some instances there was a percentage put on tenants, but there was none put upon me for that draining. Before I retire, may I ask, as a favour, to be allowed to make a very short statement. I will not detain you two minutes.

Lord Kenyon.

53,037. Is it pertinent to your evidence?—I believe it to be so. My Lord, the greatest drawback we have here is the low price of mutton and wool. Our country being hilly, there is a great portion of the land that will only carry sheep, and the man in Australia that farms 100,000 sheep is only handicapped by one halfpenny per pound for ocean freight, to send this stuff to Britain, and so long as the prairies of North America, and the pampas of South America, Africa, and Australia, are allowed to send their commodities to Britain without restriction, so long shall we have to submit to prairie values. We do not ask for protection, but we do ask for a trade mark. We want carcases from the River Plate ticketed as such in the British markets, and then the English artisan will willingly give a higher price for home-grown meat than he will for foreign meat when he knows it to be such. We are all right here if we could get better prices, and if your honourable Commission wishes to do us good, you must go further afield than Wales. You may inquire here till doomsday, but you will never alter the standard of values by inquiring here—namely prairie values.

53,038. You know there is a Bill before Parliament?—I understand so.

53,039. That is very much what you require, is it not?—Thank you, my Lord, for your suggestion.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edward Lewis called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,040. You are a tenant farmer?—I am a tenant farmer on the Dderw Estate.

53,041. Where do you live?—At Dolivor, near Rhayader.

53,042. Has there been good feeling between the landlady of the Dderw Estate and yourself?—There always has been 53,043. Is that the case, do you think, with the rest of the tenants?—I can give you an instance back to the year 1831, of my father taking a farm on the Dderw Estate, if you wish to go back so far.

53,044. Yes, as far as you like to take us?—He rented a farm on the Dderw Estate in 1831. I could state the rent if you wish to have it.

53,045. Yes?—56*l.* per year.

53,046. What was the size of his farm?—100 acres.

53,047. Was it 56*l.* then, or is it at that rent now?—It was that then. It has been the same from that time to the present time, with the exception that there was draining done 12 or 14 years back—there was drainage in the neighbourhood—and he chose to have some draining done, and he paid 2*l.* 10*s.* in settlement for the drainage; that would make 58*l.* 10*s.* He farmed that from that time up to his death, which would be in the year 1888, I believe. That would make 57 years.

53,048. You have been there since?—No, a sister of mine had the farm after our father's death, and the rent is the same now as it was before.

53,049. Have you got another farm?—Yes, I have got a farm on the Dderw Estate, Dolivor, which I have mentioned.

53,050. Your father started you in farming during his lifetime?—Yes, I started farming during his lifetime. I took that farm in the year 1874.

53,051. Do you think the farmers in your neighbourhood are satisfied with the present condition of things?—I do not hear anything from any of them, but we are bound to be satisfied, because if you bring any statement before our agent or landlord which you can prove to be correct, you will be attended to at once upon it. I can give you an instance with regard to my farm, when I took my farm in the year 1874; I paid 100*l.* a year for it; times were a little better at that time. The usual way, as you have heard mentioned here, is that the sons take the farm after the father's death. When the old families all die out, of course there are sufficient tenants coming in, but so long as there are any sons or near relatives they have it after their relatives' decease. This farm was almost like a fresh taking, and there were many applications, and by one and another that farm was put up to 100*l.* a year, but in 11 years afterwards I went to my landlord, I made a statement as well as I could that it was too dear to answer the times, and I was not able to pay for it, and he reduced my rent 30*l.*

53,052. Did that meet your wishes?—Yes, that was what I asked for.

53,053. Is that what you pay now?—Yes.

53,054. When did you get it reduced?—It would be in 1885. What we find in our neighbourhood against us is the great depression. We are not growing much corn in our neighbourhood—only a little—but we found, taking the parishes of Llanwrthwl and Cwmdeuddwr, the sheep would be our principal rent payer. We keep them for the spring and summer months up on the hills, and we bring them down in the winter months and keep them there. At present they are at a small profit to what they have been; especially, wool has dropped in value very much.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,055. Before the year 1874 you were with your father on the farm, I suppose?—No.

53,056. Where were you then before that?—I lived in a place belonging to the gentleman who has been before you, Mr. Robert Lewis Lloyd, of Nantgwyllt. I lived on his estate for 15 years.

53,057. Where were you brought up as a boy?—At a place called Glanelan; perhaps you know it.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

53,058. Was that on a farm?—Yes.

53,059. During that time did you receive any wages?—At the time I was working with my father?

53,060. Yes?—No, I did not receive any particular wages. I got merely food and clothing.

53,061. You got food and clothing and pocket money, I suppose?—In a certain time I received very good wages, but not at that time exactly.

53,062. But at that time you received some training upon the farm?—Yes, of course.

53,063. Then, when you went to a farm, did your father help to set you up?—Yes.

53,064. That is pretty customary, I suppose, throughout all this country?—Yes, decidedly. It has been the great custom. If you cannot get parents to help you, you would stand in a very bad position. I do not know who you would get.

53,065. Do you think that the youngsters are hardly treated by that sort of life?—I laboured hard for my father for over 20 years, and when it came into the position that I could get a farm, he put me up well.

53,066. Do you think young men are hardly treated by that sort of life, or not?—They are hardly treated if, after 15 or 20 years of hard work, they would have nothing for their prospects from their parents in the farms; it would be bad treatment then, and in those cases it would be very well that the sons should have wages to look to themselves. They should find out that they would be well provided at that time by their parents.

53,067. You do not consider yourself that you were hardly treated as a young man?—No, I was never badly treated. What I was going to say was this. I remember in my father's time, a good many years ago now, that he sold wool one year for 2*s.* a pound. Now, this year that my sister is in the farm, she sold the same quality of wool for 8½*d.* Things of that sort are causing the great depression, and with your Land Commission coming round our country, if you can do a little in those cases, that is, for wool and mutton,—we do not grumble so much at beef. Of course, that is varying. Since I have begun to farm I have sold beef to the butcher for 9*d.* a pound, and I sold in this last year as good quality for 6*d.* That is the great reduction. These are the things we are troubled with. It is because of the foreign competition; and railway rates are very high.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,068. Have you any sons working with you?—Yes, I have one.

53,069. Do you think you would be able to provide for your children as well as your parents provided for you. I am referring to the last 10 years?—It is a question I can hardly answer. We do not know what the times will be from now on. We know what has passed.

53,070. Take the past?—I have fairly provided for them in the time so far as it has gone, but I cannot go on now.

53,071. Take for instance children who have worked for their parents since 1879?—I do not think any of mine would grumble at what I have been doing for them, so far as it has gone at present.

53,072. Do you think you would be able to provide for them as well as your parents provided for you?—I do not know, I am sure. If you will give me a lease for as long as I shall live, and say how long that would be, I will tell you.

53,073. Take the last 10 years?—I could tell you that.

53,074. Will you give the answer?—I believe I can do so; that is the answer. I should like to say that my father, and my sister, and myself, have always been on the most friendly terms with the landlord, and the agents on the estate, and anything that we would go and ask, if we brought a statement true and correct, we should get granted, and I believe the whole of the tenants on the estate would be bound to say the same.

Lord Kenyon.

53,075. It shows a nice feeling between you and your landlord?—There cannot be anything better, and I am sure the whole of the people on the estate would be bound to say the same.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Edwards called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,076. Do you live at Llanfair Hall?—Yes.

53,077. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

53,078. You have a statement to make to us?—Yes. When I was born my father was tenant of New House, Cwmdeuddwr. When he died about 33 years ago I took on the farm. It was about 200 acres. My father had been living there for about 30 years, and I was also tenant for a similar period. My father put hundreds of pounds into it in draining, fencing, and reclaiming it, and in manures and lime. I also did a lot of draining, and building, and hauling, and manuring. I believe it was on account of my politics I got notice to leave the farm. I left three years ago last March. I made a claim for compensation, but up to the present time I have not been able to get anything; my claim was for over 200*l.* There are many farm houses in Radnorshire in a miserable state of repair, and in many places the buildings are half down. Rents are too high, and must come down before there can be any prosperity amongst farmers. When my father took the farm it was uninclosed land, and he divided it into fields, and fenced it, and hauled all the material to the buildings which were put up. I myself put up a carthouse and some small buildings at my own expense, and also did a lot of repairs. There is much uninclosed common land in Cwmdeuddwr parish, from 30,000 to 40,000 acres. I think these should be left as they are, without any restrictions.

53,079. Was this common land, or how did it come to have no fence?—There were no fences.

53,080. Was it common?—No, a wilderness of a farm.

53,081. You say you sent in a claim?—Yes.

53,082. Did you send it in under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes. I have fixed arbitrators to do it, and they have objected to it all the while.

53,083. Have you fixed your arbitrators?—Yes.

53,084. Have they fixed theirs?—Yes.

53,085. Have they not settled upon a third party as umpire?—No.

53,086. Is it in their hands?—Yes, going on these three years.

53,087. Who is the landlady?—Mrs. Prickard.

53,088. Mr. Wood was the agent?—Yes.

53,089. He referred to your case in his evidence, did he not, as being under consideration?—Yes.

53,090. Did he not put in a counter claim?—No, he did not. He could not do that, I think.

53,091. What makes you say it was politics which were at the bottom of your notice to quit?—I believe it was.

53,092. Was there no other notice?—No, I do not think so.

53,093. What makes you think it was politics? Was anything said or done?—Yes, we could see it plain enough.

53,094. Have you anything in writing to back that statement up with? Did you have any conversation with your landlord?—Yes.

53,095. Did he say it was for political reasons?—No, he did not say so.

53,096. Did the agent say so?—No, he did not say so. He was like the agent then. Mrs. Prickard is from here.

53,097. You have no paper to show it?—No.

53,098. It only exists in your mind?—Well, I am sure of it.

53,099. I suppose you are a Liberal?—Yes.

53,099A. Are there many other Liberal tenants on that estate?—Yes, some, I think.

53,100. Have they had notice to quit?—I do not know anything about the others.

53,101. It is rather a strong statement to make unless you are very sure about it?—Well, I had the notice in 1890, and in 1891 I went off.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,102. There was no particular election then?—No, not exactly then.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,103. What was the reason given for your notice when you had to leave?—They did not give me any reason.

53,104. Did you not go and ask?—I went and asked for the place.

53,105. Did he say anything?—He gave me no answer. I took another man with me, so that he cannot deny it.

53,106. Did he not give either of you an answer?—No, he did not give either of us an answer.

53,107. On what estate are these miserable houses in this bad state of repair?—Here and there about the county in many places.

Lord Kenyon.

53,108. Can you specify any?—Not exactly now.

53,109. Can you mention any estates, or the locality?—I only see them by passing—a lot of bad buildings.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,110. With respect to this claim for compensation, what is the amount of the claim you are making?—190*l.*

53,111. Have you appointed a referee?—Yes.

53,112. Has the landlord appointed a referee?—Yes, many times over.

53,113. Have the referees appointed an umpire?—No, never, I think, they have never knocked it off all the while. Several have been suggested.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,114. Did not you refuse to take the umpire that they had chosen?—They have refused many times.

53,115. But did you not refuse?—I did refuse one, I think, but they have refused many times. They have not accepted one that I have mentioned.

53,116. It is usual in our part of the country for the valuers to select whom they please?—Last February we fixed the last.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,117. Did the referees fail to agree upon an umpire?—No, I think not. Last February they fixed the last, and I never heard a word of it after.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

53,118. There is a claim against you for rent, is there not?—Yes, for the half year. I did not pay the last half year.

53,119. You allowed that to run until the claim is settled?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,120. How much is the half year's rent?—About 78*l.* 10*s.*, I think.

53,121. And the claim is 190*l.*?—Yes.

Re-examined, 53,139.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD WOOD called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,122. Do you wish to rebut any of these statements?—I have not been in Court during the whole of the examination of the last witness, but inasmuch as I was examined before, and was in hopes that any question may have been put to me then; Mr. Edwards has been in Court the whole day, and he was present during the whole of my examination. Unfortunately I do not know what he said.

See 52,768–52,773, and the evidence of the preceding witness.

53,123. Here is a copy of what was said. [Handing statement.]—You will recollect I gave evidence upon this particular case.

53,124. So far as I remember you said the claim was still pending?—Yes, that is so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,125. The principal thing is that Mr. Edwards says he believes it was from politics that he was turned out of his farm?—Upon that I should wish to give an absolutely emphatic denial. I say that politics did not enter into it in any possible way. That was no reason for the notice to quit having been given, and, with your permission, I will explain the reason why.

Lord Kenyon.

53,126. I was going to ask you why. Did you give any reason?—The reason is this, at this particular period the mansion of Dderw was let to a Mr. Freeman, the gentleman, Mr. Prickard, who had previously occupied it, having vacated it. Mr. Freeman had a lease of this mansion for five years, including the sporting rights over the whole of the property—the whole of the 4,000 acres, and the 12,000 unenclosed acres that I mentioned in my evidence before. The lease was not prepared by me, but he had a lease. Some time afterwards Mr. Freeman complained to me that constantly and incessantly he had been annoyed by Mr. Edwards, the occupier of this particular farm, in respect of the sporting rights. He said that whenever he was going out shooting Mr. Edwards' son had persistently beaten every field beforehand. That was the statement he made to me. He said that subsequently Mr. Edwards' son was extremely rude to him, that he had insulted him in the grossest possible manner, not only once, but several times, and that he had disturbed the shooting. I saw Mr. Freeman about it, and I said, "For heaven's sake can you not adjust "the differences; can you not settle the "matter?" He said, "No." Then he wrote to me. I have the letter here before me. I said, "I do not want to take any notice of the "thing, surely we can adjust it." Then he wrote to me on the 15th of November 1889. "Dear sir, While out shooting this afternoon "we saw Mr. Edwards', of New House, son out "shooting, which, under the Ground Game Act "he has a perfect right to do as I explained to "him, for rabbits and hares, driving down all "the hedge-rows. Now, should Mr. Edwards "do this now and then it would not matter, "but he does nothing else all day and every "day; the result of this is, that in the whole "of the New House grounds one cannot get "a shot at all, he, Mr. Edwards, junior, having "driven everything away off the place. When "we met him this afternoon he told us that he "used to do the same in Mr. Prickard's time, "which I found out not to be the case. I "should be obliged if you will let me know about "this, as if it is to continue in this way we "might just as well give up the right of "shooting over the New House, and ask the "landlord for compensation for the same. On "New House grounds we have turned out 138 "partridges, and we have seen eight since "shooting over the said ground." I wrote in reply, and said I was very sorry that there should be any trouble or difficulty, but, of course, the tenant was perfectly justified in taking the ground game. When he wrote this: "In reply to yours of last night, it is "quite right under the Ground Game Act, "Mr. Edwards can shoot rabbits and hares, but "can he beat the whole farm for nearly every "day, as he is doing now. For instance, you "take a shooting for yourself, the landlord "keeps up the Ground Game Act, and every "time you go to shoot with friends you find "that the landlord's son has run over the whole "of the shooting before you. How long are "you going to stand it, or pay for that shooting "is the question? I think this is plain enough "to put it in the way I mean." Upon that I saw Mr. Freeman again and again, and he told me that Mr. Edwards' son had insulted him in the grossest possible way in addition to doing this injury, and he claimed to have compensation from the landlord for the loss of the sporting rights. The result was that eventually Mr. Edwards had notice to quit, but when the notice to quit was served I gave express instructions to my clerk, who will be called if necessary, that if Mr. Edwards would only make an explanation and apology to Mr. Freeman, who then occupied Dderw Houses, there was no possible intention to disturb him, and that he should be allowed to continue in the farm. Subsequently to that I saw Mr. Jarman, who was the son-in-law, I think, of Mr. Edwards, the tenant, and I spoke to him about the matter, as I was anxious to avoid any difficulty, and told him: "Can you not get this matter settled; it is a "question which seems to me simply purely "between Mr. Freeman and Mr. Edwards. My "life is a very unhappy lot between the two. "Mr. Freeman is calling upon me and writing "to me incessantly, what am I to do? Can you "not settle the matter between them? It seems "to me a purely personal matter." I said, "If you will do that Mr. Edwards can go on "just the same as before." Mr. Jarman said he would do so. The next thing I heard on the matter was that Mr. Edwards wrote to me a letter to say that Mr. Jarman had no justification whatever for approaching me on the subject. Before that, I should say that my clerk spoke to Mr. Edwards, and said, "Do settle this matter, "Mr. Prickard does not want to disturb you in "your tenancy, it is purely a question between "yourself and Mr. Freeman. Mr. Freeman has "a lease, and he claims compensation, and if "you can settle the matter and apologise, or "explain the matter, there will be an end of the "whole thing." Instead of that Mr. Edwards indignantly denied it, and refused to do it. Then the question ended. Mr. Edwards refused to take the farm on, and refused to give any explanation or apology. As Mr. Edwards has been called I want to add this, that I consider Mr. Edwards behaved extremely badly to the landlord, because under the agreement, a very old agreement, which he and his brothers signed, and which I confess I had no cognizance of at the time I am discussing, when he left Mr. Edwards agreed to adopt an old agreement dated 1860, under which, with regard to sheep, he agreed as follows. It is between Thomas Prickard and William Edwards: "The said Thomas Prickard shall and will at "the end or determination of the said tenancy "buy, take to, and pay unto the said John "Edwards, his executors, or administrators, for "the stock or flock of sheep depasturing on the "Cletter Common, Geufron, and the other "commons or sheep walks belonging to the "said farm and lands called New House and "Cae Howell Philip, and the increase or de-"crease thereof, if that be the case at the end, "and at the price or sum of 16*s.* 6*d.* for each "sheep." As Mr. Edwards has been called I want to point out what he did. We had a settled flock of sheep on this farm. I have no doubt your Lordship and many members of the Commission will understand what a settled flock means, and the value of it to an incoming tenant. Mr. Edwards said he would sell every one of the sheep, and after considerable negotiation he practically prevented me letting the farm at a fair rent to anyone. He said he would not sell them at 16*s.* 6*d.*, as he was bound to do under the agreement, but he got 30*s.* a head, and I believe 35*s.* a head for some of them, which was very much in excess of the value of the sheep at the time. I consider that that was a very unfair thing not only for the landlord, but for the incoming tenant who had to pay for them. But even then the incoming tenant, as a matter of fact, notwithstanding all the difficulties, paid an enhanced rent on the amount of rent paid by Mr. Edwards, and now is paying an even still bigger rent. I do not know if I have rebutted all the evidence given, but if there are any questions put on the subject I shall be pleased to answer them.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,127. There is one thing I want to ask you. He said he made a claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act, and that there had been obstruction in the way of the negotiations being proceeded with?—That is absolutely untrue. I can produce the correspondence between myself and Mr. Morgan the solicitor who acted for Mr. Edwards.

53,128. I ought to say I do not think he asserted it was your doing—that you had obstructed—but I understood him to say that both sides had appointed their arbitrators, and that there the matter stood still. I do not think he accused you of having obstructed the arbitration?—I do not understand that.

Lord Kenyon.

53,129. He said you objected to his arbitrator?—That I say is absolutely untrue. On the contrary, what happened was this. We appointed arbitrators, these arbitrators agreed upon an umpire, namely, Mr. James Hamer, Penybont.

53,130. They did agree upon the umpire?—Yes, they agreed upon the umpire, and I agreed. When Mr. Edwards' arbitrator informed him the umpire they had both chosen was Mr. Hamer, Mr. Edwards then objected, so that the matter fell through for some time. Then, subsequently, a gentleman whom I had appointed as arbitrator came to me and said Mr. Edwards's arbitrator, Mr. Griffiths, will agree to Mr. Edward Thomas, of Llanfadog, as being the umpire, have you any objection, I said, "No, certainly "not; if Mr. Edwards agrees to Mr. Thomas "being the umpire, I am willing." From that day to this I cannot get on. I have written to Mr. Edwards' solicitor three or four times. I do not want to issue a writ, although I have threatened to do so over and over again for the rent outstanding, but I have said we must have the matter disposed of one way or the other. I want the rent, and I want this claim disposed of, but I emphatically deny that there is any blame or any delay on the part of myself, on the part of my clients, or on the part of the arbitrator who has been appointed by the trustees of the Dderw estate.

53,131. You emphatically deny that you objected to any arbitrator appointed by him?—Certainly, deliberately, I say, I agreed to the umpire named by him. Although named and agreed to by the two arbitrators I acquiesced. Then, when he named his own man, I said,

Lord Kenyon—continued.

"Very well, I agree to that," and still the matter has not proceeded further.

53,132. You did inform Mr. Edwards of the reason why the notice to quit was served?—Yes.

53,133. You are certain he knew?—Yes. There is not a shadow of doubt about it. So far from political opinion having any influence on my client, I should like to inform the Commission that, as a matter of fact, no inquiry was ever made by the landlord, and the greater proportion of them are Nonconformists and Liberals—by far the greater proportion.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,134. Did you ever have any conversation with him before the notice to quit was given?—With Mr. Edwards?

53,135. Yes?—I believe I did.

53,136. What was the result of the conversation?—At the time Mr. Edwards was very obstinate, so far as I can understand, and refused to give any possible explanation or apology to Mr. Freeman. The main thing was my interview with Mr. Jarman, who was the son-in-law. I said to Mr. Jarman: "It is "a very disagreeable thing for everybody, and "we do not want to disturb Mr. Edwards, who "has been in possession for such a long period, "can you not go and do something and "make some explanation and satisfy him"?

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Mr. Edwards wrote to me afterwards to say this—this is a letter I think I have not read, but it is dated "New House, Wednesday," and I marked in pencil the date when I received it, the 17th of September 1890: "Dear Sir,—I "heard that Mr. Jarman called upon you last "night, and asked you for New House farm. "It was without my knowledge. I had no in-"tention of asking for the place myself. Why "I write this morning is, I want you to lose no "time about the sheep. I thought Mr. Jarman "seeing you would cause delay." That, as I have before explained, must show that Mr. Edwards was getting a most extortionate price for these sheep, because it was necessary for the incoming tenant to have a settled flock instead of buying sheep in the market and settling them. There is his own letter.

53,137. Do you put in that agreement?—Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,138. Have you, in the course of your experience, had any shooting tenants besides Mr. Freeman?—Never. The mansion had never been let before, and it was only let then for a short period of four or five years. It has never been let before, and I do not suppose it will ever be let again. Mrs. Prickard was in very bad health, and lived at Torquay, and could not occupy the place personally.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN EDWARDS re-called and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,139. You have heard the evidence of the last witness?—Yes.

53,140. First of all, have you heard him say that you did know the reason for the notice to quit?—Yes, he said so, but he never told me. He refused to tell me.

53,141. You told me you did not know it?—I did not know it.

53,142. Do you still persist in saying you did not know?—I did know not it, indeed.

53,143. You heard him say that he did not refuse to accept any umpire suggested by your arbitrator?—He did several.

53,144. He says he did not?—He did do it.

53,145. Can you mention any he objected to?—Jones of Llwynpiod was one, Jones of Vrondorthy another, and Griffiths of Doliago another—three of them.

53,146. Were they arbitrators appointed by you, or were they umpires appointed by the arbitrators?—They were appointed by me.

53,147. You say he objected to those three gentlemen whose names you have given?—Yes.

53,148. With regard to the sheep, did you sell your sheep at a higher rate than that named in the agreement?—Oh, yes, that agreement was no good for it. I never saw the agreement until now. I did not hear a word of it.

53,149. Is this your signature? (Handing an agreement)?—Well, very likely that is.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

How could he bring it up when I offered the sheep to him and wrote to him.

53,150. Is that your signature?—Well, it may be.

53,151. Is it your signature, or is it not?—Well, I think it is.

53,152. Had you any copy of that?—No, I had not.

53,153. Did you know what you were signing when you signed it?—I dare say then, but it is many years ago now.

53,154. The agreement is that you are to sell the sheep at a certain price?—Yes.

53,155. According to the last witness's evidence you sold your sheep at an enhanced price?—I did not get the price he says; it was only for a few of them. He refused to come and buy the sheep, and I was obliged to take them all off down to Shropshire.

53,156. At the price you had given for them?—He did not come to offer anything for them. We had to remove the sheep down yonder.

53,157. The agreement is that the sheep should be offered at 16*s.* 6*d.*?—He never came near for the sheep. He promised me he would in September, but he never did come there, and we had to wait till the night of the 25th, and then to move them. We were bound to move them then.

53,158. Did you offer the sheep to him then?—Yes.

53,159. At what price?—It did not come to a settled price.

53,160. Do you mean to say he refused to take them at any price?—He refused to come near them at all.

53,161. How do you mean he did not come near. Did he refuse to buy?—He did not come near or send anyone.

53,162. You must know it was a great advantage for the farm that the sheep should be left on the farm?—Why did not he or somebody come and take the sheep.

53,163. What was going to be the result, and what did he want you to do?—He did not come near at all until the sheep were removed.

53,164. Did he send anyone?—No, he did not send anyone.

53,165. You deny that he told you the reason for the notice to quit?—Yes, I do.

53,166. Do you deny that you gave annoyance to Mr. Freeman, the tenant?—We may have had a couple of sharp words; Freeman quarrelled with almost everybody who met him.

53,167. Did your son have words with him?—I cannot tell you, but my son one half of his time was in America, he was a year and a half in America, and Mr. Freeman was shooting here every day.

53,168. When he came back perhaps he brought some American ideas with him?—I do not know indeed, but he was a year and a half there at the time they say he was shooting.

53,169. Did you not know that Mr. Freeman had complained to the agent about you?—No, I did not know indeed.

53,170. Do you mean to say you had no idea in your head why you had notice to quit?—No, I did ask them, and wrote to them all about it. Mrs. Prickard told me to go to Mr. Wood.

53,171. Do you remember his coming to you to try and settle this matter?—No, he never did come to me, I am quite sure.

53,172. He saw your son-in-law?—No, Mr. Jarman is not my son-in-law.

53,173. What relation is he?—My son married his sister.

53,174. I have some questions from Mr. Wood: "Did you write the letter of the 7th of February "1891, and is that the letter" (handing a letter)?—No, I did not write it.

53,175. Is it your son's letter?—It might be, indeed. I am not sure.

53,176. Do you know your son's writing?—It is not like he writes now, but it may be. I do not know, indeed.

53,177. People's writing does not change very much in three years?—No, it does not.

53,178. Do you repudiate the letter or not. I should like to know one way or the other?—It is not my own.

53,179. Is it your son's?—It might be.

53,180. Can you not give me a nearer answer than that?—No, I cannot be sure, indeed.

53,181. "What price did you get for the sheep"?—Indeed, I forget; we did not sell half of them, or a quarter of them for that; they would not buy them; 28*s.*, I think it was, for one lot, and I do not know whether we had some more for another lot.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,182. "Did you see Mr. Hughes, who served "the notice to quit"?—Yes. See 52,203.

53,183. Is Mr. Hughes, Mr. Wood's clerk?—Yes.

53,184. You have no knowledge of this letter: "Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of "the 6th, I beg to inform you that I shall not "be able, under any circumstances, to delay "ploughing later than Friday next, the 13th "The approximate number of sheep is 1,050 "(more or less), and the terms on which the "trustees may purchase them remain the same "as stated in my last letter. I must decline "your suggestion to have them valued. I have "a perfect right to dispose of them as I think "proper, and it is not unlikely that if I accept "offers from other parties, some of the sheep "will not be removed off the land." Have you any recollection of the contents of that letter?—Very likely that was so, but he never did come and try to buy them of me.

53,185. You say you have a perfect right to dispose of them as you think proper, but according to your agreement you had not?—I do not know. Why did they not come to buy them. Why did they not come and take to them?

53,186. It was your business to offer the sheep to them?—I did say that to them many times.

53,187. You say, "I must decline your sug-"gestion to have them valued"?—Yes.

53,188. If they made a suggestion to have them valued, they did approach you?—Why did they not come on?

53,189. You declined the suggestion?—No, I did not myself at all.

53,190. You repudiated the letter?—Yes, we waited until the night of the 25th before we moved them off. We were expecting someone from them all the while that they did not come.

53,191. "Is that your letter, or is it your son's" (handing a letter)?—I think it is the handwriting of a daughter of mine.

53,192. Does your daughter sometimes write your letters for you?—Yes, she did sometimes.

53,193. "Dear Sir,—I hear that Mr. Jarman "called upon you last night, and asked you for "New House Farm. It was without my know-"ledge. I had no intention of asking for the "place myself"?—I had taken the other place then.

53,194. "Why I write this morning is, I want "you to lose no time about the sheep. I thought "Mr. Jarman's seeing you might cause delay." There, again, you draw attention to the sheep?—Yes.

53,195. Your contention is that they made no approach to you about the sheep?—They did not, or I would never have taken them off if they had.

53,196. What offer did you make at all to them?—They did not come to me at all.

53,197. You made no offer of any price at all?—We should have made a bargain about the 25th, sure to, but they did not come.

53,198. Did you receive this letter: "The "terms on which the trustees will purchase "them remain the same as in my last letter." Did you receive a letter of the 15th of December 1890, of which this is a copy.—"Dear Sir, I "shall be very much obliged if you will kindly "reply to my last letter, and let me know the "price you ask for the flock of sheep. Time is "getting on, and as you say you do not want "the farm I must shortly be making arrange-"ments with a new tenant." Have you any recollection of that letter?—I do not recollect it a bit.

53,199. This is a copy of a letter which Mr. Wood says he sent to you?—I never recollect a word of it. He never made an offer for the sheep.

53,200. Do you recollect receiving the original letter, of which this is a copy, dated the 28th of January, 1891.—"Dear Sir, I have your letter "and if you will let me know what claim you "make in lieu of ploughing, I will submit the "same to my clients, and obtain their instruc-"tions, I shall also be glad if you will let me "know whether you are now prepared to sell "the flock of sheep to the trustees on the "25th of March next, and, if so, please give me "the approximate number of the flock, and the "price per head you ask for the same. Yours "faithfully, Edward Wood." Have you any recollection of that letter?—Indeed, I do not recollect now.

53,201. If you have received those letters some of the statements you have made are not quite accurate?—But I have not, indeed. He never offered to buy the sheep at all. We have tried them up and down.

53,202. If you received those two letters you received two applications from him for the price of the sheep. You do not recollect them?—No, indeed I do not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD HUGHES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,203. Are you a clerk at Mr. Wood's?—Yes.

53,204. Did you serve the notice to quit on Mr. John Edwards?—I did.

53,205. Did you make any statement to Mr. John Edwards at that time?—I told Mr. John Edwards that the better plan for his son would be to write a letter to Mr. Freeman to apologise, and there would be an end of it, and that Mr. Wood and the trustees of the Dderw estate did not wish he should leave, and Mr. Wood would do his endeavours for him.

53,206. Did you explain to Mr. Edwards why it was he received a notice to quit?—I did, my lord.

53,207. Can you remember the words you used?—I believe it was respecting his son John, who had been out at the same time as Mr. Freeman at the New House, and I suppose he was rather impertinent to Mr. Freeman, and that then Mr. Freeman wrote to the trustees and made complaint.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,208. I want to know what you said to Mr. Edwards?—I told Mr. Edwards that he did not intend he should leave, but that the notice was to him that his son should write to Mr. Freeman and apoligise, and there would be an end of the matter.

53,209. Did you explain to Mr. Edwards what it was that his son was to apoligise for?—Yes, for being out there shooting on the land. Mr. Edwards knew very well of it.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Llandrindod.

SIXTY-SECOND DAY.

The Assembly Rooms, Llandrindod, Radnorshire, Friday, 11th May 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON IN THE CHAIR.

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.
Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. THOMAS LEWIS VAUGHAN called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,210. Do you reside at Maesgwyn, Disserth?—Yes.

53,211. Are you a farmer, and a guardian of the poor for Disserth and Trecoed?—Yes.

53,212. I believe you have prepared a statement?—Yes.

53,213. Will you kindly read it?—I give evidence for the district comprising the parishes of Disserth and Trecoed, Bettws Disserth and Llansantffraid. I am in the manor of Lower Elvel. My holding is about 300 acres, and the soil is chiefly of wet clay.

Occupation.—(1.) The usual date of entry is 25th March. Farms are chiefly held from year to year. There is not much demand for leases. Farming operations are too uncertain, and farmers do not like to bind themselves to a term of years on a farm which may not pay.

(2.) Conditions of tenancy. Yearly tenancy under an agreement. Landlord repairs buildings, tenant repairs gates and fences. Twelve months notice to quit. No oppressive clauses that I know of in agreements. I think the tenants are usually supplied with copy of agreement.

(3.) The rent is mostly fixed at a gross sum. The rent of the smaller tenantry is higher generally than that of the larger farms. The right of pasturage on common lands is taken into consideration when the rent is fixed. The rent is fixed generally by landlord, and the farm is too often let to the highest bidder. This system does not result in fair rents being fixed, or in all cases the acceptance of the best tenants having sufficient capital. Arbitration is not resorted to in this neighbourhood as a means of settling rents. Rent is usually paid three months after it becomes due.

(4.) Tithes are paid by landlord and repaid him by tenant. The tenant pays chief rent and local rates, and in some cases land tax; income tax is paid by tenant and allowed by landlord.

(5.) The average size of farms is from 100 to 200 acres. Holdings have been consolidated, being chiefly upland farms. My present farm is composed of three former holdings. One object of this putting farms together would be the saving of expense in buildings, and also letting the land run into grass, therefore, saving the expense of cultivation. The consequences have been driving the population off the land to the injury of its cultivation. There are many small farmhouses and cottages which have been allowed to fall into dilapidation and ruins in my district, once occupied and cultivated. I think a small farmer as a rule will raise more produce in proportion to the larger one.

Cultivation.—(1.) There is a scarcity of labour, and the fences, ditches, and water-courses are not properly looked after generally. There is a good deal of land insufficiently cultivated. Labour and rents are too high to allow the tenant to properly cultivate his land. Arable land has been laid down in pasture, and there has been an increase of root crops within my own recollection. The pasture land was laid down when it paid better to rear stock than grow corn. The expenses of labour in growing corn at its low price were found too heavy: one effect was to drive the people off the land.

(2.) Landlords put up buildings for produce and stock when required, in some cases charging from 3 to 5 per cent. on the value of the improvements. It is generally considered that the Agricultural Holdings Acts are unworkable as far as any benefit can be got by the tenant under them.

(3.) Game preserving: game and hares are in some instances, preserved by landlords. The provisions of Ground Game Act are generally availed of. Not much damage is done, as game and rabbits are not plentiful.

(4.) The County Council has provided lectures and classes for butter-making, and lectures on crops and manures. Railway rates are too high, and farmers and dealers take a great deal of their stock by road to save the expense. The farmers are thus seriously damaged by the exorbitant railway charges, and of late these rates have increased.

General Conditions of Farming Population.—(1.) There are a few small freeholders who have inherited their holdings from their ancestors in the parishes. I think the position of freeholders who have bought their property some years ago is worse than that of tenants. In many cases they have to pay a heavy interest on mortgages contracted when land was of higher value, and they are also tied to their lands.

(2.) In small farms the tenant and his family do most of the work. The children assist without wages or remuneration. The parents cannot afford to make provisions for their sons and daughters in marriage or settlement. The children's labour is utilised because the parents cannot afford to take hired labour. It is even difficult for tenants to pay their rent when the labour of the children is given free. There has been a fall of late years in agriculture produce of from 40 to 50 per cent., except for horses, pigs, and butter, while rates have increased.

53,214. Do you say the rates are now from 3*s.* to 4*s.* in the £?—Yes; from 3*s.* to 4*s.*

53,215. Is that in the parishes you mention?—Yes.

53,216. In Disserth and Trecoed?—It may not be quite 3*s.* in Disserth parish; in Llansantffraid it is more; but the rateable value is higher than it used to be.

53,217. Is it Bettws Disserth?—Yes.

53,218. What has been the reason of the higher rates?—In Llansantffraid parish there is a school board, and that causes the increase there, I believe.

53,219. We had an instance yesterday in which the rates had gone down very much during the last 10 years?—Then I should say the rateable value is higher.

53,220. You say tenants do not want leases as they do not want to be bound to a farm for a term of years. Then I take it you do not want security of tenure?—Yes, we want security of tenure; but under the present conditions we do not want leases.

53,221. What security of tenure do you wish. Is it not to be disturbed, but to be able to go whenever you wish?—We want the farmer to be able to lay out his money, and to be sure of getting it back again in some way or other.

53,222. You want security of compensation for your improvements?—Yes.

53,223. You want to be sure that all the money you put into your farm should come back to you?—That is what we want, of course.

53,224. Do you want anything more than that?—Nothing beyond what I have stated.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,225. I want to know what is in your mind as to security of tenure. There seems to me to be something more in your mind that you desire to express, beyond security for compensation?—I notice in our parishes the tenants are very slow to make improvements for fear that they will never get the worth of it back again. If they were certain to get it back they would invest more capital. They do not care to have leases because there is an uncertainty about it.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

53,226. I understand your feeling with regard to security for compensation I think; but do you go any further than that?—I cannot say.

Lord Kenyon.

53,227. You have said you do not wish to be bound to the farm in bad times?—No one cares to be bound to a farm by a lease for a term of years.

53,228. What is your rent?—My rent is 10*s.* an acre.

53,229. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Thomas Moore.

53,230. You have nothing to complain of in your agreement. Have you a copy of it?—No, I have not.

53,231. Do you possess a copy of it?—No, I do not. I believe they are usually given, but I do not happen to have a copy.

53,232. You have signed one?—Yes, I have signed one.

53,233. You say that farms are too often let to the highest bidder. Have you any instance of that?—I do not recollect any case in point, but I believe it has been the case in my parishes.

53,234. You mean to say tenants go and outbid each other when they want farms?—Yes that is often done.

53,235. Do you think the landlord always takes the one who offers the most rent?—I do not say he always does that, but he does not always take the most suitable tenant; the one with the most capital.

53,236. I suppose you would allow the landlord to take the one he thinks would make the best of his land?—Undoubtedly, but as I say one tenant offers more than another, and there is a strong competition for land in our parishes.

53,237. Is there much frequency of change in tenancy?—Not very much.

53,238. Do the farms about you usually go in the families?—Yes, as a rule, I think.

53,239. Do you think that religion or difference of language makes any trouble between landlord and tenant in your district?—No, I believe not, not any known difference.

53,240. You say your farm is composed of what were three holdings. Are there any buildings left?—Yes, in one of them.

53,241. Is it used as a labourer's cottage?—Yes, as a cottage.

53,242. Did you take them all as one holding?—Yes.

53,243. Do you know any case of the landlords charging interest on buildings?—For draining; I cannot say buildings.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,244. You say the landlords put buildings for produce and stock where required, in some cases charging from 3 to 5 per cent. for the value of the improvement. That would be on draining? — Draining I meant there particularly.

53,245. Are you acquainted with the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not very much.

53,246. You would not like to offer any criticism upon it?—No, only I believe it is practically a dead letter in our district.

53,247. Do you think it could be made a useful Act?—I cannot say. I have no opinion to offer on that.

53,248. You have something in your statement about the custom of the country. Will you let us know what it is?—Tenants repair fences and gates, they do irrigation; timber for repairs is generally found by the landlord, and the manures and seeds generally provided by the landlord. An outgoing tenant is entitled by custom to the outgoing crop of wheat and payment for clover seeds, but to no allowance for tillage, cultivation, or manure or permanent improvements. He has also right to boozy pasture for his stock, that is chiefly for watering and the use of a portion of the buildings up to the 13th of May. It is customary for the incoming tenant to enter on the land to commence operations sometimes before the other tenant leaves. If hay and straw and roots are sold by a tenant they must be consumed on the farm. It is generally considered that the Agricultural Holdings Acts are unworkable as far as any benefit can be got by the tenant under them.

53,249. Is that embodied in your agreement or is that only the custom of the country?—So far as I recollect that is what it is, but I have no copy of the agreement although I have signed it.

53,250. As far as you can recollect that is what was put in the agreement?—Yes.

53,251. Has the attendance at the lectures upon butter-making been good?—Fairly good, I think.

53,252. Is there much improvement in the butter?—I cannot say.

53,253. Or the price?—I cannot say.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,254. What has been the cause of the increase in the valuation of your parish. Is it a re-valuation?—The rent?

53,255. No, the increase in the rates. You say the rateable value has increased?—I should say the rents have increased, and the rateable value increases with them from some years ago, a good many years ago.

53,256. Is it based upon the rent?—Yes.

53,257. Although you cannot exactly prove that farms are let to the highest bidder, yet you are of opinion, are you not, that when another tenant comes forward and offers more money for a farm it is an inducement to the landlord to ask for more rent. That is your idea, is it not?—Yes, that is it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

53,258. Then owing to the depression you do not consider the fences and ditches are kept up as they should be?—No, I do not.

53,259. Farmers have not the capital to lay out?—They do not keep sufficient labourers to do the work. They do what is bound to be done and leave the other undone.

53,260. Do they employ inferior labour?—There is great scarcity of labour in the district. It is not easy to get labour of any sort.

53,261. What is the general custom. Do they employ labourers or young men for the year?—Young men for the year is the custom.

53,262. Are they housed on the farm?—Yes.

53,263. Are they as competent as the labourers?—Hardly, in everything; but in certain things quite, perhaps.

53,264. Do many of the best labourers leave the neighbourhood?—Yes.

53,265. For mineral districts?—For mining districts, I believe.

53,266. You say there has been much land laid down to grass. Have the landlords assisted at all in laying it down? Have they given seeds and manures?—Not much, I think.

53,267. Is this land laid down to permanent pasture, and never to be ploughed up again?—Well, it has been left to run into grass in some form to save the labour of ploughing, and there is less corn grown.

53,268. Has grass land improved the price of stock?—I do not think it is sufficiently well manured to do that.

53,269. They thought it would pay well, but now they do not find it does pay?—I think it does not pay for want of better manuring; it has been left to run into grass, and it is poor.

53,270. Land laid down should be manured well, or it will not get on well afterwards?—No; it is poor land, and you cannot keep on grazing it without.

53,271. Do you make butter on your farm?—A little. There is no dairy at all, just one cow.

53,272. Yours is chiefly corn?—Grass land.

53,273. Have you any mountain land?—Yes.

53,274. What acreage?—I cannot say the extent: I keep 300 sheep.

53,275. What is the extent of the rest?—300 acres.

53,276. Is the farm 300 acres without the mountain land?—Yes.

53,277. Do you consider those who have purchased their farms of late are worse off than the tenant-farmers?—Those who did so 15 or 20 years ago.

53,278. What interest do they who have mortgaged their farms pay generally?—I believe about 4 per cent.

53,279. Do you consider that they pay more interest than they did formerly in rent?—I think they pay more interest than it had been rented at before.

53,280. Then they have no abatements the same as some of the farmers get?—No, they are tied to their land.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

53,281. Do you have any abatement from your landlord?—Yes.

53,282. What does he give you?—10 per cent.

53,283. How long has that been given?—The last two years, I think.

53,284. Do you think that is sufficient to meet the present depression?—No, I do not think so.

53,285. How much would you consider yourself, the last three years, would have been sufficient?—It is hard to say how much, things have gone back so much.

53,286. How long have you farmed?—At the one place we were five years, and we farmed in the same parish before 15 years—another farm.

53,287. With regard to the children's labour, are children employed on the farm at a very early age?—Yes.

53,288. Do the farmers' children attend school as regularly as the labourers' children?—Fairly regularly, but not quite up to the mark in that respect. They are kept at home to do the work at times.

53,289. Do they work night and morning as well?—Yes, a good deal.

53,290. They have not the same chance of preparing their lessons, have they?—I should say not the same chance as a workman's child.

53,291. Do you keep much poultry on your farm?—Not much.

53,292. There is not much kept in the neighbourhood?—Yes, there is in many other places.

53,293. Is it pretty good poultry?—Fair, not excellent, I think. There is a good deal of trade done in poultry in the parish to supply the town.

53,294. In Llandrindod the supply of poultry and eggs should be attended to most carefully?—No doubt.

53,295. Have you any remedy with regard to the grievances you have mentioned?—Rents must come down is the only thing I can see.

53,296. You think you cannot hold on many years at this rate unless rents come down?—I believe so; that is the case with a good many.

53,297. Supposing a landlord does not reduce the rent, what means do you suggest?—I have no formed opinion on that matter. I say that rents should come down a great deal to what they are now, or tenants cannot go on. In what way, I do not suggest. I do not know how it is to be brought about.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,298. You say, with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, that it is unworkable. Do you know of any case where claims have been made under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I cannot say that I do.

53,299. Is it a fact that the Agricultural Holdings Act has got into bad repute owing to the cost of putting it into operation, and also because it is rather an intricate thing to work, and consequently tenants fight shy of it?—I do not think that that is the case so much. I believe that the agreements between landlord and tenant do away with the Agricultural Holdings Act.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

53,300. Is there a compensation clause in the agreements?—I think not.

53,301. If there is not a compensation clause in the agreement it does not do away with the Act?—I do not think farmers have paid much attention to the Act in our district at all. I do not recollect any case to which it has been applied.

53,302. Do you know of any cases where land has been laid down to permanent pasture—that is in a proper way?—No. I do not say so much in a proper way.

53,303. I suppose they have been sowing rotation seed, and allowing the land to tumble into grass?—Yes, that is what I mean.

53,304. You do not know where it has been laid down in a proper manner?—Just a few.

53,305. Has that been done since the passing of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, of late years.

53,306. Have those tenants taken the precaution of obtaining the consent of the landlord before doing it, as it is necessary to do under the Agricultural Holdings Act, because it is really within the first schedule of the Act?—I cannot say about that. There is very little of that sort laid down in the parishes. I think the Act is but little used in my parishes.

53,307. Would you suggest a simpler method of settling claims between landlord and tenant? Mr. Miller, at Brecon, suggested a public arbitrator should be appointed by the Board of Agriculture to settle all claims that might be made by the landlord or tenant as a simple and also a cheap method of settling claims. What do you say to a thing of that sort?—I should say it would answer very well. See 51,521–7.

53,308. Do you think the tenants would avail themselves of such a method of settling claims?—Yes, I should say so.

53,309. Sir John Llewelyn asked you, when you were talking about security of tenure, whether you wanted something more than compensation for improvements made by the tenant on his farm. Do you think that would satisfy tenants?—No, I do not think it would.

53,310. You think that really a tenant should not be disturbed in his holding without some satisfactory reasons?—If he is doing his duty, and managing his farm properly, I believe he should have security of tenure.

53,311. You think legislation should be of such a character as to induce a tenant to remain on a farm rather than to send in a big bill as an outgoing tenant?—Yes, I do.

53,312. Do you think a tenant if he is disturbed, should be entitled to compensation for disturbance, independent of anything he might claim by way of compensation for unexhausted improvements?—Yes, if he has been disturbed.

53,313. Do you keep sheep at your place?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

53,314. Is the farm suitable for sheep?—The hill is suitable for sheep. The farm is not particularly good for sheep. It does for feeding lambs; it is too wet for rearing a stock of sheep.

53,315. What class of sheep do you keep?—Radnor ewes.

53,316. Radnor Forest?—Yes.

53,317. Are you able to keep those sheep on the hill in the winter?—No, that is another part of the business. The sheep for the hill are bought separately—strong hill sheep.

53,318. The hill sheep remain on the mountain all the year round?—Yes, they are bought every year for the hill.

53,319. Are they bought at a valuation, or a fixed price?—They are bought at market price.

53,320. Is the flock bought by the incoming tenant?—I think it is optional to take to them or not.

53,321. The outgoing tenant is not compelled by the agreement to sell the flock to the incoming tenant?—Not on my farm.

53,322. Is it so on the adjoining farms?—No, I think not in our parishes.

53,323. Being a man of some experience, you know that a flock settled on a mountain is more valuable than getting a fresh flock?—Yes, it would be so.

53,324. Does it not create some amount of difficulty if an old tenant sells his flock out?—I think there is no custom to be compelled to do it, but I think it is usually done. It was so when we went to the present farm; we did take to the sheep.

53,325. At a valuation?—Yes.

53,326. Is the valuation as a rule higher than the market price?—No, I should say not. The market price would be the basis of it.

53,327. Sheep already settled on the mountain are more valuable than the market price. What is your opinion?—I should say not much above market price, if anything.

53,328. Have you suffered any loss from fluke in sheep?—Not to any extent since we have been there.

53,329. How long have you been there?—Five years. There was a heavy loss at the same place years before.

53,330. About the year 1879?—About that time.

53,331. Is your land drained?—It has been drained a good many years, but it requires it again.

53,332. If drainage is carried out, on what conditions would it be?—The tenant to pay interest on the outlay, I believe, but it is rather neglected in our parishes.

53,333. You think that really tenants have not the capital to pay the interest on drainage?—In most cases not.

53,334. And that practically they are sacrificing the future for the present?—Yes, I believe so.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,335. You mentioned several payments just now. I do not think you said anything about the land tax. Who pays that, the tenant or the landlord?—I mentioned the land tax. I said the tenant paid it, but it might be allowed in some cases.

53,336. Is it allowed as a rule?—I cannot say; I do not pay land tax myself; it is not generally paid.

53,337. You say that language, politics, and religion make no difference with regard to the selection of tenants by the landlords?—Not any known difference, I should say.

53,338. What do you mean by known difference?—I cannot tell what may be the motives in the relations between each party, but it is not made public.

53,339. I was going to ask you, is there any difference in language in your district between the people?—No, it is chiefly all English.

53,340. Are there any Welsh-speaking tenants there at all?—Just a few of the old people—very few.

53,341. What is your parish?—Disserth and Trecoed.

53,342. In those districts there are some people who still talk Welsh?—Very few.

53,343. Do you hold your farm under an agreement?—Yes.

53,344. Have you got that agreement?—I have not a copy of it. It was an oversight, I believe, at the time of taking the farm.

53,345. Have you ever asked for it?—I have not asked for it since.

53,346. Did you sign it?—Yes.

53,347. Do you know what is in it?—I recollect the main parts of it, but not to say for certain what is in it.

53,348. When was it signed?—About five years ago.

53,349. Was there anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act in it?—Not that I recollect.

53,350. Have you any game in your part?—Very little, nothing to trouble.

53,351. Do most of your neighbours hold under a written agreement?—Yes, I believe nearly all have agreements.

53,352. Do they have copies of them, do you know?—Yes, in most cases.

53,353. Do they know what is in them?—I cannot say how much they study it.

53,354. Does anyone in your district read the Agricultural Holdings Act at all?—In very few instances, I believe.

53,355. They do not study it at all?—No.

53,356. You mentioned that the railway rates are very high. Have they been raised lately?—Within the last twelve months, or a bit more, perhaps, they were raised.

53,357. On what commodities principally?—Agricultural produce; stock.

53,358. Have they reached the maximum allowed by law, do you know?—I cannot say.

53,359. You said that there was no arbitration resorted to for settling rent. Is arbitration resorted to for anything else among you?—No, I do not recollect anything.

53,360. For valuing unexhausted improvements, or anything of that sort?—There might be a case of that sometimes, but very seldom.

53,361. You do not know of any?—Farmers do agree together to make a valuation for their neighbours in some cases.

53,362. A valuation of what?—A valuation of stock between the ingoing tenant and the outgoing tenant.

53,363. Incoming and outgoing?—Yes.

53,364. The landlord does not interfere?—It may be one member of a family to another.

53,365. Then they usually succeed one another. The son succeeds his father?—That is the case sometimes.

53,366. Supposing the farmer has three or four sons, what becomes of the other sons, as a rule?—Well, they have to go away elsewhere to some other occupation.

53,367. What becomes of them. What other occupations do they usually take to?—Many go away to the mining districts. I think many of them would like to stop on the land, but they have not got sufficient means to do so.

53,368. They could not all have farms without disturbing others, so that they have to go to other occupations?—Yes.

53,369. Do they receive sufficient education to help them in that respect. What sort of schools have you?—Fairly good.

53,370. Is labour dear in your district?—Yes.

53,371. Is there a lack of cottages?—Well, there is a lack of population as well.

53,372. I should not have said there was a lack of cottages in that case, if there is no population requiring cottages?—Not just as it is; but if there were more cottages and more opportunities there would be more population.

53,373. You would have more labourers on the land?—Yes.

53,374. There used to be more?—Yes, there used to be more.

53,375. Why were the cottages allowed to fall vacant and go into ruin?—I think farmers could not afford to pay as high wages as they could get in the mining districts and other districts, and they left the land, and cottages and small farms went down. I know of a good many in my district.

53,376. As it is, you do not have a great many labourers on your farms. You have farm servants, I suppose?—Very few labourers, chiefly farm servants living in the house.

53,377. How much do you pay a good farm servant?—20*l.* to 25*l.* for a man.

53,378. Are there any hiring fairs in this district?—Several in this month.

53,379. Where do you house the men servants. How many have you on your own farm?—We have two labourers.

53,380. How many farm servants have you?—Not any, except a small boy.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

53,381. You talked about freeholders just now. Are many of those freeholders men who have inherited their farms from some distance of time, or are they men who have bought their farms recently?—There are some who have inherited their farms.

53,382. And are they free from encumbrances?—I cannot say how matters stand with them.

53,383. You say the others are not so well off who have bought recently?—Not so very good, I think.

53,384. Are they worse off than tenant farmers?—Yes, I think in most cases it is so.

53,385. Is that the case with those who have inherited their holdings also?—It might be in some cases where there would be a large family, and the land would be mortgaged to pay off the brothers and sisters, but I cannot say much about those matters.

53,386. I think we heard there were in some parts of the country a good many small freeholders of some standing, and that they look down very much on the tenant farmers, even if they farmed three or four times the number of acres that the others held, and they say—"Oh, he is "only a tenant." Have you ever heard that?—I do not think that is so in my district.

53,387. The tenant farmer is properly respected by them in your district?—Yes, I think so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,388. What are the names of your holdings?—Maesgwyn, Bwlch, and Tynllidiard.

53,389. The three together amount to about 300 acres?—That is so.

53,390. Which is the largest of the three?—Maesgwyn.

53,391. How long ago is it since those three have been three separate holdings?—I cannot say to a few years, it is a good while ago.

53,392. I think one of the cottages in those three places in addition to Maesgwyn is in order?—Yes, fairly good order.

53,393. Why is it that the three are let consolidated now. Is consolidation popular?—Yes, it has been so in our parish, I think.

53,394. Is there no jealously of your holding three farms?—Oh, no, I do not think so.

53,395. That partially tends towards the depopulation of the country, does it not?—Yes, I believe it does.

53,396. Do you think that that consolidation would tend towards the insufficient cultivation of the land?—It may or it may not, it depends on the tenant entirely.

53,397. In your own case do you consider that your farm might be better cultivated than it is?—Yes, it might be better cultivated.

53,398. If it was in the hands of one tenant?—It might, and might be done worse.

53,399. I think you have told us there is a strong competition for farms?—Yes, it is so.

53,400. We heard yesterday that complaint was made of a landlord for breaking up a farm that had been consolidated into two. Do you think it would be popular or unpopular in your district if your farm was let as two instead of one?—I think there would be tenants for small farms in greater number than for larger ones. There are people who would like to stay on the land if they could see their way.

53,401. With regard to railway rates you are not very near a railway station, are you?—No, four miles.

53,402. Are you four miles from both the London and North-Western and the Cambrian systems?—Yes.

53,403. You have a choice of two different routes?—Yes.

53,404. You complain that the railway rates have been raised of late?—That would go back a twelve-month or 18 months ago.

53,405. Have you taken any steps towards getting special rates?—I cannot say I have.

53,406. Would it not be an advisable thing if your farmer's club or agricultural association approached the railway companies on that score?—I believe it was done sometime ago. There was a great deal of agitation on the matter when the rates were raised.

53,407. Is it your opinion that if the rates were lowered there would be more trade upon the railways?—Yes. I think the stock is taken by road because of the exorbitant railway rates more than it would be if the rates were lower.

53,408. That is a good argument to go to the railway companies upon. You think there has been no recent action taken by the agricultural associations with regard to the rates?—Not in our parishes.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,409. How do you explain that the land is insufficiently cultivated—in what way?—Not manured enough, and not tilled enough either.

53,410. For what reason?—It has been let go into a sort of grass land to save the expenses of labour.

53,411. Land that has been originally under the plough?—Yes, and it does not produce what it ought now in grass.

53,412. Do you think the land is capable of being made to produce much more than it does at present?—Yes, I do.

53,413. Do tenants as a rule pay attention to keeping the drains on their farms open?—I think the drainage has been neglected in our district.

53,414. I mean that often the drainage has been done thoroughly, and yet the tenants neglect to keep them open, consequently the land runs back to the same state?—Yes, that is so: that has been neglected.

53,415. Has it been caused often by the change of tenants?—I cannot say about that; but it has been neglected on my own farm, I think.

53,416. Not in your time?—No, not in my time; we have opened several.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

53,417. Do you only speak on your behalf, or do you appear here for a body of tenant farmers?—I speak on my own behalf; and I think I represent the feeling of the parishioners.

53,418. Still you have not been asked by them to come forward?—No; I have not.

53,419. Is there any reason why more of them do not come forward the same as you do?—Yes; I should say they do not take enough interest in it.

53,420. Do you know of any instances where children have gone away to the mineral districts, and have been obliged to assist their parents in making up the rent?—I do not know of any instances.

53,421. Do you think it never happens?—I think it does happen.

Lord Kenyon.

53,422. Mr. Vincent wants to know: "How can "you possibly say that land is let to the highest "bidder without being able to name a single "instance?"—Well; it is my opinion of things. I have not any case in point.

53,423. It is merely an expression of opinion?—That is all.

53,424. Mr. H. L. Stephen asks: "Are you "not aware that the rates in your union have "decreased to the extent of 3*d.* to 4*d.* in the "pound in the last five years?"—I think that the rates in the Disserth parish are very similar to what they have been all the time, neither raised nor lowered so far as I can recollect.

53,425. What does the school board rate amount to?—That is in the Llansantffraid parish.

53,426. What does it amount to?—I am not sure how much; I think the rates in that parish would be about 3*s.* 6*d.* on the whole.

53,427. What proportion of that is school board, do you know?—I am not certain about that.

53,428. There is no school board rate in Disserth?—No; it is a national school.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,429. What is the course usually taken by the landlord or the agent to let a farm?—It is put up to let, and the farmers come on of their own accord when they hear of it, and try to get the chance of it, and offer so much, I believe.

53,430. Each tenant?—Yes.

53,431. Is each applicant told to go and walk the farm, and come and make his bid?—Yes; I think that is so in many cases.

53,432. And then the agent of the landlord selects the highest bidder?—I do not say that in every case.

Lord Kenyon

53,433. What was your own case?—There was not much competition for it at the time.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,434. Did you make an offer, or were you told what the rent was?—The price was put, and we made an offer.

53,435. You came to an agreement?—Yes.

53,436. The price was put first?—Yes.

53,437. Before you made your offer?—Yes.

53,438. Did your offer reach the price?—Not at first; but we made an agreement afterwards.

53,439. Did it reach the price afterwards?—Well, both parties came together.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,440. You split the difference?—Not exactly that, perhaps, but both parties met.

53,441. Do you think that is a satisfactory way of settling the rent?—Well; it is about fair. But I say the land is let too high generally.

53,442. Did you think it too high in your own case?—I have found it out to be too high since.

53,443. Times have not improved the last five years, have they?—They have gone the other way.

The witness withdrew.

Lord ORMATHWAITE called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,444. Are you the Lord Lieutenant of this county?—Yes; and chairman of the county council.

53,445. You wish to give evidence with respect to sub-division under the Small Holdings Act?—We appointed a committee to see whether we should adopt the Small Holdings Act. We resolved that it was not necessary. There were only nine applications made to the county council, and one of those was withdrawn; the others are all in course of being satisfied. I may say that three of them are on my own property. Two of those have been already satisfied, the other I am willing to grant, but the tenant demands notice, and it will be given. The chairman of the committee of the county council is here, and ready to give you, perhaps, fuller information than I can on that subject.

53,446. Have you some statement with regard to your own estate that you wish to give us?—I will answer any question you wish. I have property in three parts of the county amounting to 13,500 acres, of which 2,500 is hill land enclosed, and 20 farms have rights of turning out on wastes of manor.

53,447. What do you find to be the effect of enclosing the hill land?—It has been all enclosed long before I came into possession. There have been no new enclosures so far as I know. I think the general effect of the enclosing of hill land has been rather to do away with the disputes which used to occur with regard to the rights of pasture. Another good effect is that where the sheep are pastured over a very large tract it is impossible to prevent them from getting at the bad grasses which produce rot. My own experience (but I differ from a great many practical farmers) is, that the improvement of the land does not compensate for the expenses of the inclosure and cultivation. The land I have myself, which was unenclosed, the great majority of it has not paid for cultivation.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,448. Does it give opportunity to more people to work upon it do you think?—Perhaps, to a certain degree; but the land I have had which was enclosed is so very high, that it has not really paid to cultivate it. It has been merely divided by wire fences. I do not mean to say that there is not a certain quantity that has paid, but the great majority of it has been merely divided by wire fences.

Lord Kenyon.

53,449. With regard to the expenditure on improvements on your estate; can you give any figures with regard to that?—Every improvement that has been carried out since I came into the property in 1881 over the value of 10*l.* has been entered in this book, which you can see [producing book], and countersigned by the tenant and my agent. I have expended since 1881, 24,578*l.* on improvements; that is an average of 2,048*l.* a year on a rental, at present, of 8,830*l.*

53,450. Is that rental an average, or for last year?—Last year 8,830*l.* When I came into possession it was 9,076*l.*

53,451. You have made some permanent reductions?—To that extent. I have not charged any interest on any of this 24,578*l.*

53,452. Does that include any improvements, such as drainage?—Yes. I have done draining, but very little draining; I am satisfied that it does not pay either the landlord or the tenant in Radnorshire. I cannot drain here under 8*l.* an acre, and as the life of a drain cannot be counted at more than 20 years it does not pay—there is so little land that would be improved to the amount of 8*s.* an acre, which would be required to make that pay. I am very sorry for it, because I consider it the basis of all the improvements in this country. It does not pay either the landlord or the tenant. I have done it to a certain degree, but more as a hobby of my own than with the idea of making it pay.

53,453. Have you made any abatements as well as reductions?—Ten per cent. in 1887, 1888, 1892, and 1893.

53,454. Have the tenants been able to get the advantage of such abatements in their rates?—That I cannot tell you, I am not sure, I should think not.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,455. Some assessment committees have allowed abatements to be considered, I think, and some have not. The majority have not so far as it comes within our knowledge?—I think they have not.

53,456. I think you have some experience of England, too. You have property in England?—Yes.

53,457. Do you think the tenure of land in this county differs from your English experience in any way?—No, I think not. I think all the customs of Radnorshire are much nearer to English customs than to Welsh customs. As all the trade is with England, I think we have assimilated ourselves more to English customs.

53,458. I think the majority of your tenants speak English?—Every one. I do not think they understand Welsh.

53,459. Do you think in the county of Radnor they have felt the depression as severely as they have in England or in any part of England?—I do not think they have felt it as severely as those counties where they have depended on the cereals. I should think in Cumberland, where I have property, they have felt it as severely as in Wales, because it is dependent upon the same thing—the store stock. In Radnorshire I think all the farming is subsidiary to the store stock. They breed Hereford cattle and they keep a flying stock of ewes. That is the chief thing. The farmers hardly ever keep a stock of ewes over two years for fear of their rotting; they generally sell the whole stock of sheep at the end of two years.

53,460. Do you think the class of stock may be improved at all?—Certainly, the sheep have improved since I became acquainted with Radnor; they have got larger; the Radnor Forest cross has improved them very much. I am talking of the last 50 years.

53,461. Has that improvement been to any extent diminished in the case of a bad wet season like 1879?—I should not like to answer that question.

53,462. We heard yesterday that there had been a great deal of fluke among the sheep?—They had it very bad in 1877, I think.

53,463. I was wondering whether the class of sheep had been improved above that?—That I could not answer.

53,464. Has anything been done to improve the class of Hereford cattle in the way of bulls?—I think all the farmers in Radnorshire are very particular about their stock. I do not think any fault can be found with them in that way.

53,465. With regard to ponies: that used to be a great trade in Radnorshire?—Now they are bred exclusively for the mines, and it is a very profitable thing. Of course, they live on next to nothing, and are sold off to go to the mines; but as to getting a pony for one's own use it is very difficult indeed.

53,466. I suppose they keep them small?—They are put on land which will feed nothing else, and that results in their being very small.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,467. There is no attempt to produce a pony for the English market?—No, I think not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,468. I think you told us there had been, on your own property, no new inclosures?—None since I went to Parliament in 1865.

53,469. So that you have nothing to do with these inclosures that surround us here at Llandrindod. You know nothing about them?—Some of the land belongs to me in those inclosures.

53,470. That land was inclosed under an Act of Parliament, and we heard something about it from Mr. Stephen Williams yesterday. He told us some witness would be likely to come before us to-day who could tell us more about it?—I do not think I can tell you; it is so long since I had any practical knowledge of it. See 52,390 52,405–9.

53,471. You have an agricultural association in the county, in which you take interest?—Yes.

53,472. We have had on many occasions complaints of the railway companies' charges. I am a director of the Great Western Company myself, and I can speak to this extent, to say that I believe there is considerable sympathy between the railway directors and their traders; that they are open to an arrangement, and they have no desire to injure the great agricultural industry of the country. It might be a good thing, I would suggest, that the county agricultural associations should, on behalf of the agricultural interests, put themselves into communication with the great railway companies?—Well, I have been once or twice.

53,473. Have you not done some good?—With regard to the Great Western, at Kington, they did meet us to a certain extent and reduced the rates. There is no doubt a reduction of rates would be an immense advantage to this country, because it is not only with regard to the stock going, but unfortunately in Radnorshire we have no clay suitable for bricks or tiles. I have had it analysed (Mr. Wyatt' an eminent London architect, did it for me), and it is utterly deficient in silex, which gives durability to all tiles and brickwork. We have to get all our draining tiles and all the bricks from Shropshire, so that any reduction in railway rates would be an enormous advantage to this country.

53,474. Have the county rates increased or diminished since the county council has been in operation?—I think they have a little increased, but then you must remember that there is one thing taken off—the turnpikes. It is difficult to say how far that affects it. The roads are being thrown on the rates, and the turnpike is taken off. I have not gone into it very carefully, but I think there are so many extra subjects thrown on the rates that I should say they have increased, but it would require a longer calculation than I have made yet to say.

53,475. May I see the book that you said you would be good enough to hand in. (The witness handed up book.) It sounds to me as if it would be a very interesting exposition. This is a record of all the permanent improvements above 10*l.* done upon the estate?—Yes.

53,476. And signed by the tenant?—Yes, and the agent.

53,477. Are any of these improvements done by the tenant?—None.

53,478. All done by the landlord?—All done by me.

53,479. May I ask if your example in this respect has been followed by other landlords in the county?—I have not heard of it; but I suppose, fortunately for them, none of them, have had, except myself, the experiences of an Irish landlord.

Professor Rhŷs.

See 52,447. 53,480. We heard yesterday about the system of joint property in sheep—of the landlord letting his sheep with the land, and receiving rent for them. Have you anything of that sort on your estate?—Letting the sheep with the land?

53,481. Yes, the sheep belonging wholly or in part to the landlord?—No, I have nothing of that sort.

53,482. Have you had any lectures on dairying or farming in your district?—We had, and we voted 100*l.* for dairy lectures; but I am sorry to say that the classes did not fill, and we have given it up.

53,483. They were lectures on what?—Dairying.

53,484. You have had no lectures on soils and so on?—No.

53,485. What was the reason, do you think, of the classes not being successful?—I cannot tell you why.

53,486. Were the lectures sufficiently elementary for the people to understand them?—I think a good deal of the objection was owing to the distance that the people had to come. I should think that was one reason.

53,487. But I suppose the same fact of distance would tell against anything like a butter factory?—I should think so. These were, I think, on butter-making chiefly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

See 54,410–8. 53,488. What have the Radnorshire County Council done with the local taxation money. Have they applied it towards the relief of the rates—the drink money as it is called?—We applied for the Intermediate Education Act.

53,489. How many schools are you establishing?—I am not on that committee I am happy to say, and it is now considering that very question.

53,490. Have you prepared a scheme?—Two.

53,491. What was the matter with the first?—That was disallowed, and now there is another one, a fresh one, formulated, and we are disagreeing rather with the Charity Commissioners about that.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

53,492. Have you any farms on hand?—No, not one. I have had three vacant from death this year, and I had a choice of offers for all of them.

53,493. As a rule, you take on the nearest relative to the deceased tenant?—Yes, the son. I always give the option to the son to take it if he wishes.

53,494. Have you had a revision of rents on your estate since you have come into the property?—No.

53,495. Do you know when there was a revision of rents?—You mean a re-valuation.

53,496. Yes, a re-valuation?—I have not had one. I do not know of any.

53,497. How long have the farms been at the present rents, do you know?—I cannot say. Whatever change there has been since I came into the property has been in the way of reduction, not of increase. I gave you the figures, I think, before.

53,498. Yes. Have you had any claims for compensation for damage done by game at all?—No, none.

53,499. Is there a compensation clause in your agreement for damage done by timber-cutting?—I do not know whether there is, but I never have heard anything about it. Here is the agreement if you like to see it (handing agreement).

53,500. You have never had any claim, I suppose, for it?—No, but I have always allowed them compensation. When I have had a fall of timber I have always allowed them something.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,501. Would your Lordship kindly tell us, do you make the same abatements on the English farms as on the Welsh?—Oh, yes. I have made abatements there.

53,502. Do you make the same amount of abatements?—Well, I am guided by circumstances there. Yes, I do not think that I have had to make any larger abatements than 10 per cent. on any property.

53,503. But in England we find that they have been giving greater abatements than in Wales, as a rule?—The English have?

53,504. Yes, on the English farms?—Well, that would depend; I do not think I have.

53,505. Do you consider that 10 per cent. is sufficient to meet the present depression?—The proof, I think, of it is that farms that were vacant this year through death, which were the only ones that were vacant, are let for exactly the same rent over again.

53,506. Quite so, but do you not account for that by land hunger?—I have let them without any difficulty at all.

53,507. Were those applicants that have applied for farms to you already in possession of farms, or were they sons growing up or labourers wanting to take farms?—I think one of them was the son of another farmer. There were only three. I forget the others; but they had been farmers certainly.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

53,508. Were not the ponies you speak of cobs of horses—what we call Welsh cobs, not the mountain ponies?—No; they were the mountain ponies.

53,509. Do the mountain ponies, the small ponies, go into the mines?—They go into the mines.

Lord Kenyon.

53,510. I have some questions to ask you which are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "There "has been no complete re-valuation of your "estate for the last 50 years, has there?"—No.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,511. "Have numerous farms on your estate "been occupied by the same families for several "generations?"—A great many of them.

53,512. "You have never raised the rent to "a sitting tenant, have you?"—No; not once.

Lord Kenyon.

53,513. I do not think we have any more questions to ask you. We are much obliged to you for your evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN DAVIES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,514. Is your farm Wern Hir?—Yes.

53,515. Are you a tenant farmer?—I have been a tenant farmer at Wern Hir for 11 years.

53,516. On whose estate?—On the Doldowlod estate.

53,517. Mrs. Gibson Watt's estate?—Yes. What landlords in this district look for when they have a farm to let is a sober industrious man. I do not know that language, creed, or politics have ever made any difference between landlord and tenant, I and my late father have always held our farms by the year, and have no cause to complain. My father held the same farm under that system for 60 years. The farmers of the uppermost part of Radnorshire mostly occupy their holdings for long periods, and as long as a tenant farms in an honest way his tenancy is fairly secure. I have a copy of my agreement.

53,518. Have you your agreement with you?—Yes (witness handed in agreement). The penalizing clauses are never enforced against a good tenant, but sometimes against an inferior one. I fail to see what use a land court can be, and believe that the old natural law of supply and demand will always regulate the price of land in this country. The buildings and drainage on the Doldowlod estate are kept in first-class condition, which has been done at a very great expense to our late landlord Mr. Gibson Watt. On the estate where my late father occupied his farm, the custom was:—The landlord would give us permission to build all new buildings that were required ourselves, and would allow out of the rent the cost of those buildings—not charging any interest on the outlay. We, on the other hand, would not charge anything for hauling to those buildings. As to draining, the landlord would provide pipes, and we would lay them into the land in a proper manner. Farms in this neighbourhood are mostly let from year to year. Tenants generally farm on the three-course system. Very few notices are given by landlords to their tenants: as a rule, a tenant having taken another farm of better value, gives up his holding. He, perhaps, recommends another tenant for the old holding, who is sometimes accepted by the landlord. The tenantry on the Doldowlod estate are invited by their landlady, through her agent, to come forward and give evidence. Farmers should have compensation for improvements according to the value of those improvements, which would stimulate tenants to spend more money on their holdings. Farmers are seriously handicapped by low prices of farm produce and high price of labour. Labour and taxes have a tendency to go up, and farm produce has been going down.

With regard to reductions; in 1885, I had 20 per cent. reduction; in 1886 I had 20 per cent., and also in 1887, 1888, 1889, and 1890 I had 20 per cent. reduction. In 1891 I had 10 per cent.; in 1892, 20 per cent.; and in 1893 I had a permanent abatement of 10 per cent. and also a 10 per cent. reduction.

53,519. I see in this agreement that "the "landlord agrees to allow the tenant the sum "10*l.* per annum out of the before-mentioned "rent of 200*l.* to be expended on extra manure "or labour, to keep and maintain the farm, "ditches," and so on. Does that abatement you have mentioned include that?—No; my Lord.

53,520. That is another 10*l.* per annum in addition?—Yes.

53,521. Do you think that all the tenants on the Doldowlod estate are on good terms with their landlady?—Certainly, my Lord.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,522. Are you speaking of the Doldowlod estate alone, or is your statement general?—Which do you mean is the general statement.

53,523. You say, "I do not know that language: "creed, or politics, have ever made any difference "between landlord and tenant," to begin with. Do you consider that is the case with regard to the estate you are upon, or others outside?—All the estates that I have been acquainted with from my youth up.

53,524. I see in your evidence you say that tenancy is fairly secure. Does "fairly" mean that it is not perfectly secure?—I meant by that that if there might be wanted a change in a tenancy, to make some farms larger or some smaller, there might be a little alteration in that way.

53,525. There may be occasion for that?—Occasion—when it is absolutely necessary.

53,526. Do you think the custom a good one, to allow the tenant to erect buildings himself at his own cost and to his own liking?—I could not say. When it is done no interest has followed.

53,527. Has it not a tendency to cause the erection of inferior buildings?—Buildings that I have seen, made by practical farmers, as a rule are useful buildings.

53,528. I know of estates where the same thing is done, and it results in very inferior buildings being put up, which have to be renewed in a short time. You say again in your evidence that a tenant when leaving, if he goes into a larger farm, perhaps recommends another tenant for his old holding. Is there any money transaction passing between them?—Not that I am aware of.

53,529. We have seen some transactions where there is a little money laid in the present occupier's hand by the incoming tenant, for allowing him to come into the farm. You do not know of cases of that sort?—I do not.

53,530. Your landlady has invited the tenants to come forward. In what way—by circular or how?—By a public meeting at a public rent audit, and she made an announcement that anybody who chose to come forward might do so.

53,531. Have you an agent on the estate?—Yes.

53,532. Then he made an announcement at the rent audit that he would be pleased to see the tenants coming forward?—Yes.

53,533. Do you know of any instances where tenants, when leaving, have asked for compensation on permanent improvements that they have made on their farms?—I cannot say that.

53,534. Nor for general improvements?—I am not aware of it.

53,535. Do you think that a tenant should be paid for all his improvements?—Yes, I do.

53,536. But is it not the case that tenants often have to leave without being paid for those improvements?—In some cases there are not much improvements.

53,537. Yes, but in the majority of cases tenants as a rule would improve their farms. It pays them better to farm well than to farm badly, that is, in good times?—But not of late years.

53,538. No. The times have been so bad, I suppose, of late, that they cannot lay out the money that is necessary for improvements?—Yes.

53,539. I see you mention that the prices of produce at present are very low?—Yes.

53,540. There has been an increase in the price of labour. How many years have you farmed?—Eleven.

53,541. Has there been much increase in your labour bill during those 11 years?—At that time, 11 years ago, things were pretty good. After then labour went down, but the great difficulty with a farmer is there is a great outlet for labour in the mining districts in this country, which has a tendency to keep the price of labour up.

53,542. They go where they are best paid, of course?—Most certainly. On the other hand, foreign competition is pressing the farmers down. Between the two things it makes it very awkward for a farmer.

53,543. How are the cottages on the estate that you live on?—In good order.

53,544. Do any of the tenants keep cows?—Yes.

53,545. How do they do. Are they any better off than those who have got none?—If they can get a place to work they manage fairly well.

53,546. The cottages are not let to agricultural labourers as a rule?—Yes, there are some let to agricultural labourers.

53,547. And they do very well in that way?—They do very well as long as they can get suitable employment along with it.

53,548. The wife looks after the cows, and the labourer goes to work?—Yes.

53,549. Do you think that it would be a means of inducing labourers to stay on the land if they all had a cow or two?—It is according to the price of wages that a farmer could afford to give them.

53,550. Quite so; but they have not the accommodation, as a rule, in most of the farms for these cottages and cowsheds for the labourer in this neighbourhood, have they?—I know there are several cottages not occupied.

53,551. What kind of cottages are they?—Fair cottages.

53,552. They are not the old-fashioned thatched cottages, are they?—No.

53,553. But have they a little land attached to them?—You cannot let a cottage in an outlying district the same as you can a cottage in a village. The tendency of the age is, so far as my experience goes, that you can easier let a cottage near a village than you can in a rural part of the country.

53,554. Do you know of any cottages in the rural part of the country, where there is a little land attached to them, that are now vacant?—No, I do not know of them now.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,555. You say that you feel pretty secure in your holding?—Yes.

53,556. You think, in order to make the best of a farm, that a tenant should have that sense of security?—Yes.

53,557. Do you think it would be any hardship on the landlords if it were made the law of the land that a tenant should not be disturbed in his holding, that is, provided that he fulfilled the ordinary conditions of tenancy?—So far as my experience goes, that has been carried out.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

53,558. Possibly they are all good landlords in your neighbourhood; but there may be, now and then, a bad one, and laws as a rule are made for bad people, and not for good people?—Well, I could not say. I could not answer you.

53,559. Do you think it would be a hardship?—I could not say. I have not sufficiently studied the matter to give you an answer.

53,560. You are not prepared to express an opinion?—No, I am not.

53,561. You very justly say, I think, that the tenants at present do not make much improvements. That is so?—Yes.

53,562. Supposing we got a return of prosperous times, and tenants carried out improvements, would you consider it right that a landlord should raise the rent on a tenant's improvements?—No, I do not think he should.

53,563. You think that a tenant should be protected against an advance of rent on his own improvements?—Yes, I should think so.

53,564. How would you obtain that. How would you protect the tenant from an advance of rent on his own improvements?—Well, I could not say, unless it would be by law.

53,565. Yes, by law. Do you think that a law should be made to protect the tenant from advances of rent upon his own improvements?—Well, it seems fair that it should.

53,566. Do you live sufficiently near to Builth and these watering places to bring your produce, your eggs and your butter, to be sold at these places?—Yes.

53,567. So that really it is an advantage to you to live near to these watering places?—Oh, yes.

53,568. It is here, I suppose, where the farmers generally dispose of their produce?—Yes, a great quantity of produce is disposed of.

53,569. Your holdings in consequence are of more value?—Yes, they are.

53,570. How do you do with the produce: do you bring it and sell it yourself now—the beef and the mutton—or do you sell it to the butchers?—We sell it to the butchers.

53,571. Because, I believe, some farmers in the neighbourhood kill and dress their sheep, and cut them up and sell them in joints. That is so, I believe?—I do not think it is general. There may be a few that do it, very near.

53,572. But in some cases the middleman is disposed of?—Yes, he may be in some cases.

53,573. Do you find that the middlemen take a good deal of profit?—It appears they do, a great profit.

53,574. And every effort should be made to dispense with them as far as possible?—Yes, I believe it would be very good.

53,575. Has your farm paid you the last year?—I cannot say it has paid me the last year.

53,576. Did it pay the year before?—Well, it is a matter of bringing the two ends to meet in these times.

53,577. But you think that taking the average of years, your farm is fairly profitable.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Is that so?—That would be according to the price of produce.

53,578. Well, take the price of produce?—If beef settled down at 6*d.* per pound and corn at the price it is now it would become dear.

53,579. I believe you have been farming Wern Hir for 11 years?—Yes.

53,580. Has it paid you during that time?—I think it has, more or less.

53,581. Taking the interest upon your capital, and your own skill and labour, you are satisfied with the margin?—I am not satisfied, of course, but we are living in hopes of better times.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,582. You said that language, religion, and politics made no difference. Is there any difference of language in your district?—Not in Radnorshire.

53,583. Which is your parish?—Llanyre.

53,584. Are there any Welsh-speaking tenants there, do you know?—Very few.

53,585. There are a few?—I cannot say. I am not certain of that. They must be very old people if there are.

53,586. Llanyre is between Llandrindod and Doldowlod, is it not?—Yes.

53,587. So that there is no room for much difficulty about the language, is there?—There is very little difficulty about language.

53,588. I think you suggested just now that the farm had not paid you last year?—Yes.

53,589. Do you know most of the tenants on the estate?—Yes.

53,590. Do you know if any of them were obliged to borrow money to pay the rent last year?—I do not know anything about that.

53,591. You do not know whether any of them would be in the hands of the middleman?—I should think not.

53,592. That is the sort of thing we hear of in England sometimes; the middleman advances money to the farmer, and, as in all such cases, he finds some difficulty in getting out of the middleman's hands. You do not know of anything of that sort in Radnorshire?—I am not aware of anything of the sort.

53,593. Have there been any very large sales of land in these parts in your memory?—There was a sale last summer.

53,594. Of whose estate?—The Bryntirion estate.

53,595. Belonging to Mr. Evans-Williams?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,596. Then, with regard to the buildings that have been done by the tenants, no interest has been charged upon the outlay, but it is allowed out of the rent?—Allowed out of the rent.

53,597. And the rent would be adjusted in accordance with those terms of the letting; the rent would be apportioned in proportion to those terms. I should like you to explain it in your own way?—The cost of the building, whether it be great or small, would be allowed out of the rent. When you went to pay your rent at the audit, perhaps you would have no rent to pay on that audit if you had built a building, and if it was up to the amount of the half-year's rent it would be paid in that way.

53,598. Over how long a period would that adjustment be allowed. How long would a tenant be allowed this use of the buildings without payment?—There never was any difference in the rent.

53,599. I will put it to you in this way: supposing the rent was 100*l.*, and 100*l.* worth of building was done by the tenant, how long would it be before he would wipe off that amount of expenditure?—Instead of the tenant paying his rent to the landlord, he would be allowed on the rent day.

53,600. Would he be allowed it all?—He would be allowed it. He would have no cash to pay on the rent day; if he built the building it would be counted as rent.

53,601. Would it be all allowed off in the first year?—It would all be allowed off in the first year.

53,602. It would not be spread over a series of years?—No, nothing of the sort.

53,603. When the tenant gets no compensation for hauling to the buildings, is that allowed in the rent?—No, the one acts with the other; the landlord agrees: he does not rise the rent, and the tenant does not charge anything for the hauling.

53,604. Would those additions be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of rent?—By an incoming tenant?

53,605. I mean the haulage; would free haulage be taken into consideration in fixing the rent?—The rent would never be altered, you understand; the rent would always remain the same on the estate that I was brought up on. This improvement is with the landlord; it is a mutual affair, and there would be no raising of the rent on the one side, and there would be no payment to the tenant on the other side.

53,606. When you first go into a farm, the amount of rent is fixed between you and the landlord?—Yes.

53,607. You would take into consideration the fact that you would have to do the haulage for drainage, would you not. Is it a perfectly well understood thing that you ought to do the haulage?—That was the practice on the estate that I was brought up on.

53,608. Then do you think that that fact is taken into consideration in the fixing of the rent?—The rent was fixed many years back.

53,609. But I am only speaking of the time that you first went into the tenancy?—On the Doldowlod estate all the buildings and everything were put in first-class condition when I went on the Doldowlod estate.

53,610. Have you done any drainage?—No, nothing of the sort; all buildings and drainage were done on the Doldowlod estate at the expense of the landlord.

53,611. Haulage and all?—I believe that in some instances the haulage is paid for as well. In some buildings, are let by contract, and I am not aware that the tenant has to pay any increase.

53,612. You speak of a long series of abatements of 20 per cent. for eight consecutive years; had you any opportunity of going before the assessment committee and asking for a reduction in your assessment?—I have not had a reduction in my assessment.

53,613. Did you try to get it?—No.

53,614. You told us that in 1893 you had a permanent reduction of 10 per cent.?—Yes.

53,615. And an abatement of 10 per cent.?—Yes.

53,616. Have you asked for a reduction from the assessment committee on account of that 10 per cent. permanent reduction?—I have not done so yet.

Lord Kenyon.

53,617. Was the assessment in your parish arrived at by a valuation?—Yes.

53,618. And it would have no reference to the rent?—No, I should think not.

53,619. What union is it in?—Rhayader Union.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,620. By whom were these farms that you have mentioned sold. Were they bought into a large estate or were they bought by tenant farmers?—They were bought by some tenant farmers, but they were bought chiefly by men who sold a great deal of land to the Birmingham Corporation and consequently had a good deal of money.

53,621. What became of these men that were turned off their farms?—They have not been turned off yet.

53,622. Oh, they have not been turned off?—They have not been turned off or noticed. They have gone on just the same as if no sale had happened.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Campbell, called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,623. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

53,624. Of 1,000 acres?—Yes, as near as may be. It might be a little more or a little less. I cannot say exactly.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,625. You are a churchwarden, guardian and overseer?—Yes.

53,626. You have a statement, I think—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,627. Will you read it?—I am John Campbell of Gwernarglwydd, Llanfihangel Nantmelan, Radnorshire. I am a farmer and churchwarden, guardian, and overseer. I farm 1,000 acres arable and pasture. I hold the land under Mr. Whittaker, of Newcastle Court, on a 21 years' lease. Where land is mortgaged to any great extent, the landlord cannot afford to assist the tenant with any improvements. Penybont Common, a large common of many hundred acres, could be properly cultivated for the benefit of this district. It is now used by sheep and pony men; the adjoining farms have the right of turn out. There is also Llandegly Rhos Common which could also be profitably enclosed and cultivated. I think it is better for the welfare of the tenant that the landlord should be resident. The 25th March is the usual date of entry to the land, and 12th May to the house. They are generally yearly takings. Under the terms of my lease I must not take two white crops in succession or sell straw, hay, or roots to go off the land. There is a penalty for breaking up grass on meadow land, or cutting down wood or saplings without leave. The rent was 250*l.* for the first five years, and 299*l.* 19*s.* 0*d.* for the remainder. It is now reduced to 200*l.*, and I have had 10 per cent reduction besides for the last two years, but it is still too dear. Rent is usually fixed at a gross sum. There is no uniformity of rents. The smaller the farm the dearer it is. Farms vary from 80 to 1,000 acres. Many of the holdings have been consolidated to save the expense of keeping up the houses; they have tumbled down and the population decreased. There is less labour. I spend 20*l.* or 30*l.* a year in manure, and more than the rent in corn and cake. There is land going out of cultivation since the distress. Crops did not pay for cultivation. There is much waste land capable of profitable reclamation. The landlord put up my fences and gates, and I have to keep and leave them in repair. He also put up a new building for me, but as it was it cost over 100*l.*, and I hauled the material, and he never charged one halfpenny of interest. I put up a new barn and thrashing machine at my own expense, and without consent from the landlord, and have done many other improvements. I think the Agricultural Holdings Act is of very little benefit, and I suggest that the tenant should be compensated by the landlord at the expiration of his tenancy for all improvements which are necessary and an advantage to the holding. In 1863 I took a farm under the late Mr. Gibson Watt under a lease for 14 years. I bargained that the lease should be sent to me to peruse and approve before I took possession. I was unable to get it and had to take possession without seeing it. After three months I was asked to sign a lease which was not drawn up in the terms of my arrangement and I declined to sign it. I then had six months' notice to leave, which I did, and I lost over 200*l.* by the transaction. I was afterwards summoned for shooting over the farms and allowing my dog to fetch a dead pheasant I had shot out of a wood. That cost me 2*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, a pretty dear pheasant.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

I think the railway rates are too high. I think that drovers should have a free pass when travelling in charge of cattle. There are a number of peasant proprietors who have inherited their holdings from their ancestors, and several tenants have bought their holdings. They compare favourably with the yearly tenants around them. The larger proportion of labourers live in the farm houses; there are few labourers' cottages. Single men are paid from 18*l.* to 26*l.*, married men in cottage 10*s.* to 15*s.* a week, with perquisites. My men I give 10*s.* a week to, and the cow grass.

53,628. One cow?—One cow. The tenants and their wives work hard on the farms. They are also helped by their children. Farming would not pay unless they did this. Many labourers have gone to the works in recent years. They get better wages. Trade depression first began 10 years ago, and has gradually been getting worse ever since. I think strikes have done a lot of harm. Over abundance of produce has reduced our prices, and I should like to see foreign produce marked. I also suggest a reduction of railway rates; also an improvement in the Agricultural Holdings Act, and the law of distress to be done away with I do not see why the landlord should have any preference over the tenant more than any other creditor.

53,629. You are acquainted with the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have read it. The very fact of my building these houses myself is sufficient. I have never asked the landlord's consent, and I think they are a great improvement to the farm. Therefore I think it is necessary that the Act should be altered in that way—that they ought to be paid for at the end of the lease.

53,630. But why did you not ask the landlord's consent?—Because he was not within reach.

53,631. Not within reach of a letter?—Oh, yes, he might be with a letter. I did ask the landlord to put up some buildings, and he said he would do it sometime.

53,632. It is all very well in your case I daresay, but supposing a man were to put up a lot of buildings that were not suitable for a farm, without the landlord's consent, it would be rather hard on the landlord to have to pay for them?—I should think so. I merely want the law altered so that it shall be for what is suitable.

53,633. I merely want to know what is in your mind with regard to this Act, because we wish to improve it if we can. Do you think that the laying down of permanent pasture might be done without the landlord's consent?—No, I do not think so.

53,634. You think that the consent of the landlord should be asked for that?—I think so.

53,635. With regard to this law of distraint, you are acquainted with the law in Scotland, where there is no law of distraint?—That is the law of hypothec, and it is worse than the law of distress.

53,636. Do they not exact beforehand the rent in Scotland?—They do, and they make you pay two or three rents beforehand. If a man becomes bankrupt, the landlord comes in, and takes all the stock he can get hold of. They make you pay for what is not due, and they make you pay for two or three years beforehand.

53,637. That is not the case in Wales, is it?—No, I do not think it is.

53,638. Do you not think that is owing partly to a landlord having a preferential claim?—I cannot tell whether it is so or not.

53,639. If the landlord had no preferential claim before the others, would he not exact some sort of rent beforehand?—Very likely, and it would be better for the tenant to have to pay the beforehand rent: he would get his rent reduced, because he would get it for less money.

53,640. Would he?—I should say so. He would be a fool if he did not—if he paid for it beforehand without having it for less.

53,641. My point is that if a landlord had not some security he would probably exact the rent in advance?—Well, here is the land; the tenant cannot run away with the land.

53,642. He can do a good deal of damage to the land?—They ought to make a clause in all agreements to put him out if he does not behave himself.

53,643. In the last year of a man's tenancy he can make a farm of very little value?—That is possible.

53,644. Is a good deal of your 1000 acres hill land?—About half, very nearly, I believe.

53,645. Do you find the sheep have improved?—I have improved mine a good deal.

53,646. Have you been troubled with fluke at all?—No, not much.

53,647. With regard to the ponies, do you keep any ponies?—Yes.

53,648. Do you think they are improved or not?—Yes, they are.

53,649. Do you get a better price for them?—Yes.

53,650. Where do you sell them, at Builth fair?—Huntington fair I sell mine mostly, and Penybont.

53,651. What age do you keep them to when you sell them?—They are yearlings mostly.

53,652. What do you get for a yearling?—I have sold them at 10*l.*, and I have sold them at 5*l.*, according to the size, and according to the times and prices.

53,653. They would pay very well at 10*l.*?—They would pay very well at 10*l.* They do not pay much at 5*l.*

53,654. No. I sold one myself this year for 5*l.* You seem to have had trouble with Mr. Gibson Watt. We heard yesterday that he was a great agriculturist. What was it in your lease that you did not like?—He wanted me to be a gamekeeper, and I came from Scotland here to be a farmer.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,655. How do you mean he wanted you to be a gamekeeper?—He wanted me to preserve the game, and my bargain was to have liberty to shoot it whenever I wanted to shoot it myself.

53,656. You told him that before you took the farm?—I did. I put it in writing.

53,657. Why did he allow you to go in under those circumstances; he summoned you for shooting a pheasant?—Yes.

53,658. Were you under an agreement then?—I never signed the agreement.

53,659. You never signed an agreement or lease?—No.

53,660. As to the drovers having a free pass, was not that abused very much when that was the case?—I am not aware that it was. I never did it, and I have been driving many times.

53,661. Do you know other men who have abused it?—Never in my life.

53,662. You said that the allowance to the men is 10*s.* and cow grass, did you not?—Yes, and potato ground, and one ton of coal, and 1*l.* for the lambing season; that is his bargain.

53,663. You let him run his cow with your cows, I suppose?—No, he has a sort of bye-take. The farm was in two at one time, and he is living in the bye-place, and he has the cow going there.

53,664. But does he feed her in winter?—There is a meadow adjoining the cow place, and the hay is stacked there, and he has liberty to take what hay he likes.

53,665. What do you reckon that is worth to him?—I value it at a little over 15*s.* a week. He has a free house.

53,666. Yes, but I mean the cow; what is the cow worth?—I sold his butter for him here last year at 15*d.* to 16*d.* a pound, and sometimes I had 7 lbs. or 8 lbs. a week from him, and he had 3*l.* 10*s.* for a calf, and he has liberty to keep two pigs as well.

53,667. You say that you find labour is hard to get?—Yes.

53,668. Trade depression, you say, began 10 years ago; do you mean by that farming depression?—Yes.

53,669. Some put it earlier, do they not?—Well, it did not come much earlier for me. At that time I sold a 14 years' lease, which I had in Carmarthenshire, and I had 700*l.* for going away.

53,670. Was that under the Act?—No. Seven years before that I sold a lease for 47*l.* a year for seven years.

53,671. Did you sell the remainder of it?—Yes.

53,672. How long had you been there?—Five years.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,673. I suppose, Mr. Campbell, you are not troubled with any game upon Gwernarglwydd?—I am not.

53,674. You have that in your own hands?—No, I have not. The game is let, but I am not troubled with it. I have liberty to shoot hares and rabbits according to the Act, and I take that liberty.

53,675. Is that Act sufficient for your protection?—Yes.

53,676. Have you had any instances brought to your notice, in this county, of religion interfering between landlord and tenant?—No, I have not.

53,677. You are all English-speaking, I think: there are no Welsh?—All in our neighbourhood speak English.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,678. I think you said that the peasant proprietors are better off than the tenant farmers. Did I understand you to say that?—I believe so. In my neighbourhood I know they are.

53,679. Did you distinguish between those who had bought their land recently at very high prices. Have you any such in your neighbourhood?—No, I have not.

53,680. Then they are people who have inherited it for some time?—Yes. Some of them have bought. One of my neighbours bought a small farm last year, and I know that he would have that farm now for less rent than what he has been paying for it.

53,681. He had money to buy it?—I believe so.

53,682. He was not obliged to mortgage it?—No, I do not think so. He had bought it at public auction.

53,683. He is better off than the tenant farmers of the same community?—A good deal, I believe.

53,684. With regard to the preferential claim of the landlord in this country, and as to the right he has of distraining for a year's rent, you do not approve of that?—No, I think not. I think it prevents the tenant from getting credit.

53,685. Have you considered another side of it. It has been suggested that if it were done away with, the landlord would exercise more care in the choice of tenants?—Very likely he would, and I think he would be quite justified in doing so.

53,686. He would be more careful to see that the man he selected was able to pay and was a substantial man?—Exactly.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,687. It is right to say that we have heard different opinions about this preferential claim of the landlord, but one of the officials of the Bankruptcy Court, who gave evidence before us in London, is, on the whole, of your opinion, I think. I have nothing more to ask you.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,688. Is the lease under which you farm now a repairing lease?—No, I do not think it is. The landlord agrees to drain some for me, and he has done it free of expense. He gave me this new building without any bargain for it, after I was there; he saw that it was necessary. Before I took possession of the farm, the tenant who was there before me, I believe, held it for fourteen years for 500*l.* a year, and made more money then than I can do now.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

53,689. If he had bound you to the strict terms of your lease, you would have fared pretty badly would you not?—I do not know about that. He has not been strict with me at all; he has given me liberty to cut trees whenever I wish, for the good of the farm, for fencing and so on.

53,690. He has reduced your rent?—Yes, he has reduced my rent. If he had not reduced the rent I would have been in the union or in the asylum long ago, or somewhere else like that.

53,691. When did you take the farm?—About 10 years ago.

53,692. I suppose there is no desire for leases now, because it is too much of a speculation?—I do not know. I would not take a farm to-morrow without a lease.

53,693. You would not take one without a lease?—No, not from anybody—not even from my father, if he was alive.

53,694. Is it because you would not feel secure in your farm?—Exactly. I would not feel that I could lay out money to please myself, unless I had a lease that I was secure with.

53,695. I take it that that is an argument for security of tenure. You think that really there should be security of tenure, in order to make the best of a farm?—That is my idea of it.

53,696. And that there should be security of tenure without binding yourself to terms the same as you do under this lease?—Yes.

53,697. You say, I believe, with respect to improvements, that the tenant should carry out any improvements he liked, and should be compensated at the termination of the tenancy?—Yes; if it is to the advantage of the holding.

53,698. You would limit it to this extent, that he should be compensated for the improvements according to the value to an incoming tenant?—Exactly.

53,699. So that really you would abolish the first schedule under the Act, and you would have only one schedule?—That is all.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,700. Is your farm something like the generality of farms in the neighbourhood?—Yes; a hill farm.

53,701. Pretty near the same as to equality of rent?—I cannot say for that.

53,702. You say that the rents are very unequal in some places. Do you refer to the same estate, or do you mean upon different estates?—Upon different estates; they are not all alike.

53,703. Then is it a fact that the rent has been reduced, on this farm that you are in, from 500*l.* to 200*l.* a year?—It is.

53,704. And 10 per cent off that?—Yes; and now it is too dear according to the times.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

53,705. Things cannot go on very long at that rate, can they?—Well, I am hoping that they will come better every year, otherwise I would have taken to moonlight flitting long ago.

53,706. How long have you been in this country?—Since 1863—here and there and elsewhere. I was five years in Sussex, and seven years in Carmarthenshire.

53,707. You have seen a little of the world?—Yes; I have been travelling about wherever I could pick up some bread and cheese.

53,708. You do not find it so profitable now as you did in years past?—No; nothing like it. I have to work hard now and get nothing. 1870 and 1871 were the best years I have seen.

53,709. I did not quite follow the answers you gave to our Chairman just now with regard to the cow pasture. Say that you have one labourer now who has not a cow pasture, and another who has a cow pasture?—One is a young man in the house.

53,710. Yes, but what I mean to say is, supposing you had two labourers living with you, one without cow pasture, and one with cow pasture, how much difference a week do you put it at?—I beg your pardon; I have only one married man working for me.

53,711. Quite so; but I wanted to know what the real value of this cow pasture is considered to be with farmers?—That I cannot say. Every man must make his bargain as best he can. I have made a bargain in Carmarthenshire for 9*s.* 6*d.* a week, with a free house and no cow.

53,712. But in Scotland I think they are rather different?—Yes; there were very few, when I was a boy there in Scotland, that had any cows for the labourers.

53,713. I do not think it is the case now in Scotland—the South of Scotland, certainly?—I do not know of any.

53,714. When the railway rates were revised a few years past, did not all of us expect to have things reduced a little?—I should think they ought to be; I think they are very unfair in many cases. The rates want altering a great deal. They charge me now at the present time from Liverpool about 15*s.*, if my memory bears me right, for oil cake, and 16*s.* 6*d.* for rice meal. The oil cake costs me 7*l.*, 8*l.*, and 9*l.*, and the rice meal costs me 3*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, and I think it is very unfair to charge 16*s.* 6*d.* for the rice meal, and 12*s.*, 13*s.*, and 14*s.* for the cake, which is, of all, the dearest.

53,715. You are a very experienced farmer. Do you know of any way of improving the pasture other than by using cake?—I do not know of any better way of doing it than by giving them corn cake on the grass and pastures.

Lord Kenyon.

53,716. Do you use bones at all in this neighbourhood on the grass?—No, I do not.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,717. I did not quite understand whether you thought that a lease was the best sort of security of tenure?—Yes, it is the best for me.

53,718. Do you think, if you get a lease with the terms you want, that it is the best form of security of tenure you could have?—That is my idea.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,719. Have you any complaint to make about the local rates?—I would like to see a wheel and van tax put on to catch these show people that are going about the country. Then it would help to reduce our road rates.

53,720. Have your rates increased?—They have a little.

53,721. I believe in Scotland the rates are divided between the landlord and the tenant, are they not?—I believe they are.

53,722. Do you think it has worked fairer than the way it is arranged in Wales?—That I cannot say.

53,723. You see it is in this way: when you take a farm you take it on the understanding that there are a certain amount of rates?—Exactly.

53,724. And you make an offer of rent accordingly?—Yes.

53,725. Supposing that there is an increase in the rates, those fall on the tenant, do they not?—They do.

53,726. Do you think that they should be divided, the same as they are in Scotland?—I think that when there is an increase in the rates after the tenant has been in possession for a year or two, that the landlord ought to pay that.

53,727. When there is an increased rate?—Yes, when there is an increased rate I think the landlord ought to pay it.

53,728. Do you mean pay it all?—Yes, I think so. I do not think it is fair to the tenant that he should do so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,729. If you think so, would you give the landlord at the same time any increased voting power in voting those rates or refusing them, with regard to the increase or decrease in the taxation?—Yes, I would. I think that the man who has the money to spend ought to have increased power in his votes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,730. Which would you rather give, an increased power to the landlord, or would you propose that the rate should be divided between the landlord and the tenant, and give them equal representation?—That is a question that I would not like to answer, because some landlords would then vote that the tenants should have it all to pay.

Lord Kenyon.

53,731. Who has most to do with the settling of the rates, keeping them down?—Keeping down the rates?

53,732. Whose business is it mostly?—I do not know. I believe it is the magistrates. There is a board meeting held regularly, and they appoint the rates, what is to go to keep up the different payments.

53,733. We will not pursue that any further. Mr. Vincent asks: "Why did you go into Rad-"norshire?"—Just what I have already told you—to get some bread and cheese.

53,734. "Was it not because you thought "Radnorshire offered you better chances than "Scotland?"—No. My father bought a farm here in Radnorshire, and I thought I would go to New Zealand, if you want to get the real history of the case, and he did not wish me to go to New Zealand, and he wished that I should stay here, and Mr. Gibson Watt had sent over to my father to ask him if he had any sons that wanted farms. That is the reason I came into this country.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,735. Mr. Vincent's questions continued. "The law of hypothec is repealed in Scotland now, is it not?"—I believe so, or nearly. There is a great alteration I know.

53,736. "May I take it that you, at any rate, "regard farming as a pure matter of business?" —I have nothing else to depend upon.

53,737. "If that is so, then would not a "thorough law of compensation for improve-"ments meet all your requirements?"—Exactly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Evans called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,738. You have been a tenant farmer?—I have been, to within five years ago.

53,739. Where do you live?—At Gwystre, Nantmel.

53,740. Would you read your statement?—Yes. I have been 24 years a tenant farmer, up to five years ago. Since then I have been farming my own property. My farm is 100 acres. I give evidence for Penybont district. My land is situate in two manors, viz., Iscoed and Swydd Neithon. I think those are the correct names, but I am not positive. I believe it is Swydd Neithon, but I am not sure about the correct pronunciation of it. I am not aware of any courts being held. Where the land is encumbered the landlord cannot assist the tenant, as he should do, nor is there the same security for the tenant; he does not feel so safe. Some of the glebe land is managed very badly. Swyddneithon and Iscoed were inclosed about 20 years ago, I believe by Act of Parliament. Recreation grounds were apportioned. The land is not used for that purpose, but is let by the vicar in most instances. Rhoswydd Common, which is still uninclosed, is well adapted for cultivation, and would grow good corn and other crops if properly drained. The right of sheep, cattle, and pony runs is vested in the adjoining occupiers. I am not aware of any payment. The adjoining farms consequently command a higher rent, and there is very often a bad feeling existing between neighbours owing to disputes arising out of rights of turn-out. In my opinion it has a bad effect on sheep farming; they get put too thick on the common, and it gets overstocked. I think as a rule the large estates are managed the best. Where landlords live on the estate the management is generally better, but it depends a great deal upon the agent. If the tenant differs from his landlord in religion or politics, he is not as well favoured as one who agrees with him in these, in my opinion. I could not bring any evidence to prove this; it is only my own private opinion, but I am bound to express that opinion as I give my evidence here. In many instances the gamekeepers have no special training.

The tenancy of the land on a farm generally commences on the 25th March and of the house on the 12th May. There are very few leases; the taking is generally a yearly one. There is no great demand for leases, the tenants are not sure enough of the future. I have had to give up land required for the purpose of being planted with trees, but no notice was given me. The tenant is seldom compensated for damage done by timber falling. It is usual for tenants to do two days' hauling for the landlord when required. This is often specified in the contract. Rent is usually fixed at a gross sum. There is no uniformity in the rents; they depend a good deal on the landlord or his agent. I believe the rent of the smaller tenantry is higher per acre than of larger farmers. The average rent of the upland farms is about 10*s.* per acre, and of low-land farms from about 15*s.* to 20*s.* Pasturage rights are taken into account when rents are fixed. The landlord gets the benefit of these, not the tenant. Tenants have to contract to give evidence for the landlord in case of prosecution for trespass, to warn off trespassers, and to virtually act as gamekeepers. I have my agreement here to show this. I have two agreements—one for the Doldowlod estate and one for the Llwynbarried estate.

53,741. We have seen the Doldowlod agreement?—Mine would be the same, I suppose. There is one for the Llwynbarried estate; I think they are nearly the same. Rents have been doubled within the last 50 years. For instance my father took a farm about 52 years ago at 70*l.* In 14 years it had risen to 100*l* and in a few years to 130*l.* then to 140*l.* It was then valued, and the rent raised to 150*l.* Then there was a dispute between two would-be tenants, and it was let at 150*l.* The rent is now 150*l.* That is double the former rent of 50 years ago. There have been many temporary abatements of rents on the well-managed estates, and some permanent reductions. These were generally compulsory. The change of rents seldom depends on a revaluation. The rent is paid from two, three, and four months after it becomes due. The preferential claim for rent weakens the tenant's ability to obtain credit. Tithes paid by the landlord are repaid by the tenant. The tenant sometimes pays land tax. I had to pay it on the Llwynbarried estate, but not on the Doldowlod. The tenant pays local rates. Income tax is paid by the tenant and deducted from the rent. Farms run from 30 up to 400 and 600 acres. Many holdings have been consolidated, and chiefly to save expense of keeping up buildings. The consequence is the land does not produce so much as it did in smaller holdings, or keep so much stock, nor are so many labourers employed. I do not think it has affected the rent, but it has reduced the population and the number of inhabited houses. Many of the houses have become uninhabitable, and others are turned into buildings—not very many, but a good few have been. There is at times a scarcity of labour, but at present there is not enough money in farmers' pockets to pay them. The fences, drainage, &c., are not so well attended to as they should be. Some land has gone out of cultivation, and much is insufficiently cultivated for want of means. There is much waste and boggy land capable of being reclaimed. There is less arable land than there used to be, and an increase in root crops. There is less fallow now than there was and more roots. Corn and dairy farming has gone out, and stock farming has taken its place. Grain is grown to keep stock on, but not so much for the market. The landlords fence and drain and put up buildings, on the tenant paying interest on the amount laid out at from 5 to 6½ per cent. The outgoing tenant is allowed one-fifth of tillage land for off-going crop, nothing for tillage and cultivation, but he is for the seeds sown the spring previous to quitting. He has also one field for grazing. Tenants do not often try to get compensation for improvements owing to the difficulty in doing so. The Agricultural Holdings Act is of little use. There is not much game preserving in my district. In many instances many of the tenants do not avail themselves of the Ground Game Act, owing to their being afraid to offend their landlords. Little fruit cultivation or poultry farming is done. There is instruction by the county council in butter making. The high railway rates seriously increase the difficulty of farming, and rates are much too high. It is difficult to get stock to other markets. There are few small freeholders who have inherited—they have decreased. Not many have bought their own holdings lately. I do not think their position has improved much. Tenant farmers and their wives do all the work they can and their children help them without wages in most instances. They cannot afford to employ hired labour; there is a larger proportion of labour by members of the household than by hired servants. There are more labourers living in farmhouses than in cottages. The wages are from 20*l.* to 25*l.* for men, and 12*l.* to 18*l.* for boys. The wages are about three times as high as about 50 years ago. On the whole, cottage accommodation is better. Most cottages have gardens attached, and in many instances small holdings are attached, but the payment is extra. There has been a deal of migration to the works during the last 50 years. The last depression began about nine years ago, increasing about four years ago. Over production and foreign competition are chiefly the causes. The chief remedy is the reduction of rents. I wish to add that I believe it is the increase of brain power—the increase of the work of it rather—that has brought steam to bridge the Atlantic, and made the quick mode of transit that is bringing foreign produce into this country in such quick time and at such a low rate. It has caused the levelling up of prices all over the world that the tenant farmer feels so much, but not with regard to the land. The land has not had its levelling up, but the prices of the produce of the land have been levelled up, and the land has not been levelled accordingly to meet it. What I, as a tenant farmer, do think, is, that the great problem to be solved is how to level the land to improve them, because we have a levelling of prices all over the world, and the land has continued in some instances nearly at its old rent in this country. The tenant has had his burden to bear and he has borne it as long as he can, and I believe the landlord will have to go and do his share. With the aid of machinery, and the bone and sinew of young men having gone out of this country to America, the Colonies, and South Africa, corn is produced much cheaper than we can do it, and is brought here cheap. Then as we have spoken about the rates, we have to keep the casuals, who amount to about 200 in a fortnight in some of our workhouses, and we have to feed them all. As the rent is now, the land cannot be made to pay, with this foreign production, and I believe if the land were lowered to a reasonable rent that there would be more production at home, and more money would stop in the country. That is my opinion as a farmer, my Lord. I have nothing more to say.

Lord Kenyon.

53,742. I suppose you wish Rhoswydd Common to be inclosed?—It is capable of producing corn and crops of every kind. It is fairly good cultivated land.

53,743. You say that its being uninclosed leads to disputes, and that it would be a good thing in your opinion to inclose it?—It would.

53,744. You said with regard to the glebe land, that it is managed very badly?—Some of it.

53,745. What do you mean: is it let, or what?—It is let, of course.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,746. Who manages it badly—the tenant?—The tenants when it is managed badly.

53,747. Why should he manage the glebe land worse than any other?—There are different reasons for it which I cannot explain now.

53,748. I want to get at the bottom of that; I do not see why glebe land should differ from any other land?—A clergyman is the life owner of it; he does not want to spend any more than he can help for his life, and if he does not spend, and does not keep the buildings and so on in repair, the tenant is also the same.

53,749. That would be exactly the same in the case of any tenant for life, would it not?—No, I do not think it would. An owner of property has got an heir to come after him: a clergyman has not.

53,750. There is a point in that?—It differs a good deal.

53,751. Do you not think it is because the glebe land owner is rather a small landowner, and that he has not much capital to fall back upon?—I do not think that at all. I do not think that makes any difference. But some of them manage very well; it is not all that do badly; some of them manage the glebe land very well.

53,752. You say that in the case of these two commons that were inclosed, recreation grounds were apportioned?—Yes.

53,753. You say that the land is not used for that purpose, but is let by the vicar in some instances: you mean by the vicar and churchwardens, I suppose?—Yes; I know different plots of the kind.

53,754. I mean, I suppose you do not suggest that the vicar takes the rent that he gets, for his own pocket?—No, I do not suppose that. I think it is divided as a charity.

53,755. Exactly, applied to the poor, and so on?—Yes, certainly.

53,756. Because, in the way you left it, it might be supposed that the vicar kept it, and I do not suppose you mean that?—No.

53,757. Do you say you have had no notice or compensation given for land taken for planting?—That was a mistake on my part. I believe I had compensation, but when I looked over it after, I found it different in the statement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,758. It was no mistake on your part. You put it perfectly rightly; you did not say you had no compensation?—It was put in, in that way in my statement, and after I looked over it I believed I had. I had one piece of land for the other.

Lord Kenyon.

53,759. You only say that no notice was given?—No notice was given.

53,760. You do not say that you had no compensation?—No.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,761. Then, you say that pasturage rights are taken into account when the rents are fixed, and the landlord gets the benefit and not the tenant?—I think so.

53,762. How is that?—According to my judgment, it is so. If I owned a farm here, and had a right of common here, what would the man who applied for it as a tenant do? He would have nothing to do with that, and the rent would be fixed according to what it would be worth, turn out or not.

53,763. But does not the tenant make use of these pastures?—Certainly. He has to make use of it.

53,764. Would you rather do without them?—Oh, no. I have known a man pretend to buy a pony, to take it out on a common, in order to keep the right. He had to do it to please the landlord.

53,765. Do you mean that the land does not actually belong to the landowner, and he has only got these rights of turning out?—I do not know anything about the rights of property.

53,766. I mean to say, I suppose any man has a right to charge a rent for what belongs to him?—Yes, and when a man has a right to turn out, that adds to the value of the farm.

53,767. It goes with the farm?—Yes, it goes with the farm, and adds to the value of it.

53,768. I only wanted to understand why it should be suggested that the benefit only goes to the landowner?—The man should get it when he pays a higher rent for it.

53,769. He has a right to turn out there?—Yes, he has a right to turn out there, but if he has to pay his landlord for it I do not see that it is of any benefit.

53,770. I suppose he can give it up if he likes?—It is an accompaniment of the farm, like a man's wife.

53,771. Then, you say, that the permanent reductions are generally compulsory. I suppose you mean that the tenant applied for them?—Yes, that is what I have found.

53,772. Well, nobody would reduce their rents unless they were applied to, to reduce them, I suppose?—No, I believe not.

53,773. Do you know of any case in which landlords have charged from 5 to 6 per cent. interest on buildings?—I have paid it on drainage and fencing.

53,774. Yes, drainage and fencing?—Yes.

53,775. Do you know of any case with regard to buildings?—No, I do not know on buildings.

53,776. It would be unusual, I think?—I do not know of it on buildings.

53,777. You correct it to drainage and so on, do you?—Yes, I had to do it; and I took the farm according to it; and the worst of it was, I took the farm to be thoroughly drained, and it was drained by a Government company, and in good faith the landlord and the agent had the drains laid by the Government engineer. He did not understand the land, and it was not half dry, and I paid the rent for the land that ought to have been thoroughly dry, for 20 years. Then at the time when Lord Beaconsfield's Agricultural

Holdings Act was passed, I had to contract myself out of that agreement, to get out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, or leave the farm. That was the fact. Then I could get no compensation for this land being undrained, and the land has been re-drained since I left the farm. The steward is present now to contradict me if I am wrong. But the landlord and agent did it in good faith, and they thought they were doing right, but they were deceived, and so was the engineer; it was not half dry.

53,778. Did they lay the drains too deep?—Yes, too deep; and too far apart—11 yards apart, and 4 feet deep.

53,779. I have heard of places where they have had to cut through the solid rock to lay the drains?—The landlord and the agent were quite honest in their intentions, and the landlord had to suffer worse than me, because he had to re-drain the land; but I had to suffer because I had to sign out of that agreement to get out of Lord Beaconsfield's Agricultural Holdings Act, and so I lost all advantage that I should have had in the way of compensation for that.

53,780. Did you pay as much as 6½ per cent.?—I did; or at least I was told it was that.

53,781. Are you acquainted with the 1883 Agricultural Holdings Act—call it Mr Gladstone's Act if you like?—No; I am not acquainted with that Act.

53,782. Do you think that might be improved?—I could not say anything about that without studying it.

53,783. You have not studied it?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,784. Are not the landlords oftener changed upon glebe lands than they are upon other estates?—I suppose it is so.

Lord Kenyon.

53,785. Vicars do not always remain for life?—No; and sometimes not for 10 years.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,786. Is the rent often advanced on glebe lands?—Oh; I could not tell you anything about the rent. I cannot tell you anything at all about that.

53,787. You say that there are disputes often about this mountain land?—Not very often; but they arise occasionally.

53,788. Is there not a common shepherd. We have heard of a common shepherd being employed?—Not about here.

53,789. Would not that be a better system?—I could not say; but it is not so about here.

53,790. The sheep would not be disturbed so frequently?—Well, it is fairly well; but there is an old saying that one man cannot serve two masters. He will like the one, and hate the other.

53,791. But they would be all in common?—But there are two masters, nevertheless, and you never saw two objects that you could place the same affections on yet—not two women, surely. You shall hire a servant, but with two masters he is sure to like the one more than the other. He may be a conscientious man, and he may do honestly, but it is not so here.

53,792. Are we to understand that, although you cannot prove it, there is really a difference made by politics and religion in regard to the tenants?—Yes. If I was confronted and asked to prove that, it is beyond my power to do so; but, nevertheless, I have a conviction, for I know I have been pointed out as a sinner a good many times about certain things, and indeed I have been told about things, well, scoffed at, in fact.

53,793. Do you know of any loss that has ever arisen to a tenant by the agent not being an experienced man?—No, I do not; but in my experience some of them have been too sharp for me—too much experienced; that is my biggest loss.

53,794. Was that owing to their good training?—I cannot say; yes, I suppose it is.

53,795. Do you say you have never obtained damages for timber hauling?—Well, I have never had anything worth talking about 53,796. Is there much damage done?—Sometimes.

53,797. Is there no agreement made with the timber merchant?—Well, I could not tell you much about that.

53,798. You cannot say whether the tenant has applied for damages for so doing?—No, I know of small cases where damage was done, and where there was none at all; but, as a rule, on a well-managed estate I believe they do get damages, but it is generally a secondary consideration like.

53,799. Your experience with regard to rents is quite the reverse of that of the last witness. We heard from him of rents being reduced from 500*l.* to 200*l.*, but here you mention a case where the rent was raised from 70*l.* to 150*l.*?—Yes, and 160*l.* once, and back to 150*l.* I farmed that farm myself, and I gave it up to have it lowered.

53,800. Was there much money laid out by the landlord during that time in the way of building or draining?—No; there was once, but that was long after the building. It was an understood thing when it was taken that the building was to be put up.

53,801. At the first rent?—Yes.

53,802. The building was not put up 50 years ago, was it?—Well, it was in 1852, the first year of the tenancy however.

53,803. Is money to pay for labour at the present day scarcer than labour itself?—I think so, if I give my opinion. That is why I do not employ any.

53,804. Would you employ more on your farm if you had the means of paying for them?—I have enough with my own family to work it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

53,805. Do you pay them ?—No, or else I do not know how it would be.

53,806. What do you give them for their work then ?—Oh, just food and clothes.

53,807. You are a freeholder, I see. I suppose you will be able to stock and put them out on a farm when they get married and leave you ?—Well, I do not know about that.

53,808. You say the tenants do not avail themselves of the Ground Game Act. Why is that ?—Well, I am under the impression that they do not like to offend their landlords, and there are plenty besides me that think so too.

53,809. They do not wish to offend them ?—No.

53,810. They would rather let the thing go than offend them ?—Quite so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,811. Have you stated why you left the farm where you were a tenant ?—I gave it up to have it lowered in the rent and they would not lower it. Mr. Watt took the farm in his own hands and re-drained it—well washed its face—improved the look of it rather, and let it again, and he would not lower the rent for me.

53,812. What rent were you paying for it ?—I was paying 15*s.* and 16*s.* an acre, I believe, it would be.

53,813 But how much would be the total sum ?—86*l.* 6*s.*, or something like that.

53,814. How long did he keep it on hand ?—Three or four years, I believe.

53,815. When was that ?—About nine or ten years ago, ten, I think.

53,816. What is it let at now ?—I cannot tell you now—I cannot say.

53,817. Did he try to let it after you gave it up ?—No, I do not think he did.

53,818. Then you bought a farm ?—No, I took another one; then, as the times got worse, I gave that up to have it lowered. It was lowered once 10*l.*, and I wanted it lowered another 10*l.* I was out 300*l.* or 400*l.* by it then. I took it in a bad state. It was let at 150*l.* when I left it, and I was paying 140*l.* That is why I left that one. Then I had some small bit of land of my own, and my father allowed me a bit and something, and so I went to vegetate upon that.

53,819. Then you bought a farm ?—No, I had some of my own, and my father had some small place adjoining. I had that on my hands then, but I left that last farm because they would not lower the rent

53,820. And if you had not some private resources you could not have paid for this place ?—No, certainly not. I had the farm in a very bad state, and I laid a good bit of money out on it.

53,821. How do you think farmers manage who have not capital to fall back upon then ?—I do not know; it must be bad; but now I believe that farm is worth 20*l.* a year less than when I left it, and that is only 6 years, I think, this May. I believe in my estimation it will be worth 20*l.* a year less in the 16 years.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

53,822. What amount is the tenant paying for it ?—150*l.*; I paid 140*l.*

53,823. Is there anything beside the state of the buildings on glebe land which prevents the land being properly cultivated. Is the rent of glebe land higher, as a rule, than that of other land ?—No, I do not think it is; not that I am aware of; as far as I can tell, I do not know that it is; I could not say very much about it.

53,824. But you find that farmers on glebe land are more reluctant to lay money out on the farm ?—I am under that impression, but I cannot say positively.

53,825. Do you think the agents, as a rule, are practical men; men who are acquainted with the value of land ?—They may be acquainted with the value of some land, but they have got to get their experience like everyone else. An agent coming from another neighbourhood cannot tell exactly the land in this one.

53,826. They have to get it second-hand ?—They have got to get it by experience. He may be a very good judge of land in his own neighbourhood, and know how to manage it every way, but when he goes to another place he does not understand it. The land requires different management.

53,827. Do you think that a landlord ought to have an agent in every parish ?—Oh, no, I do not think that at all; nothing of the kind, but what I mean is this—there may be some hardship arising to some of the tenants before the agent has acquired his experience. Of course he would not be long, but there may be some hardship to some of the tenants. When a farm may be to let, if he did not thoroughly understand the nature of that farm, he would not know how to treat with a tenant.

53,828. Do you think that an agent, who is a lawyer, is ever likely to gain experience of land ?—I cannot say. Lawyers know everything, too.

53,829. But do you think that a lawyer is a desirable man as an agent, generally speaking ?—Well, I have heard it said that he is a very good landlord, but a very bad agent. I do not know about that. There is a good deal in the temperament of the man, I think.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,830. Where is Rhoswydd Common ?—Close by Penybont, the other side of Penybont the eastern side.

53,831. Your land is in two manors, I think, one being Iscoed ?—Yes.

53,832. Who is the lord of that manor ?—I believe it is Mr. Watt; the late Mr. Watt. I am not sure.

53,833. And the other is Swydd Neithon. Who is lord of that manor ?—He is lord of that manor, I know.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,834. Who is lord of that manor?—Mr. Watt, I believe; the late Mr. Watt.

53,835. You live at Gwystre?—Yes.

53,836. In Nantmel?—Nantmel.

53,837. Of course you know your neighbours. Are there any Welsh-speaking people among them now?—Very few now.

53,838. There used to be more?—More. Not many in that neighbourhood for 50 years. Welsh has not been spoken as a language there for 50 years.

53,839. Then language makes no difference?—Not a bit.

53,840. But you said just now that you were scoffed at. I did not quite catch what you meant?—Well, for my political opinions; but I do not think that I ever did really receive any injury through that.

53,841. The majority of your neighbours were of another way of thinking?—A few of them; but I do not think I ever did receive an injury through that.

53,842. What sort of gamekeepers do you think the farmers make?—Oh, pretty fair and good—killing when they can, perhaps.

53,843. Do they kill all the game?—No, I do not think they do.

53,844. Do they leave any game at all?—Oh, yes, some of them do.

53,845. Then there are some, I think you said, who are afraid to kill any?—Well, I believe there are.

53,846. On what estate?—On the Doldowlod estate. I have known tenants there, however, who did not kill any game when I was a tenant there, but perhaps it is altered now; I cannot say.

53,847. You think they were afraid to avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—Well, "afraid," perhaps, is too strong a term, but they did not like to offend their landlord any way.

53,848. Were there any shooting tenants on any of these estates that you know?—No, I do not think there were.

53,849. Many gamekeepers. I suppose not?—Well, there were two or three on the estate, or used to be. I do not think there are so many now. I think things have altered a bit in that way.

53,850. The farmers act as gamekeepers themselves?—No, not so very much, but you can see by my agreement what the farmer was expected to do.

Lord Kenyon.

53,851. It is the usual clause?—The usual clause, I suppose.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,852. You were a freeholder. I forget whether you said you bought your land or not?—No.

58,853. You inherited it?—No, I bought part and my father bought the other.

Professor Rhys—continued.

58,854. You inherited some and you bought the other?—Yes.

58,855. With regard to these freeholders, what happens to their estate when the children want each a share; how do they usually deal with the small freeholds?—It is according to the number of children a good deal. If there is a large family, in some instances there is money accumulated that goes to pay them off, and one keeps it, but very often it has got to be sold.

53,856. Got to be sold in order to divide the proceeds?—Yes.

53,857 That does not look very much like a permanent class of farmers, does it?—Well, there are a good many freeholders here round this neighbourhood that have been so for different generations.

53,858. How have they managed it?—I do not know; they do not seem to have had very large families, or something; but those who have purchased their farms when land was dear, I think, are no better off than a tenant farmer.

53,859. Are they as well off?—Well, I think not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,860. You say you have been scoffed at for your political opinions?—I certainly have.

53,861. So have I, very much. I hope you do not mind it?—Not a bit.

53,862. But I was going to ask you really a serious question, and that is this: do you not think that the Ballot Act is a complete protection nowadays?—Oh, certainly.

53,863. You think it is?—Yes, if they can keep their own secret, certainly; but then that is another case. If you want to come forward, and you have a cause at heart, and you think it is a good one, and you wish to support it, you cannot be under the Ballot Act altogether.

53,864. Quite so. If you choose to publish your opinions, you have a right to do so?—Yes.

53,865. Do you allege that there have been in the past any evictions on account of political opinions?—I could not prove that.

53,866. Not in this neighbourhood?—I could not prove that. I may think what I like, but I must keep that to myself.

53,867. But at present, if a man chooses, the ballot is a complete protection to him?—Certainly.

53,868. With regard to your own holdings, are you the owner of more than one holding?—Two small places.

53,869. Do you let one of them?—No.

53,870. You hold them both?—Yes.

53,871. And when you say that the smaller holdings rent higher than the larger holdings, do you take into consideration interest upon the buildings?—Oh, no; there is more competition for a small holding than a large one. There are more men of capital to take a small holding than a large one.

53,872. What do you consider is the best size for a holding?—I could not say exactly; it is according to what class of land it may be. If it is tillage land or land capable of being tilled, a 100-acre farm is enough for any man.

53,873. To make a good living upon?—Yes.

53,874. The rent of that land would be more per acre than the rent of a larger farm?—Yes, certainly.

53,875. Because of the larger buildings in proportion to the land?—Well, I think the competition is so much keener; that is what I think.

53,876. That is exactly what I was going to put to you. You think it is principally on account of the greater competition?—Certainly; there are ten for every one of the others.

Mr. Griffiths.

53,877. You mentioned just now that you considered, as to the farm you held, that the rent was now 20*l.* less in value than when you had it?—I do, and the agent is present. He hears what I say.

53,878. How do you account for that; for what reason; is it the depression?—No, not the depression.

53,879. Then what is it?—I mean not altogether the depression, anyway. It was bad then; things were low then; but the farm is in worse fettle now than then.

53,880. It has gone back, you think?—Yes, certainly.

53,881. But the tenant pays 10*l.* more than you paid?—He did, unless he had it lowered. I do not know that he has; I cannot say.

53,882. Do you know if he has had any abatement of rent?—I cannot tell you that. I cannot say whether there is an abatement or not. I am not sure about that.

53,883. Otherwise he is paying 30*l.* a year too much?—Yes.

53,884. He is not likely to last long, is he?—That is according to my judgment; that, perhaps, is not correct.

53,885. Just one question more. Is it the fact that tenants are often now asked to stop at home, and not to go and vote at all under the Ballot Act?—Well, I could not say about that, I am sure.

53,886. We have heard several cases in different neighbourhoods that we have been in, but it is not the case in this neighbourhood, is it?—Well, I could not bring you proofs. I have my own knowledge; I do a little bit in electioneering myself, and I understand the run of it pretty well.

53,887. You may be guilty of the same thing, then?—No, I never did a mean thing. I do not care if the worst I ever did in electioneering was disclosed here; but I will do all I can in a fair way.

Lord Kenyon.

53,888. I have some questions to put to you by Mr. Vincent. "Do you mean to say that it "is a general custom to make tenants do a "couple of days haulage for the landlord?"—Well, it is sometimes done. It is not always done.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,889. "Can you mention any considerable "estate on which this custom exists, or is "enforced?"—Doldowlod and Llwynbarried. You have it in my two agreements.

53,890. Is it enforced?—No.

53,891. Does it exist or is it enforced?—Not always, no.

53,892. You have known instances of its being enforced?—Well, I could not say enforced, perhaps, but they would ask him to come, and if he refused, perhaps there would be nothing wrong about it, but they would be pleased better if he did come.

53,893. Still, it was in the agreement which you signed?—Yes, it was in my two agreements there.

53,894. "Do you mean to say that it is the "regular practice on large estates to charge "interest on improvements?"—I could not say about many estates, but I know that I have had to pay it.

53,895. You qualified your evidence as regards that. You said it was merely drainage and fencing?—Yes.

53,896. "Will you name any estate on which "tenants are afraid to exercise their rights "under the Ground Game Act?"—I should put my foot in it if I did that. I know all about things, but I should put my foot in it if I did that.

Professor Rhŷs.

The witness has partly answered that. He said he could not prove it.

Lord Kenyon.

53,897. Then I have a question by Mr. H. L. Stephen. "Are you aware that it is the duty "of the diocesan surveyor to see that the vicar "keeps glebe land in a good state of cultiva-"tion?"—No, I did not know that.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,898. Then you are not aware whether the surveyor does it?—No, I do not think he does in all cases.

Lord Kenyon.

53,899. These are some further questions by Mr. Vincent. "Was the farm you gave up one "on the Doldowlod estate?"—The first one was on the Doldowlod estate; the second was on the Llwynbarried estate.

53,900. You did give up one on the Doldowlod estate?—Yes, with the intention of having it lowered in rent, and they would not lower it, and I had to go. That was about it.

53,901. "Did you not allow that farm to get "into a wretched state?"—On Doldowlod?

53,902. Yes?—No.

53,903. "Had not the landlord to farm it for "some years to get it into a proper state of "cultivation?"—Not a bit of it, in my opinion

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,904. Did he farm it for some years?—He did farm it, but he farmed it lighter than I did; his manuring was as light as mine, or rather lighter; of course he put a face on it and re-drained it and that.

53,905. "Is it now held by a tenant who "is satisfied to pay a higher rent than you "did?"—I do not know anything about the tenant now.

53,906. Does he pay a higher rent than you did?—I cannot tell you what he pays.

53,907. "How did you arrive at the con- "viction that religion and politics make a "difference, if you have no facts on which to "base the conviction?"—I cannot say that I have no facts, but I cannot put facts before you. You know things very often when you cannot put facts before another.

53,908. What is your answer then; that you have facts, but you cannot state them. Is that it. It is difficult to answer, is it not?—It is.

53,909. Then, "How much per acre did you "pay as a tenant?"—About 15*s.* an acre, as far as I can remember.

53,910. "How much per acre did you receive "at that time as a landlord?"—40*l.*

53,911. For the 100 acres?—No, I did not understand the question.

53,912. Mr. Vincent asks: "How much per "acre did you pay as a tenant," and you say 15*s.* Then he asks: "How much per acre did "you receive at that time as a landlord for your "own holding?'—1*l.* an acre, near enough; not quite 1*l.*, but going on to 1*l.*

Mr. Griffiths.

53,913. Was it the same quality of land?—No, certainly not.

53,914. Which was the best land?—My own.

53,915. Your own was best. Then you consider it was worth 5*s.* an acre more, do you?—Yes, certainly. I did not put the rent for that; the sitting tenant was paying the same rent before I had it.

53,916. Would you have remained on this farm if you had had the rent reduced?—Yes, I believe I should.

53,917. Did another man come forward and offer a higher rent, or what?—I cannot tell you about that, or whether they meant to re-drain it, or what; I cannot tell you.

53,918. But would it not be a good thing to have some place to appeal to when a tenant stops on a farm and farms it well, instead of being obliged to quit in this way?—I think it would, certainly.

53,919. Some outside authority to settle a question of that sort?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. James Davies called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,920. Is this statement that you have handed in correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

I live at Whitehall, Aberedw, and am a farmer. About 32 years ago I rented a farm called Newhouse, Llanfareth, from the Rev. Jones Thomas, as yearly tenant. It was about 140 acres in extent, and included a good deal of woodland. The rental was 90*l.* a year. It was afterwards reduced by 10*l.* The house was not in good repair, and the buildings were as bad as they could be. The roofs were open to the sky, and the wet came in. The landlord afterwards repaired them, and I did all the hauling; the lime I got from New Radnor, a distance of 13 miles, and the slates from another place 9 miles away. I did not get a penny for all this. A few years afterwards the landlord started building a new house, although I would have put up with the old one, and I hauled all the materials for it. I got only 12*l.* as compensation for this, and I was promised that I should not be turned out as long as I liked to remain there, but about seven years ago the landlord died and the property was sold, and I had notice to leave. I applied for compensation for the hauling, but could get nothing and had to go. I laid a good deal of money out on the farm at one time and another, and left it in a much better condition than it was when I took it. I consider I did more than 100*l.* worth of hauling to the house alone.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,921. You say that is correct?—There is one thing I wish to correct. I have been looking over my accounts and I find it is 9*l.* allowed instead of 12*l.* for the haulage.

53,922. Who was the landlord who sold the property?—The Rev. Jones Thomas.

53,923. Who was the landlord who bought it?—William Thomas, of Hendre Einion.

53,924. Did William Thomas go and live there himself?—His brother occupied it after I went.

53,925. He put his brother in?—Yes.

53,926. Did you ask him to let you remain there?—I did.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,927. Did he say he could not?—He said he wanted it for his brother.

53,928. Did you get any compensation for your improvements?—I find I got 9*l.*

53,929. Did you get anything when you left? Not a penny.

53,930. Did you send in any claim except for haulage?—Nothing but for hauling.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,931. When was the sale?—About six years ago; something about a year after the Reverend died.

53,932. Did the Rev. Jones Thomas die?—Yes, he died suddenly.

53,933. His executors sold?—Yes, I suppose so.

53,934. What was the amount of your claim? I did not send any amount. I asked them if they would allow me something towards it, because the Reverend Gentleman said I should never be turned out as long as I had a mind to keep it. I had no written agreement.

53,935. He did not turn you out as long as he lived?—No.

53,936. For what did you claim?—Hauling towards the new house and buildings.

53,937. Anything else?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

53,938. You had 26 years enjoyment of your new house?—Not of the new house; half the time, perhaps. I find it is in my accounts in 1881, but it was built before.

53,939. Do you know what the rent is now?—No, I cannot say. It is between the two brothers.

Professor Rhys.

53,940. I think you said you had no written agreement?—No, I had no agreement for hauling at all. It was the custom, I believe, for tenants to haul for any repairs. There was no agreement.

Professor Rhys—continued.

53,941. You think the haulage you did came to about 100*l.*?—Well, it would not be done for a good deal more in these days now.

53,942. Even at the price of labour then you think it would have come to 100*l.*?—Yes, I think it would, and some more.

53,943. You did not ask for any particular sum?—No, I did not.

53,944. They gave you 9*l.*?—9*l.*

53,945. Was that for the haulage?—He gave me that some years ago for myself, and he promised if I took that I should not be turned away so long as I minded to keep it.

53,946. That was the old landlord?—Yes.

53,947. Did you ask for any compensation from the new owner?—No, I did not ask the new one who bought it; of course I had no claim on him.

53,948. Was the farm sold for a higher sum on account of the improvements done, do you think?—I should say it was a good deal more 53,949. It was worth more?—200*l.* or 300*l.*, at least.

53,950. Do you not think he would have been the man to be asked for some compensation?—The seller, I should think, not the buyer.

53,951. How was it sold, by auction?—Yes.

53,952. Did you bid?—Yes.

53,953. Did it go much too high, do you think?—Too high for me.

53,954. How many years' purchase?—About 2,300*l.* and something it went to.

53,955. You found it went too high for you?—Yes.

53,956. It fetched that price partly because of your improvements, you think?—Well, there is no doubt of it, I think.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. W. P. Williams called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

e 51,345. 53,957. Do you live at Rhayader?—Yes. My attention was called this morning to some evidence given at Brecon by Mr. David Watkins, in which he says that the rent of a farm on the Danygraig estate, which I owned, has risen from 35*l.* to 55*l.* during the last 15 years. In 1873, the farm was let at 80*l.* a year, and it has been reduced to 55*l.*, and four years ago I laid out 98*l.* odd in repairs.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

53,958. Has it ever been rented at 35*l.*?—Not to my knowledge.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Edward Middleton called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

53,959. Do you reside at Penmincae, Disserth?—Yes.

53,960. Will you give us your evidence?—My evidence will be corroborated, if necessary, by Mr. William Price, Cilgunfydd, Disserth, and Susan Joseph, Glangwy, Disserth.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Difference of language, creed, or politics, make no difference in the relations between landlord and tenant. No Welsh is spoken here. I, for my part, prefer yearly tenancy, with freedom to leave if the farm does not pay me. I am familiar with the terms on which I occupy my holding, and have a copy of my agreement. Penalising clauses are not enforced against a good tenant. With regard to a land court, I prefer dealing direct with a landlord. If there was a land court, I do not think the landlords would be inclined to spend as much money on their estates as they do at present. The landlord does the building, and the tenants do the hauling. Where much draining is done the tenant pays interest, and the landlord does the whole work. The custom of the country is not much in use, as most of the farmers have agreements. The outgoing tenant takes the wheat crop, except one-tenth, and leaves the straw, and clover seeds are paid for if kept up. Lime is taken as a three years' improvement. I have not a copy of my agreement with me.

Sir John Llewelyn.

53,961. Any time within the three years the lime would be paid for on a scale ?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,962. In what direction is Disserth from here ?—Just close by.

53,963. You say there is no difference of language about here ?—No, I think there is no Welsh spoken about here.

53,964. You say you prefer yearly tenancy ?—Yes.

53,965. Are you satisfied with your agreement ?—Yes, I am.

53,966. Have you a copy to produce ?—Not with me, I have one at home.

53,967. Do you know what is in it ?—Perfectly well.

53,968. Are there any penalising clauses in it ?—Nothing to hurt any good tenant.

53,969. Are there any penalising clauses at all in it ?—No.

53,970. Have you any difficulty about game in your neighbourhood ?—No.

53,971. Is there anything about game in your agreement ?—No. We have all the hares and rabbits ourselves.

Sir John Llewelyn.

And the winged game, too, if you have not got any agreement to the contrary.

Professor Rhŷs.

53,972. Have you got the winged game as well ?—No.

53,973. I suppose there is something in your agreement about it ?—Well, perhaps, there may be something there; I do not interfere with them.

53,974. Did you ever have a copy of your agreement ?—I have a copy.

53,975. And you have read it ?—Yes.

53,976. Are you satisfied with your agreement ?—Yes, I am.

Professor Rhys—continued.

53,977. You mentioned a land court just now. You object to a land court ?—Yes.

53,978. Supposing somebody else wanted the help of a land court, that need not interfere with you, need it ?—No.

53,979. Supposing another tenant could not agree with his landlord he might go to an arbitrator if he liked; that need not compel you to go ?—No.

53,980. You do not want a land court so far as you are concerned ?—No, not so far as I am concerned.

53,981. Is yours partly a sheep farm ?—No, there is no common.

53,982. No sheep run ?—No, no common.

53,983. I did not ask you whether there was a common ?—I keep sheep.

53,984. You have some hill land ?—No.

53,985. It is a low land farm ?—Yes.

53,986. You do not complain of your rent being too high or anything of that sort ?—No.

53,987. You are satisfied ?—I am satisfied.

Mr. Richard Jones.

53,988. You say that there is no penalising clause in your agreement. What are the clauses that are in your agreement, Mr. Middleton, do you know ?—I could not state exactly now.

53,989. Do you know whether there is a clause in it forbidding you to break up meadow land, for instance ?—Yes.

53,990. And you will be fined so much an acre if you do it ?—Yes.

53,991. That is a penalising clause ?—I should not be foolish enough for that myself.

53,992. You deny there are any penalising clauses ?—Certainly, that is in it.

53,993. You say penalising clauses are not enforced against a good tenant ?—They are not.

53,994. Are there any binding covenants in your agreement as to cropping ?—No.

53,995. You have perfect freedom to crop as you like ?—Yes.

53,996. You are certain of it ?—Yes.

53,997. You are not compelled to farm on the four-course system or any other system ?—No.

53,998. Is there any covenant with respect to the sale of the produce on the farm ?—I hardly understand you. We go by the custom of the country.

53,999. Are you permitted to sell straw and hay off the farm ?—Well, it is not the custom to do so.

54,000. There is no mention of it in the agreement ?—No, not at all.

54,001. Are all the binding covenants in the agreements observed by the tenants ?—I do not know.

54,002. Of course, if they are there would be no need to enforce the penalising clauses. You say that if a land court was established, landlords would not spend so much money on their estates ?—Yes, that is my opinion.

54,003. We will assume that there was such a thing as a land court, or a tribunal to fix rents between landlord and tenant. If there were insufficient buildings on a farm, do you not think that the land court would take that into consideration in fixing the rent at a sum lower, in consequence of the deficiency of buildings?—Perhaps they would, I could not tell you, but I had no difficulty about it myself.

54,004. So that in that case the tenant would not lose if he had the reduced rent, that is so, is it not?—Perhaps you may be right, but I am speaking of my own experience now. I have had no difficulty myself.

54,005. You have mentioned about the establishment of a land court. It is a matter of opinion on your part, I take it—Yes, it is opinion on my part.

54,006. Lime is taken at a three years' improvement. Do you think that is sufficient?—I think you would be having the worth of it out in that time. You would be having the expense of your labour.

54,007. I do not find such a short time as that in any other county?—You have three years' crops off it.

54,008. Is there any distinction made between arable and pasture lands; is it three years in all cases?—Yes, in all cases, as I understand.

54,009. I find in Devon and Cornwall, for instance, they have a five years' system for arable land, and seven years' for pasture land. You see that is a longer period?—Yes, it is.

54,010. I cannot find one so short as three years'. They are all either four, five, six, or seven years'?—I think that is sufficient.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,011. You say there are no differences between landlords and tenants, they both speak the same language; are they also of the same creed and politics?—I cannot see why there should be any difference in that myself.

54,012. They do not take any notice of the tenant's politics?—I do not know about that; but it should not alter friendship, I think.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

54,013. You say again you prefer a yearly tenancy with freedom to leave if the farm does not pay. Supposing the landlord should be inclined to raise the rent, would you not like some term to fall back upon?—I should not interfere with that; if it did not pay me I should leave it.

54,014. Then, I suppose, you could easily get another farm?—If I could not I could do without it, perhaps.

54,015. Have you a family?—I have a small family.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,016. Are they grown up?—No, they are not.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,017. From where are the horses in this neighbourhood supplied with hay and straw?—I could not tell you; they do not want very much here.

54,018. There are a good many good horses about in the hotels?—Yes; but the hotel people generally hold land themselves.

54,019. There is not much required?—No.

54,020. Then there is no necessity to sell either hay or straw?—No, not a great deal.

54,021. Then, with regard to the draining, you say the landlord does the work, and the tenant does the hauling?—Yes.

54,022. Still there is interest charged?—Yes.

54,023. What amount of interest is then charged?—Three per cent.

54,024. For how long a time?—Really I could not tell you. I have not had any done myself.

54,025. Then you have no grievance whatever to make?—No, I have not.

54,026. Have you had any abatements in your rent?—Yes.

54,027. What amount?—I have had as much as 10 per cent.—more once.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Price called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,028. Do you reside at Cilgunfydd?—Yes.

54,029. Have you heard what Mr. Middleton said?—Yes.

54,030. Do you agree with what he has said?—Quite so.

54,031. Have you anything to add to it?—Nothing.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,032. You have an opportunity of adding to it or detracting from it?—I quite agree with what he has said.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,033. Are you on the same estate?—Yes.

54,034. Whose estate is it?—Miss Thomas, of Llwynmadoc and Pencerrig. She occupies the two estates.

The witness withdrew.

Miss Susan Joseph called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,035. Do you reside at Glangwy, Disserth?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,036. Did you hear the evidence given by Mr. Edward Middleton?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,037. Do you agree with that generally?—Yes.

54,038. Have you anything you would like to add to it?—No, nothing whatever.

54,039. Or is there anything he said you would like to modify in any way?—No, I do not think there is anything. I think he said everything that is necessary.

54,040. Are you also on the same estate?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,041. I suppose you occupy a farm?—Yes.

54,042. What acreage?—About 250 acres.

54,043. Have you a dairy farm?—A small one.

54,044. Have you any daughters grown up?—No, I am a single person.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,045. How long have you been farming?—I succeeded my brother.

54,046. Is your brother dead?—Yes.

54,047. How long ago did he die?—11 years.

54,048. Have you a bailiff managing the farm for you?—Yes.

54,049. What wages do you pay him?—He is not a regular bailiff; but he is a man capable of managing. I pay him about 25*l.* a year and maintains.

54,050. What other servants have you?—I keep a waggoner and a run-about boy.

54,051. What wages do you pay him?—Some years different to others; from 16*l.* to 18*l.*, sometimes 19*l.* a year with maintains.

54,052. Is he a lad?—He is not quite a man.

54,053. About 18 years of age?—Yes, from 18 to 20.

54,054. What other men have you?—I keep a workman occasionally.

54,055. Any boys?—A boy to look to the cattle.

54,056. Have you found that the labour bill is higher now than it was 11 years ago?—It was high then, but it is higher than it was.

54,057. Do you find the value of produce and stock lower?—Yes.

54,058. Lower a good deal?—Very much lower than 11 years ago.

54,059. Do you find farming is more unprofitable now than it was 11 years ago?—Yes, it is.

54,060. Have you found farming a profitable occupation?—Not particularly so.

54,061. You find it difficult to make two ends meet?—Yes, it is rather difficult.

Professor Rhys.

54,062. The lectures on dairy work were mentioned this morning. Did you attend any of the lectures, or send anyone to attend them?—I have never attended a dairy class.

54,063. You have heard of them?—Yes, I have.

Professor Rhys—continued.

54,064. Have they done any good in the neighbourhood, do you think?—I believe they have; but there is a great deal more wanted to be done in the way of dairying.

54,065. You think it would be a good thing if more instruction was given?—Yes, I think it would be a good thing, and if the instruction received were followed up. I mean if those who have received instruction would only follow up the instruction they have received, there might be a great deal of good done.

54,066. Did any of your dairymaids go there?—I did not send anyone; but still I take a great deal of interest in the dairy classes.

54,067. Do you think they are fitted for what was intended?—There were many things useful in them, but I do not know that we could follow it all as they gave the instructions. As I say, there were many things useful.

54,068. It is said that Welsh butter fetches more if the making of it be kept up to a uniform standard. Would it be possible to have a butter factory in this district?—I do not know. I do not think our land is adapted for butter-making. It is rather poor.

54,069. What is it adapted for chiefly?—Mixed farming.

54,070. What do you think you should make the rent from chiefly here?—Cattle, horses, and sheep, and a little from the dairy.

54,071. The dairy question does not interest you so much?—We do not follow it up at any rate. I do not know whether it could be improved.

54,072. Is there any cheese-making?—Yes, I make a little cheese always.

54,073. Does that pay, or is it only for home consumption?—What we make is for my own use, and a little to sell.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,074. Is it skim cheese?—Yes.

54,075. How do you do with the butter?—I tub it in the summer.

54,076. In what size casks?—Different sizes, from 50 lbs. up to 70 lbs. or 80 lbs.

54,077. How long do you keep it?—I salt it in the autumn. I generally take it to Hereford.

54,078. You have to salt it rather heavily?—Not in the least. I do not make any difference at all.

54,079. What price would you command for it at Hereford?—Different prices, from 14*d.*, 13*d.*, sometimes 1*s.*, according to what the market is.

54,080. What did you get last time?—If I remember right, 13*d.*, 13½*d.*, and 14*d.*

54,081. Do you think it paid you better at that price than if you had made up your butter and sold it in half-pounds at Llandrindod and Builth?—We could not get that price then.

54,082. Taking it on the average, you think it is better for you to do as you did?—Yes, I think it is better for me to do so; besides it is more trouble to make it up than in the tubs.

54,083. Do you use butter workers?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,084. And Scotch hands ?—Yes.

54,085. And a thermometer ?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,086. Do you find any difficulty in getting dairy maids in this district ?—Yes, that is one of the greatest difficulties we have to meet with. The girls are not willing to work in places where there is dairy work.

54,087. Their wages are much higher than they were a few years ago, I suppose ?—Oh, yes.

54,088. How much higher ?—I could not say.

54,089. What are the present wages ?—From 12*l.* to 14*l.* a year for a girl capable of taking charge of the dairy, and doing.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

54,090. Could you have got a similar dairy-maid 12 years ago for half the amount ?—Yes, for 5*l.* or 6*l.*—and plenty of them.

54,091. What is the price of butter in Llandrindod ?—Builth is my market.

54,092. It is just the same there as Llandrindod ?—Yes, sometimes it runs up very high when the visitors are plentiful, and at other times very low. You must take it all through the summer

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,093. A question has been handed up by Mr. Stephen: "Has not your family been 200 "years on the same farm" ?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Bufton called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,094. Do you live at London House, Llandrindod ?—Yes.

54,095. Will you kindly give us your evidence ?—I have a few remarks, not very many to make, and I will not take up much of your time. I am an auctioneer, and am generally acquainted with the farmers, and the state of the country in general.

54,096. You are an auctioneer and a member of the Llandrindod Local Board, and you were formerly county councillor of the district ?—Yes. I find that farmers generally complain of high rents, and bad prices, which of course makes it very difficult for them to meet their payments. Small farms are not easily obtained, and farmers are thus compelled to take larger farms than what they are really capable of taking and working and stocking, which throws the tenant very often into difficulty when any depression or hard times arise. Some landlords are letting their buildings on some of the holdings go down and tacking on the land to other farms. Some of the houses and buildings are quite unfit for habitation, and very little labour is employed, in consequence, the population of the agricultural districts has gone down very considerably; notwithstanding that we are in one of the most rising and growing towns in Wales. There is not a town I should say in Wales, in proportion, that has grown as Llandrindod Wells has this last 10 or 20 years—I mean according to the population. I do not say there is not more population in Cardiff, but taking it pro rata, I say Llandrindod has grown more rapidly that even Cardiff.

A few years ago in my recollection there was a village called Howey. In that village there were two master blacksmiths and two master shoemakers; each of those were keeping two or three men. Now there is not one. At a distance from that village to say Forest Inn, that would be a distance of some ten miles, there are over 50 dwelling-houses that have gone down unoccupied, thus causing great scarcity of labour in the neighbourhood, the small holdings being put on to large farms, and those large farms employing very little labour, and indeed having very little raised off them. There are instances I know in this neighbourhood of 800, 1,000, and 1,100 acres of land, and good land too if it was properly managed, but on those there is not sufficient bread raised to keep half a dozen in family—nor any cheese either, and I do not suppose but very little butter.

See 54,370.

57,097. Do I understand you, that no food of any sort is produced on that land ?—They buy their food.

54,098. I suppose they raise stock ?—Yes, they raise stock certainly.

54,099. It has not gone back to be profitless ? No; it does not produce bread, therefore there is no requirement for labour, and a man holding 1,000 or 1,200 acres of land requiring no labour is no good to the country. There is no produce raised and the money has to be sent into other countries to bring in produce which might be raised on the land in the neighbourhood, and the money kept in circulation in this country. Notwithstanding as I mentioned the great increase of the town of Llandrindod, which is a town for the farmers round to bring their produce to and sell at a high price, which is a great help these last years to keep the farmers and tenants and landlords from a state of bankruptcy, the population of the county during the last 20 years notwithstanding the increase in this town has decreased 3,359. I consider this to a great extent is due to allowing small holdings to go down and putting the land into bigger lots. Agricultural labourers have to go into the towns to seek employment, and it leaves the country as a wilderness.

There are other grievances such as religious and political questions at election times—boycotting. There are cases that I could mention. Also unjust and unscrupulous agreements between landlord and tenants in some cases which I think ought to be altered. A tenant pays a high rent, and is also charged a high per-centage on any outlay for improvements, and also there is a power to distrain for rent beforehand.

Then I also wish to say a word or two as to the inclosure of commons. In this county there has been a very large tract of common enclosed. In the parish of Llanbister I could count now 20 to 30 holdings which some 25 or 30 years ago were inhabited; there were families in each of those dwellings. Previous to the enclosure of commons these people were turning out to the common and getting a living—nursing a family, and in a fair way to do. Some years after the commons were enclosed these people had to seek their livelihood in other neighbourhoods. These cottages are now in quite a dilapidated condition. I heard some of the evidence as to where they agreed with the enclosure of commons. Well, I must say I do not think any man should agree to the enclosure of commons unless they were justly divided; I mean to say that the commons really formerly belonged to the people, and every inhabitant round had a right to turn out to the commons, but this right has been taken away from them. Many of the small holders were not aware under the Swydd Neithon Enclosure Act where the commons were enclosed and divided. There was a very small portion indeed given to some, and some had not any at all. I could mention cases where a man would have in a parish half an acre of land, and for that half an acre he would claim some 30 or 40 or 50 acres of land. There is a case close to us here now where there is about half an acre of land belonging to a farm the other side in Llanyre parish, and the owner of the farm had allotted to that about 40 acres of common land here now in the neighbourhood of Llandrindod, which could be sold at a very high price indeed. The land also where the town of Llandrindod stands was common land entirely. This was allotted to the Llwynbarried estate, and at the present day I believe there are portions sold, and they are asking from 1,500*l.* to 2,000*l.* per acre. For my part I consider it is hard that one man should have common allotted to him without even purchasing it at all and pocket all this money. I think some of it ought to go to the benefit of the ratepayers, or the improvement of the place.

As to the depression I have not much to say. I think a good deal of the cause of the depression of trade is the over-stock which has been reared in the country here flooding the markets, and causing too many cattle and sheep and stock to be in the market which brings down the prices to a great extent. The last year or two there has been very little cattle reared. They have been killing the calves before they come to any size. Therefore, the cattle in our country, and as well I believe in foreign markets, will become more scarce.

I should suggest a reduction of rents, fixity of tenure, and a land court for Wales to adjust rents, and also a reduction in railway rates which I think would be a great benefit to an agricultural district.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,100. When you speak of the inclosure of this Llandrindod Common was that done under an Act of Parliament before a Commissioner?—I believe it was.

54,101. Did you advance your views then?—I was not in the neighbourhood then. It was 30 years ago. I believe it was enclosed under the Swydd Neithon Inclosure Act.

54,102. We had evidence yesterday that the claims of all commoners were listened to and the apportionment was made after hearing them?—Yes, possibly there may be some evidence, but I can assure you that there were scores of small holders that never knew anything about it until the thing was settled.

54,103. That is about 30 years ago you say?—Yes.

54,104. Before your time?—Before my time in this very neighbourhood.

54,105. You complain of the land not being made to produce corn. Do you think that corn growing is remunerative?—I think that to a certain extent it is.

54,106. You are not a practical farmer yourself I think are you?—Not exactly, although I farm some land and I understand farming.

54,107. Do you consider this to be a corn growing country?—Well, there is a good portion of it that is fair corn land, and at the prices that corn is now it will pay them to grow sufficient for their own consumption.

54,108. Do not you think the farmers themselves are the best judges of whether it pays to grow corn or not, and that they would grow it if it paid them?—Well, they ought to be. I know this, I have had some experience, and I bought some poor land—as poor as you could see—and I cultivated it, and the last crop of oats off it produced 50 bushels to the acre and upwards and a heavy crop of straw. That will pay.

54,109. Yes, oats will pay much better than wheat I take it?—Well, you can grow a fair average crop of wheat in this country.

54,110. With regard to the depopulation, is that owing to the young men of the district going to the works down in Glamorganshire and other counties?—To some extent. Of course there is no employment for them in the country.

54,111. How would you suggest that more employment should be found for them in the country?—I suggest a little more of Joseph Chamberlain's idea three years ago—3 acres and a cow—give every man a little land so that he could work it and cultivate it. I think that would keep them on the land.

54,112. I quite agree with you. Then do you think that the farmers in this neighbourhood are unwilling to give their labourers an opportunity of keeping a cow?—I do.

54,113. They are unwilling you think to do it?—A great many, not all, there are exceptions.

54,114. You mentioned a large number of houses that were unoccupied. I think you said 50 within a very short area?—Yes.

54,115. Owing to scarcity of labour?—In many instances I have no doubt.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,116. And partly owing to consolidation of lands?—Yes.

54,117. Is there much of that consolidation?—Yes, there is a great deal.

54,118. Do you think that that is unpopular amongst the farming class?—I do.

54,119. I think you will find generally that where a man does hold two or three or more such farms he is very loth to give them up. We had examples of that this morning I think?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,120. Is the consolidation of farms going on now, or is it only during the prosperous years that it was done?—Well, not so much now as in former years. A few years ago when stock was high farmers would take all the land that they could get, whether they could stock it or not, and now when times have gone bad there are many cases where buildings would be left to go down and then the land would be put to adjoining farms. There have been two or three places in Trewern.

54,121. The competition for small farms would be keener than for big ones?—Undoubtedly.

54,122. But I suppose there are no farms about here vacant at all?—Oh, no.

54,123. You alluded just now to the preferential claim of the landlord, I think you considered that that was not a good thing—I mean the power of the landlord to distrain for rent. What is your view about that?—I think it is quite right that the landlord should be paid his money, but in cases where a man should turn bankrupt or fail to go on, the landlord should only take what rent was due and take the land up—not to go in for a year's rent whereas there was only six months rent due and prevent the creditors or the tenant letting the land.

54,124. But can the landlord distrain for a year's rent when there is only half a year's rent due?—Yes, they draw up an agreement to that effect, giving the landlord power to distrain, making the rent payable in advance. Then they do distrain for half a year's rent in advance.

54,125. Do you know of any agreement like that?—I do.

54,126. Have you got one here that you can produce?—Yes (handing agreement).

54,127. Is there any demand for small allotments in the neighbourhood?—Any amount.

54,128. But they cannot get them?—They cannot get them.

54,129. What is your suggestion—what should be done to help to satisfy that demand?—Well, I think there should be some allotments put out for those that require them.

54,130. You know there is a statute about small allotments?—Yes.

54,131. Do you know why that is not carried out or what is the deficiency in that statute?—Well, I cannot say exactly why it is not carried out. There is nothing compulsory in it, whereby a person could go and demand an allotment or small holding.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

54,132. You would give power to some public body to carry this Act out?—Certainly, the county council I should say.

54,133. With regard to the farmers' families you could never expect all the children of a farmer to have farms themselves?—Oh, no.

54,134. Some of them must turn out to other professions?—Some of them must turn out.

54,135. Is a farmer here able to set up one or two of his sons in a farm as a rule?—Some are; a great many are not, unless they borrow money.

54,136. You spoke just now of the rents being too high?—Well, that is the general complaint of farmers.

54,137. But did you hear the last three witnesses before you?—I did.

54,138. Did you notice that they had no complaint with regard to the rent?—Well, those are very fortunate. Of course some of them have no families, and are on old takings, and under a very good landlady.

54,139. Do you consider them exceptional?—Well, I should say they are exceptional, rather.

54,140. I think we have had evidence from some tenant farmers to the same effect already?—Oh, yes, I have no doubt.

54,141. This appears to be a very prosperous county?—Of course you are quite aware, I have no doubt, that it is a very delicate point for a farmer to go and give evidence against the landlord. They would not do it because I think but very few farmers would go and give evidence against their landlord.

54,142. But let me explain to you now; we have had some landlords praised to their faces very highly?—I have no doubt.

54,143. But at the same moment the tenants have said the rents are too high. "Mr. So-and-" so is an excellent landlord, but the rents are "too high." One of the tenants of the college I belong to came and said some very flattering things about me; but in the next breath he said that the rent was too high. Do you mean to say the Radnorshire tenants would be too shy to suggest that the rents were too high?—Well, they may suggest it, but I know there are very few that would go and give evidence against their landlord in a public court.

54,144. Not to that extent?—Possibly to that extent they may.

54,145. You said something about boycotting. I did not quite understand what you had in your mind. Will you explain what was in your mind?—Yes, I can do so.

54,146. Boycotting for what?—Politically—for voting. Men that vote contrary to the wish of the landlord had to leave their houses through voting, and others to leave their situations.

54,147. They had to leave. Do you mean that they received notice to quit their farms?—Yes, there has been some of that—their houses more especially. I know in a village, not far from here, there were three or four had notice. They were asked to vote in a certain way, not according to their own principles, and as they did not promise, they had notice to quit their houses, and had to quit some of them.

54,148. That would not be exactly boycotting. Do you allude to anything further?—Well, I know some in trade, where parties have left a tradesman on account of his not giving his vote in a way they wished. I know another case here, even the last county council election, where a lady turned a servant away because he voted contrary to her wishes.

See 54,264, 54,426.

54,149. Turned a servant away?—Yes, a gardener; and ordered two servants, because they were Nonconformists, not to go to a Nonconformist chapel; otherwise they would have to leave her service. I call that boycotting.

54,150. You could give the names of these parties?—I could.

54,151. Now what about the small freeholders in these parts. Are there a good many of them?—Yes there are a few.

54,152. Any that have inherited their freeholds from some distance of time?—Oh, yes.

54,153. How are they off?—Oh, they are better off.

54,154. Better off than the tenant farmers?—Yes.

54,155. Have you any freeholders who have recently bought?—Yes, some.

54,156. Do they do pretty well?—Yes.

54,157. None of them having bought at too high price, you think?—Well, by chance there are some in that case that have bought when land was very dear, and it has gone down, and not having sufficient money at the time of buying to pay for it, they had to mortgage, and the price of land has gone down; there they have not turned out successfully.

54,158. What rate of interest would they have to pay?—I suppose 3½ or 4 per cent.

54,159. Would their case be better or worse than that of the average tenant farmer?—Well, I could not say. I should say, taking it on the average, they would be better, but there might be exceptional cases where they would be no better.

54,160. How about the small freeholds. Do they go on in the same family; how is it arranged with regard to dividing the property between the children and so on. I want to know about that. Have you any instances of that here?—We are not very much troubled with that here. Sometimes the oldest son has it and pays so much for the others.

54,161. But where does he get the money. I mean—that is the possible difficulty?—If he has not got it, he must raise it on the small farm and pay off his share.

24,162. That means a mortgage?—That means a mortgage.

54,163. But they keep on. They do not dispose of their little freeholds?—Not as a rule.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,164. Who was this lady that dismissed her gardener?—Miss Severn.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,165. Does she live in Llandrindod?—Yes, close by.

54,166. I suppose that would be an exceptional case. You do not know of anybody else?—Well, I could mention others, but I would rather not.

54,167. What kind of farmers are the farmers about this neighbourhood here. Is there a little bit of spirit and enterprise about them, or are they old-fashioned and content to follow in the old groove?—Well, some of both.

54,168. Do any of them use the old flail for thrashing instead of the machine?—Well, it has got too much like work now to use old flails; they go to machinery more. Of course they are used a little.

54,169. Any wooden ploughs?—Very few. I have one.

54,170. Do you make any use of it?—No, it is hung up.

54,171. As a relic?—Yes.

54,172. Just what it ought to be. Have you frequently been called in as an auctioneer to sell the stock of farmers who are under distraint?—I have occasionally; not very often; it has not very often come to that in this neighbourhood I am happy to say.

54,173. Do you think there are more failures among tenant farmers now than there used to be?—Oh, yes.

54,174. You never knew their condition to be worse than at present?—Never.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,175. As to these farms that are consolidated, does the landlord receive the same rent for them as he formerly did?—I believe so; I could not say exactly about that.

54,176. Is it the landlords or is it the tenants that wish to have them consolidated?—Well, possibly the tenant in some cases, and then the landlord not putting up buildings.

54,177. Quite so, it suits his pocket too?—Yes.

54,178. That is the chief cause of it, you think?—Yes, I think so.

55,179. Are there many houses unfit for habitation in your neighbourhood?—There are a good many.

54,180. Are they cottages or farmhouses?—Both.

54,181. Have you no sanitary inspectors in the district?—Oh, yes, and they have condemned a good many of them too.

54,182. What becomes of them then?—Oh, they get them repaired a little.

54,183. Then they still go on much in the same way?—Yes.

54,184. Then you say that so many people have left the neighbourhood, and the population has decreased very much, which is no doubt a result of consolidation. Where have all these people gone to?—Into the towns to seek work in the different employments—to South Wales a good portion of them.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

54,185. To the mines and works?—Yes, to the mines, and of course when agricultural labour goes out of the agricultural districts into towns, it brings on want and depression in the trading towns, and famine in many cases through excess of labour.

54,186. You say these enclosures were rather unequally divided when they were made in this district?—Yes.

54,187. Has any appeal been made against them do you know?—It was all settled I think before anybody knew much about it. Of course Radnorshire has always been a little behind other counties, and at that time they were a little behind I have no doubt.

54,188. In which way do you think?—In being up to the times and so on. If they were to be divided now they would be a little more keen about it.

54,189. But there were some sharpers in those days too?—Oh, yes, now and again one has got the big share.

54,190. Do you consider more could be made of the farms if the tenants had security of tenure?—Yes, I think there could.

54,191. Much more could be produced?—Yes.

54,192. How many bushels of wheat can be grown in this part of the country per acre?—I should say 30 to 40.

54,193. I should doubt it?—Well, of course there is a difference in the years—some seasons are much better than others, and some lands——

54,194. Do you think that in the best years perhaps 40 bushels of wheat could be raised?—Well, perhaps not just in this neighbourhood.

54,195. And you are in favour of three acres and a cow are you?—Yes.

54,196. Are there many of the same opinion in the district?—Oh, yes, a good many. I think there are very few but would like to have three acres of land and take their chance about the cow.

54,197. They are doing very well?—Yes, I think there would be much more made on the land.

54,198. Do you think it would be an inducement to them to remain on the land instead of going to the towns?—Yes.

54,199. They could not so easily pack off and go away?—No.

54,200. And how about their children. Do not their children grow up to be more useful for agricultural purposes than the children of a cottager who has no cow at all?—Certainly, because they are brought up to do something.

54,201. Early habits—getting up in the morning and doing work?—Yes.

54,202. Have you been often employed on valuations of farms?—Yes, I have had a good many valuations.

54,203. Are the changes more often now than they were?—Well, we have not so very many changes just round here; not so much as in some districts.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,204. You spoke of the implements just now. There is a considerable difference in the value of the implements now and 40 years ago?—Yes, considerable.

54,205. Which has taken a good deal out of the farmers pockets?—Well, I do not know that it has taken very much out. I should say there is a great reduction in the price of implements, which would be an advantage to the farmers.

54,206. Yes, I do not talk of advantage; but the implements that were used 40 years ago, and those which are used now, are very different in value. What is the difference should you think?—Well, I could not say.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,207. Do you think that the sanitary inspectors will carry out their duties in a more fearless manner under the new district council, than they do now under the sanitary authority? I should think they would.

54,208. So that in future, we may expect to hear less of these insanitary dwellings?—Oh, yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,209. Is this a copy of an agreement now in use?—Yes.

54,210. Has it been signed by anybody do you know?—Yes.

54,211. There is a clause here which I do not profess to be quite able to understand, but it seems rather a severe one—"The tenant shall "pay the annual rent of 107*l.* half yearly in "advance by equal payments on Lady Day and "Michaelmas Day in each year, notwithstanding "it may be collected in any other manner "free of all deductions for tithe rentcharge, "or any other rates, taxes, or assessments now "hereafter to be charged upon the premises "except the landlord's property tax, and if "at any time in any year of the tenancy the "landlord shall give to the tenant or leave at "the farmhouse notice in writing, requiring the "tenant immediately to pay all rates and the "rentcharge which should have become payable "from the quarter-day preceding such notice to "the Lady Day following on the delivery of "such notice, such rent and tithe rentcharge "shall become due and payable in advance, and "may be recovered by distress or otherwise as "rent in arrear. In addition to the above yearly "rent, the tenant shall do two days' labour "each year," and so on. You say that agreements containing that clause are in use in this district now?—Yes, that is in force.

54,212. This is in force. This is a copy of an agreement that has been actually signed by both parties?—Yes.

54,213–4. Is Mr. Powell Price a large landowner?—Yes, or land agent and landowner. I cannot say exactly which.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,215. Where is the property which he owns or manages chiefly; do you know?—Oh, all round the neighbourhood here; from here to Rhayader a good deal.

54,216. Is this sort of agreement usual on other estates, do you know?—Well, I could not say. There is something similar on some of them.

54,217. But you do not know whether this sort of clause is usual?—Well, I should say not—not all of those clauses.

54,218. This particular clause that I read now?—No, I should say not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,219. Do you know when the rent is paid on Mr. Powell Price's estate?—Half yearly.

54,220. That is, about three months after it is due?—Very often, I daresay; the 25th March and 29th September, I believe, are the days.

54,221. I suppose he had this clause inserted to protect himself against emergencies. That was his only object?—No doubt. Still what I complain of is that in case of a man turning bankrupt the landlord should go in and take his full amount of rent, that is, before it is due, and the other creditors have nothing. I do not think that such things ought to be allowed to be carried out.

54,222. Of course you supplied this as an instance in support of your contention that the preferential claim for rent should be abolished?—Quite so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,223. Some questions are handed up by Mr. Stephen: "How are you qualified to ex- "press the opinion that big farms are bad for "agriculture generally?"—By the experience of what is raised off them, and by the amount of labour that is employed upon the land.

54,224. "Do you not think that farmers are "better qualified to judge of the questions than "you are?"—Well, I could not say.

54,225. "Can you name any case of boy- "cotting for religious or political reasons?"—Yes.

See 54,258–54,268 54,240–54,492.

54,225A. You have named one?—Yes, I will name another now. Mr. J. P. Severn, Penybont, in 1880. He turned out my brother because he would not vote the way he wanted, and he gave two or three other tenants notice.

54,226. "Can you mention who are the land- "lords or tenants who made the unscrupulous "agreements to which you refer?" You have answered that?—There is one. I have answered that.

54,227. "Do you not know that the old "open land in Llanbister is still unenclosed?"—Well, a portion of it, but a great portion is enclosed.

54,228. "You have said that many houses "are unfit for habitation. Do you mean in- "habited houses?"—Yes, there are a great many that are inhabited at present that are not fit for habitation.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,229. "Can you name them?"—Yes. I do not wish to name them, but I could many of them—not one or two.

54,230. "Did you ever take any steps to "reform them when you were a member of the "sanitary authority?"—Well, they have had notice from the sanitary inspector—some of them.

54,231. Has that been acted upon?—Yes.

54,232. "Who were the men who had notice "to quit because of political reasons?"—My brother was one.

54,233. "Who gave the notice?"—Mr. Severn, Penybont.

54,234. "How do you know notice was given for political reasons?"—Well, it is a very difficult thing to prove, but I will state as far as this, that he was asked if he would vote for the Conservatives, which he would not promise The night before the poll he was asked again not to vote at all. He did go and vote. It was not a vote which he had either, for the house he was living in; it was a vote as a freeholder in Llanbister that he claimed, and he certainly went and exercised it, and because Mr. Severn and his agent saw him going in the Liberal carriage to go to the poll, he had a notice to quit the following year, and three or four others in the same way. I could not say—of course they did not tell him that it was for that, but anyone would draw their own conclusion. I have not the slightest doubt myself that there was any other object in it.

54,235. The next question is really a repetition of the same question. "Who were the men "who lost their places for political reasons?" That you have answered—Yes, I have answered that.

54,236. Do you name any others?—Yes, I could name others, but I would rather not give the names.

54,237. "Who were their masters?" Do you wish to answer that?—I do not wish to mention any name.

54,238. "Were you not the defeated candi- "date at the last county council election?"—I was.

54,239. "Has any application been made to "the sanitary authority for allotments?"—I am not aware; I could not say. Of course under the present law, it is very little use to apply to the sanitary authority for allotments. There is such a process to go through, and then it is not compulsory.

64,240. "Have any similar applications been "made to landlords?"—Well, I could not say.

54,241. "Who were the other men who re- "ceived notice from Mr. Severn?"—Mr. Scandrett and Mr. Evans at the post office formerly; one is dead and the other is alive, and one or two besides those men received notices.

See 54,46 54,444–54,485.

Sir John Llewelyn.

We will see that notice is sent to the parties impugned so that they will have an opportunity of rebutting this evidence.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

(Mr. H. L. Stephen.) The agent happens to be here this afternoon. It will be rebutted to-morrow at Knighton.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 54,256.

Mr. William Powell Price called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,242. What is your name?—William Powell Price.

54,243. Where do you live?—In Brecon.

54,244. What is it you wish to rebut?—In the first place I wish to say I am a solicitor, and simply appear as the solicitor acting in this matter. I have not the least interest in the matter saving as solicitor for mortgagees of the estate. The agreement is entered into in my name even without my knowledge, and I have not, as Mr. Bufton says, signed it. I never saw it until I think, four or five days ago.

54,245. It is not signed by you?—It is not signed by me, and I know nothing about it. I do not in the least repudiate the agreement though, because it is the usual printed form of agreement in use on the estate. It is also the usual printed form in use on the Doldowlod estate, and I think I may say it is the usual form of agreement in use on most estates. The clause is put in in case of bankruptcy for the protection of the landlord, and is never acted upon in any other circumstances.

54,246. I observe that the rent is reserved in advance?—It is so, but that is never acted upon.

54,247. Is it exacted in advance?—Never except in case of bankruptcy. What makes Mr. Bufton say so now is, that a man rather near here has become bankrupt. Mr. Bufton himself was the first man to come and inform me that it was so, and he informed me also that he was a bailiff under the Agricultural Holdings Act, and he asked me should he go in and distrain before I did it myself. I said "No, thank you;" and I had a conference with the tenant and the tenant's solicitor, and I held my hand for about a week without distraining. I did offer the tenant's solicitor to do anything I could for him, I said "I do not want the rent in advance. If you "can pay me the rent down and agree with the "creditors, I am quite satisfied to let things go "on." He asked me also, should he let the land by auction so as to assist the tenant, and I said certainly. I have given him every opportunity, and I believe I am in possession now with the consent of the tenant. I have not sold. I do not mean to sell if I can arrange with the official receiver. The very first person to suggest to me distraining was Mr. Bufton sending his son to the Pump House Hotel.

54,248. Do you wish to say anything else?—I should rather have liked to have given general evidence, but as I think my evidence may be at some length, and I may have to rebut a great deal of the evidence that I have heard here the last couple of days, a great deal of which is absolutely untrue, I think I had better reserve it, and I will attend before you wherever you like, either in London or elsewhere.

54,249. It had better not be in London?—I do not care where it is.

54,250. It is only right and fair that all the evidence between landlords and tenants shall be given where each side will have an opportunity of hearing rebutting evidence?—I will give it wherever you like. For instance, yesterday one witness—it came to my knowledge: I did not happen to be in Court at the time—a man named Walker ———

54,251. Did you send your name in as a witness for to-day?—I did not.

54,252. Then I would propose to the Commissioners that we should take you at the close of the evidence to-day if there is time?—I was only thinking that what I was going to give now is rebutting evidence—rebutting evidence given by Mr. Roger Walker yesterday.

54,253. Any rebutting evidence if you please, but I thought you spoke of general evidence?—I did, but I say that what I am about to mention to you now is rebutting the evidence of Mr. Walker, you heard Mr. Walker yesterday: he lived at a place called Penfthynnon, or rather he did live there, and there is a question in dispute between himself and his landlady Mrs. Stevens ———

See 52,497.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,254. Why did not you give rebutting evidence yesterday?—Because I was not in Court at the time and you know that you had all you could do yesterday to get away.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,255. Not at all; we had our own time. We could have stayed an hour longer?—Well, I was not there late in the evening. He stated among other things that there was no permanent reduction made in the parish of Nantmel. Now, the farms immediately lying between Talcoed, his own place, and Penfthynnon, the place he rented, is where the Llwynbarried estate is. There has been certainly a general permanent reduction made on the Llwynbarried estate of from 20 to 25 per cent. One farm was let at 105*l.* which is now let at 80*l.*, or indeed I think 75*l.*, but I have not the figures by me. Another farm which was let at 120*l.* is let at 95*l.* Another, which we heard of this morning was let at 170*l.* at the time of the zenith of farming success, and now is let at 140*l.* Abatements have been made in all those cases upon the reduced rents of late of 10 per cent. I have nothing more to say. That is all he said affecting the estate in which I am represented, as I say, as solicitor for the mortgagee.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Bufton recalled and further examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,256. Do you wish to make any further statement?—I only just wish to say a word in order to clear myself from what I have been accused by Mr. Powell Price—that I was the first that acquainted him and asked him to put in a distress for the rent. Now, Mr. Griffiths, the tenant, saw that he could not go on, and he went and made an assignment. Mr. Vaughan Vaughan, solicitor, of Builth, was the solicitor for him. In order to keep down and save expenses, Mr. Vaughan asked me if I knew of Mr. Powell Price going in for the rent, to stop him if I could, in order that he might work the thing out without going to the expenses of bankruptcy, and to save Mr. Powell Price putting in a distress for the rent to cause two sales. So I sent my son up there, and asked him if we should get the rent for him, as we would guarantee him the rent. He said, no, he had a license to distrain, and he would distrain himself. However, I heard no more until he sent in the bailiff, and he has had the bailiff in three weeks next Tuesday. I do not know what he is keeping him there for, unless it is to eat up the creditors' money. I am one of the creditors myself, and therefore I feel an interest in it, and I do not think that Mr. Powell Price should go and take the rent—more than what is really due—and the land, and other creditors go without anything.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,256A. Just to clear up one matter. Is the rent for which the distraint is being made, due?—There was six months' rent due last March, and Mr. Powell Price could have had the rent up to March, and the farm without distraining at all.

54,257. Is there anything else you wish to say?—Nothing further, thank you.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examin 54,486.

Mr. James Hamer called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,258. You are Mr. James Hamer, I think?—Yes, I appear as agent for Mr. Percy Severn, of Penybont Hall, and I wish to refer to the charges brought forward by the late witness with reference to the treatment of the tenants at Penybont. First, I will take the case of his brother. In the first place, he was not our tenant at all. He was never our tenant. He occupied one of our houses, but it was as a sub-tenant. I should like to explain the whole circumstances of the case to the Commission. In the village of Penybont, Mr. Evan Evans was a saddler, and he held the post office. We had a house more convenient for the post office vacant, and the old post office required repairing, and he moved into the new house, and carried on the post office there. He retired from the business—in fact he had retired before—from the business of a saddler. After the house was repaired (he was tenant of both), he sublet the old post office to Edward Bufton.

See 54,225A.

54,258A Edward Bufton being a brother of Evan Bufton?—A brother of Evan Bufton.

54,259. Was this in the year 1880?—Well, I believe it was before that year that he occupied it. I forget the date when he moved into the house now; I could tell on referring to the books at home, but I cannot tell from here. He occupied it as a sub-tenant; he was not a tenant direct of Mr. Severn's at all. The coal-porter in the house, an old man, who lived two miles away from the house, and suffered from asthma very badly——

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,260. Without going into this long story, do I understand you to say that Edward Bufton was not evicted by Mr. Severn at all?—He was not evicted by Mr. Severn. He was not Mr. Severn's tenant. Mr. Severn gave Evans, his tenant at the post office, notice to deliver up the house because he wanted it for a man of the name of Thomas Price, who was his coalporter and houseporter, to live in, because it was more convenient. He had to travel two miles in the morning to his work, and he suffered from asthma. Therefore he could not attend—he could not be there at his usual time. We deny entirely that it was done for political purposes.

54,261. I was just coming to that. Do you know anything of the circumstances under which Edward Bufton was turned out of his holding?—It was to put our workman in.

54,262. It was not by Mr. Severn at all, because he was not Mr. Severn's tenant?—Well, Mr. Severn gave Evans, the old postmaster, notice for Bufton to go out naturally, but we wanted the house for Price to live in. Mr. Bufton stated that we had given Evans at the Post Office notice to quit his holding. That is entirely wrong. He remained our tenant up to the end of his days, and at his death Mr. Severn moved in the matter to obtain an appointment for his daughter.

54,241. With reference to Scandrett, it was not for political purposes at all that he had notice. He retired from business. There was nothing whatever about political bias in the matter. Mr. Scandrett asked Mr. Severn to give him notice. He had been on the estate for many years, and he did not want to give notice himself, and he asked Mr. Severn to send him notice.

54,263. You deny that politics had anything to do with the eviction?—I deny it thoroughly.

54,264. Do you know anything about the other instance he mentioned; about the gardener

54,149. to Miss Severn?—I do not. I shall make inquiries this afternoon. I cannot speak of that, because I have nothing to do with that estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,265. Do you know whether Mr. Severn

54,234. called on Mr. Bufton's brother to ask him to vote for the Conservative candidate?—I do not think he did. I asked him myself. I may say this, that Mr. Bufton and I are on thoroughly friendly terms. He is a shoemaker in the village, and ever since he has been my tradesman. I gave him an order the other day for half-a-dozen pairs of boots. There is nothing between Mr. Bufton and me; we are perfectly friendly.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,266. But he said it was Mr. Severn who called on him?—Mr. Severn, I do not think, ever spoke to him. I do not believe he ever did. I know I did myself. I asked him if he would vote for the Conservative candidate; but Mr. Severn, I am pretty sure, never spoke to him on the matter. I would not say positively that he did not, but it is my impression that he never did.

54,267. Did you ask Mr. Bufton's brother, then not to vote at all?—I never asked him not to vote, but I canvassed him on behalf of the Conservative candidate. I may say that on Mr. Severn's estate politics or religion has nothing whatever to do with it. The maid-servants in the house are, several of them, members of Nonconformist chapels. The tenants—the greater part of them—are members of Nonconformist denominations, and they have been on the estate for generations. Mr. Severn did not think of giving evidence at all in the matter unless his name was brought forward, but now, as his name has been brought forward; I can say that the friendship between landlord and tenant is, I think, everything that can be desired. We have no complaints. The only fault that we find is that our tenants leave us and take larger farms.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,268. Do you deny that this Mr. Bufton had been asked to stop at home and not to vote?—I never asked him. I would not say whether Mr. Severn asked him, but I believe not. I will inquire this evening, and, if necessary, I will appear before you to-morrow.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 54,420.

Mr. William Jones called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,269. You are Mr. William Jones, Dolberthog?—Yes.

54,270. What is it you wish to say?—I beg to inform you of the nature of my evidence. Having been farming the whole of my days in the mountainous districts of Wales I should like to say something in this direction. Taking things in general, I feel certain that the land is let at too high a price, especially for the last 12 years, which have been very bad, with the exception of the year 1889 and the year 1890. We farmers feel the want of some court of appeal to bring our complaints and grievances to, and I am under the strong impression that a land court will be a great benefit to Wales. Renting a mountain sheep farm, and having nearly 1,000 sheep on it, and the hills being all open, in some directions for 50 miles, I am of the firm opinion that it would be a great advantage to us to have the hills inclosed, and for this to be compulsory. We who hold sheep farms suffer great losses annually where the sheep have to remain on the mountains summer and winter. We have, on an average, as many as 20 per cent. of the lambs lost. If a Small Holdings Bill were to be passed, and for hill farmers to get farms in lowlands, then the sheep could be brought down during the severe winter months, and then there would be no such loss, but there would be a chance of saving the lambs. Wool is in a very depressed state. The average price of 40 years would be about 10*d.* of my class of wool; it is now 45 per cent. below that. Those are about all my grievances.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,271. Where is Dolberthog ?—It is about a mile from this place.

54,272. You have a good many sheep, have you not ?—Yes.

54,273. What you want is some place to take them down to in the winter ?—Yes, I have got that. This sheep farm is up on the top of the Brecknockshire mountains.

54,274. What is wanted for those who have hill farms is to be able to take their sheep down ?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,275. I can quite understand that. Dolberthog is your lowland farm ?—Yes, it is.

54,276. And your sheep farm is on the mountains ?—Yes.

54,277. Where is it ?—It is just where the Birmingham Corporation's place is.

Professor Rhys.

54,278. Is your sheep farm one of those that have been sold ?—No.

54,279. Is it near that part ?—It is adjoining.

54,280. What you want is a land court, is it not ?—Yes, I feel that would be very beneficial.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,281. How do you think you would benefit by a land court ?—We should appeal for a reduction.

54,282. In the rent ?—Yes.

54,283. You think that one of the functions of a land court should be to fix the rent between the landlord and the tenant ?—That is exactly what I think.

54,284. That is, provided that they fail to agree ?—Yes.

54,285. Should the land court do anything else besides the fixing of rents ?—I should like to see that we got a guarantee not to disturb us if we meant to fertilize the soil in a good way.

54,286. You want fixity of tenure ?—Yes.

54,287. Should it be also one of the functions of the court to settle any of the claims that might be made by a landlord against a tenant, or by a tenant against a landlord ?—Yes, I would have no objection to that, for their agreements are very hard upon us.

54,288. What is the size of your farm, Dolberthog ?—170 acres.

54,289. Do you not bring some of the mountain sheep down from the mountain at the yeaning season ?—Yes.

54,290. But the lowland farm is not large enough ?—Yes it is. I bring this forward because of the large hill walks that have nothing ; I feel for my brothers and comrades on the mountains. I have been living there most of my life, and it grieved me to see the lambs die.

54,291. Have those farmers nothing but pure mountain land ?—Nothing at all. A few have little lowland, but the lakes now are taking the the best portions to be submerged.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,292. Of course it is a great disadvantage. How do you suggest that these mountains should be inclosed—who should bear the expense ?—Those people that would get it—the owners of the parish.

54,293. The owners of the mountain ?—Yes, the owners.

54,294. Do you think that the tenants would be prepared to pay a certain amount of interest ? —Oh, yes, they could well afford it.

54,295. What rate of interest ?—3*l.* per cent., I should say.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,296. Did this mountain at any time belong to the adjoining farms in the district, where they had some lowlands ?—No—very few, that is. I volunteered for the first, I think, to try for it.

54,297. But I mean, in years past, did it not belong to some of the lowland districts, and had they not rented it under the mountain at one time ?—No ; these are large sheep walks. They never go further. Sheep are never hardly brought to the fold—only to shear and ear-mark them.

54,298. What sort of fence do you suggest should be put up for the fold. Have you any stones available ?—No, no stones.

54,299. Thick fences ?—It is marsh land.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,300. You have wires, I suppose ?—Yes, wires.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,301. Wire would not give much shelter for the sheep, would it ?—No, but we should take them away from these mountains in the winter time.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,302. Are you a freeholder or a tenant-farmer ?—A tenant-farmer.

54,303. May I ask what rent you pay ?—I pay for Dolberthog about 80*l.* in my agreement.

54,304. And for the sheep walk ?—No, that is another contract with another person.

54,305. That is a different contract. What is the rent of that ?—That would be about 40*l.*

54,306. Between the two you pay about 120*l.*?—Yes.

54,307. Do you get any abatement upon that ? —Yes. I have had a permanent drop in Dolberthog of 10*l.* per cent., and 10*l* per cent. abatement.

54,308. If you had a land court, that would interfere in regard to your rent, what would happen if some one of your neighbours were to come and say, " Oh, but I am perfectly willing to " give that amount of rent?"—I should say that the landlord should not take it as long as the present tenant would be a responsible person —as long as the present tenant would be capable.

54,309. Just so. How would the land court know whether you were capable of paying it or not. I only want to get at what is in your mind about it?—It depends upon who the land court would be.

54,310. Of course, I take it that everybody would wish that if such a court existed, it should be an impartial court?—Yes, impartial.

54,311. How would you obtain an impartial court?—By having the parish council, the district council, and the county council, united.

54,312. You think that they would be impartial?—Yes.

54,313. Do politics enter at all into your county council elections here?—Yes, they are on the move.

54,314. You mean the political agencies are active?—Yes, quite so, they are.

54,315. A suggestion has been made that in any arbitration court, the Board of Agriculture should have the power of nominating. Do you think that that would be better than local influence?—No, I believe not.

54,316. You think there ought to be local knowledge?—Yes, exactly.

54,317. How can you dissociate that local knowledge from prejudice?—The parish council would be in the parish where the court ought to be held, and there are no better men than they who are brought up on the soil; they can certainly beat any agent in the world.

54,318. You think, then, that local knowledge is essential?—Yes.

54,319. I quite agree with you in that. But I want to know what is in your mind as to the constitution of an impartial court; supposing that you obtained that impartial court, what is to prevent their taking the best bid that they can find?—I do not quite understand you.

54,320. Supposing that a good, substantial, farmer said that the 120*l.* which you were paying was not too high, and that he was willing to give that himself, what is to prevent the land court giving the farm to him?—It was not unreasonable at the time I took it; it was very moderate.

54,321. May I ask how long you have been there?—13 years at this one taking.

54,322. I suppose the rent is arranged upon an average of years, good and bad?—Yes, it is.

54,323. Was it raised upon you in the better years?—No; it was rented me when it was a good and prosperous time, and I agreed with it.

54,324. You agreed with it at the time?—Yes.

54,325. But you have had a bad season since?—Very bad.

54,326. And in consequence of that, there has been an abatement made?—Yes; but not enough.

54,327. Supposing that this judicial rent was fixed ——?—I should say a sliding scale one.

54,328. Very well. How would you slide?—Well, slide up and slide down.

54,329. In accordance with what basis?—The price of agricultural stock.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,330. The prices of agricultural stock?—Yes, of sheep, and so on.

54,331. You think, then, that this rent which is to be fixed by a land court should be not always the same, but should go upon a sliding scale?—Yes.

54,332. Then the average would be taken?—Yes.

54,333. And you would be content to go up in the good years if you came down in the bad years?—Quite so.

54,334. I quite agree with that. But is it not your experience of sliding scales that people are always content so long as it slides in their direction, and do not wish it to slide in the other?—Yes, quite so; but the landlord and agent will look to us when it is their side, and let us look to it when it is our side.

54,335. May I ask you a question with regard to disturbance; you said that you wished that the arrangements should be subject to no disturbance; how will you obtain that fixity of tenure?—I did not mention that.

54,336. Yes you did, I think. I took down your own words, that you wished there should be no disturbance?—No removal out of a farm without a just cause.

54,337. Is not that obtainable now under a lease. Mr. Campbell gave us very interesting evidence some little time back this morning, and he said he would not take a farm under any circumstances unless he was protected by a lease?—Yes, I heard him. I am quite agreeable on any estate to take it annually. See 53,692.

54,338. You are quite agreeble to take it annually?—Yes, quite agreeable, upon conditions.

54,339. On what conditions?—Well, a sliding scale.

54,340. But you are not safe then from disturbance. If you have only got it on an annual agreement you are not safe from disturbance?—I should be willing to risk that. We are at their mercy now.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I must say that if I were a farmer I should agree rather with Mr. Campbell; I should like to try to protect myself by a lease.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,341. You say that the farmers suffer great losses from sheep—that they have lost sheep on the mountain?—Yes, they lose 20 per cent. of their lambs annually on the average.

54,342. Do you think that if there was a plantation on the mountain, that is, for shelter that they would suffer such losses?—In the hills it would dry in the spring-time; the grass would dry, and they would die from starvation. The ewes would grow too weak to maintain the lambs.

54,343. But if they had shelter it would be something for them?—Well, shelter would not supply their need. There have been some plantations planted many a time, but the plantations very soon die on the hills, owing to the severity of the storms.

54,344. Is that the case when they are planted in the most sheltered spots?—Then they are not required, if they are in a sheltered spot.

54,345. Of course, to some extent, that is true. It has never occurred to the tenants to apply for something of that sort to shelter their flocks, I suppose?—No, it has not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,346. I did not learn from you what your flock is. How many is your flock?—I could not tell exactly; I have not counted my lambs this time.

54,347. How many ewes?—I generally have about 200 lambs.

54,348. And your principal point is that you think that the hill farmers ought always to have a lowland farm, besides the mountain pasture, to bring down and winter their stock upon?—Yes, that is just what I am appealing for.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,349. Are yours small mountain sheep?—Yes, the very smallest.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,349A. Is not this loss you have mentioned caused very often by there being too many sheep kept?—No, it is not that; it is the seasons that kills them—the hard frost kills all that long grass that grows on these mountains, till the sheep die of hunger.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,350. Of course, if you had a farm at the bottom, where you could bring the sheep down in the winter, you would keep a better class of sheep, could you not?—Yes, a little. I suppose the wether sheep are to remain up there, once they are a year old.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM SMITH called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,351. Where do you live?—Garth.

54,352. You wish to rebut some evidence that was given the day before yesterday?—Yes, at Builth.

See 52,386–52,388.

54,353. What was the witness's name?—Thomas Powell. He complained that the rent was too high on his farm, and I wish to say that the rents on the Garth estate are not high. There is a reduction made of 19½ per cent.; 12½ per cent. is permanent reduction. We allowed this tenant the permanent reduction, and we would have allowed him the temporary reduction if he had paid up his rent. He was not allowed the 7 per cent. The condition of that allowance was that if they paid the rents up in full they would be allowed the 7 per cent. reduction. This tenant farmed about 220 acres of land, and he never had any money to farm it, and the farm was getting in a deplorable state. The late Mr. Maitland spoke to him on several occasions, and advised him to give it up and take a smaller farm, and he agreed to do so at that time, but for some reason or other he held on until he owed three half-years' rent, and owing to the new Act, if I allowed that time to expire we could not claim—we cannot claim for more than one. We were quite willing that he should pay a part of it, but we were not willing to get out beyond the time, so that we could not recover any. We were quite willing to assist him in every way, but he made no attempt to pay, and the farm went on in a deplorable state, and there was no chance of his making any money; it was only going from bad to worse. He farmed a farm of over 220 acres. We took one field from him, and we allowed him 10*s.*, an acre for it. He pays about 8*s.* an acre for the rest of the farm, but we allowed him 10*s.* and thought that would help him. It was an out-of-the-way holding that we took from him and put on to another farm. He paid at least 8*l.* or 9*l.* for the two fields that he had, which was something over 8*s.* an acre. The farms on the Garth estate and the Madoc estate are let much about the same. They are let now about the same as they were 40 years ago. They were risen at one time, when we had the railway, but they have been since reduced, and taking the farms on the Garth estate, they are much about the same that they were 40 or 50 years ago. With regard to the machinery, he stated about the machinery that he was not allowed anything for it. His brother put up a water wheel with about 150 yards of spindles to work a machine. Samuel, the incoming tenant, who gave evidence before you at Builth, has taken this farm, and he has found out that the machinery will not work. Thomas Powell was told distinctly that if the machinery was in good working order he would be paid every penny for the machinery by the incoming tenant. Mrs. Maitland is perfectly willing to pay the full value of the machinery by valuation, and the reason that the matter is not settled is that the incoming tenant, who is a shrewd man, says "you will never put that machinery to "work, because I could have seen whether it "will work or not, and if you will wait until "October; if it will work properly, you will be "paid for the machinery." That is the reason why the machinery has not been paid for. It is Mrs. Maitland's wish to pay for all improvements that were done on her estate.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,354. I dare say, Mr. Smith, you will see justice done between the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant?—I will.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,355. You are the estate agent?—Yes.

54,356. You will undertake to see justice done?—I will, of course.

54,357. Of course, it is only fair to the incoming tenant that he should pay for useful machinery, but not for useless machinery?—Yes, just so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,358. How did you come to let this farm to the man if he had no capital?—His father occupied the farm in the first instance; his father died. His father worked out the farm; I am sorry to say he got as much out of the farm as he possibly could, by over-cropping it, and then the two sons took the farm, William and Thomas Powell. William Powell went and lived in the town, and he did some horse-dealing, and he took his share out of this farm, and left Thomas Powell in possession of it. We were very sorry for this man; he was left without any money to farm that place, and he could not possibly farm the extent of land with the capital that he had. We did everything to assist him to get a smaller farm, and if we had had a smaller farm he should have had it at once, but he had too little capital to farm the farm.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,359. How did you give him notice in 1893 for an advance of rent. That is what he has stated—that he had notice to advance his rent to 90*l.*?—That is perfectly wrong. Mrs. Maitland would be quite willing, if there was any chance of his farming, and all the family of the Maitlands would be quite willing, to make a reduction in any way to meet the tenant. We have done so on several occasions.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

54,360. What is the present rent to the tenant?—It is either 80*l.* or 85*l.*, I do not know which.

54,361. He has given us the rent as 80*l.*, and he stated that he had paid 90*l.*?—I think it is 85*l.*, but I will not say positively.

54,362. You would hardly be justified in requiring 10*l.*, more from him if he was in those circumstances?—It will take us, I do not know how many years, to put the farm in proper condition; it has been totally neglected. There is no doubt that this man ought not to have been allowed to farm that farm for the last eight or ten years.

54,363. But is it not the fact that a tenant who is not able to pay his rent in full is the one that requires most abatement. You did not give him an abatement at all, because he did not pay his rent in full?—No, it was not because of that. There was no attempt to farm; there was no farming there, and abatement was of no avail whatever to this tenant.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,364. Still, he required it the more. That is all I have to ask.

The witness withdrew.

Dr. Richard Harding called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,365. You wish to make some statement?—Yes, with regard to the question of allotments and small holdings, as I am chairman of the Small Holdings and Allotments Committee of the county. I think some question arose as to dairy instructions. I am also chairman of the Technical Instruction Committee, and I think, perhaps, I might give you some explanation.

54,366. Yes, it will be very interesting to us. You are a county councillor?—Yes. I am also medical officer of health for a very large area in Radnorshire.

54,367. What can you tell us about the Small Holdings Act?—I should say first of all that no application for allotments has been made whatever to the committee of the county council—not a single application. Nine applications I think, as Lord Ormathwaite said, have been made for small holdings. They are principally for pasture land—with one exception. All the applications for pasture land were by people who had some trade that they were engaged in, and who wished to keep a cow, or, perhaps, a horse, or something of that kind, but none of them were distinctly agricultural labourers. The only instance of a large holding was in the case of a man who was leaving his occupation. He wanted from 25 to 30 acres in a particular neighbourhood, with a house of a certain size, which we were unable to get for him. That application was withdrawn, but in all the other instances we have been enabled to grant the application. I will not say in all, but in most of them we have been able to meet them. At present, I think, one or two or two or three, are in abeyance; but they are quite hopeful of settlement amicably. In most instances the plan we have adopted is this, I have taken upon myself as chairman, by direction of the committee, to ask a neighbouring landlord if he would meet the applicants, and he has, without exception, said he was perfectly willing if the tenants would agree. We have had, I am bound to say, a little more difficulty with the tenants. By tact we have overcome this, and we have fixed the rent in this way, that the tenant and the would-be small-holder have each nominated a man, and have settled the rent by arbitration.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,368. You are not medical officer, I think, for the county, but for a large area of it?—For a large area within the county, and also a part of Herefordshire.

54,369. May I ask whether that includes the district which was spoken of a short time ago by a witness, Mr. Bufton?—No, it does not, but I am concerned with a large portion of that district. I beg your pardon, a large portion of the district he mentioned is included in the area. I think he said from Rhayader to Forest Inn, so far as I remember.

See 54,096. 54,370. He spoke of a large number of houses?—Certainly From Forest Inn to half-way to Rhayader is within my district.

54,371 Do the houses that he spoke of as not being fit for human habitation come within your district?—I do not know of such houses. My sanitary authority have worked very well. We have adopted the Infectious Diseases Notification Act, and the Prevention Act, and I am bound to say that if any such cases as those came within their knowledge they would act promptly, With regard to technical instruction, I think you asked about dairying.

54,372. Yes?—Perhaps I should begin by saying that our share of the liquor money, which was asked about this morning, was 700*l.* a year.

54,373. That is about the same as a penny rate?—That is so. The first county council devoted 600*l.* a year of that for the purposes of intermediate education, but the 100*l.* was to be voted to technical agricultural instruction, and that 100*l.* was given to Aberyswyth College for that particular purpose, It was applied in the first year to lectures upon manure and manuring, to a certain extent, and partially to dairy classes. Last year it was applied, or it would have been applied if the classes would have filled, to dairy classes; but out of five centres fixed upon as suitable, only two filled, with this result, that there is at present, I think, 49*l.* or 50*l.* unexpended, and we, as a committee, had to ask our county council the other day what they proposed to do, and what they would like us to do, and what they would like us to do with the money this year, and I am sorry to say they very promptly told us that they would prefer in future to put it to the rates. Therefore we have no grant, and we shall have no grant in future, for technical instruction.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,374. Were these lectures given by Professor Parry?—They were.

54,375. Were they pretty successful?—I do not think they were.

54,376. Was the attendance good?—It was not. The adult attendance was certainly not good.

54,377. They did not take an interest in it?—No. I do not think the teaching of adults simply by lectures of that kind on manurial subjects is of much value, or is acceptable to the adult population of Radnorshire.

54,378. With regard to the lectures upon dairying and butter making, were they pretty good?—Speaking for my neighbourhood, I should say they were. Of the five centres only two filled, one of them being in my own neighbourhood, and the next, Penybout, and the latter class was continued for double the time that it was previously arranged for, because the others had failed, and we also had a demonstration. There was a demonstration in butter making by the pupils at the Agricultural Show, which happened to be held at the same time in Penybout.

54,379. What was the result?—I am bound to say the result was that it was interesting to visitors, but the class of people we hoped to benefit did not seem to pay much attention to it.

54,380. It is not a good dairy district?—It is not.

54,381. And that might be the reason that they did not take so much interest?—I think a great many people are prejudiced against new ideas; but if the proof of the pudding was in the eating, we were able to sell our butter at a much better price than the ordinary butter was sold at.

54,382. You think that if it were adopted everywhere it would be advantageous?—I would hardly say that it would be advantageous in every way. I should like the teaching to be in this way, that instead of having cream imported the teachers should go round to the existing dairies, and teach the dairymaids not only to make butter with certain utensils and in certain places, with everything advantageous, but in the places in which they are bound to make it.

54,383. But they generally get the cream from the district as they go along, do they not?—This came from St. Clear's. It came daily, and it was very hot weather, and we had to get ice. I took upon myself to get a big supply of cold water and ice, which I need hardly tell you is impracticable in many places in Radnorshire.

54,384. Did you ever try the classes in the evenings?—Are you speaking of the dairy classes?

54,385. Yes, dairy classes at 7 o'clock in the evening?—No, we had none. We had them in the early morning.

54,386. In the evening the attendance is very much better, and the weather is cooler as a rule for making butter than earlier?—I speak for my own district: we had no difficulty, and I hope we shall be able to spend the very little money which the council has left to us by sending two of those pupils on with scholarships to take a further course.

54,387. Yes, we had the same thing in our county, but it is very expensive, and many farmers cannot even afford to do that. Do the pupils when they get to their homes adopt the system that they have been taught?—I can only speak for my own neighbourhood; in a few instances they have, and all the people in the neighbourhood have spoken with great favour of the system which was taught to them, and its results.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,388. Are the rooms in the farmhouses suitable for dairy purposes generally?—You are speaking of dairies.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,389. Yes, places in which they are carried on?—No, I should hardly say that they were suitable; in many instances I should say that they were not fitted for dairying purposes.

54,390. So that really there is not much encouragement in that way to carry on the work of a dairy on an extensive scale?—There is no encouragement. In the first place, there is no sale on an extensive scale for dairy produce in Radnorshire.

54,391. Except in centres like this at Llandrindod. There would be a good market here, I suppose?—That is only at certain times of the year. In the winter it is practically nil. You cannot have a dairy farm for only some months of the year.

54,392. But you see the season of Llandrindod commences in May, and lasts until late in the autumn?—Yes. I do not quite see how people in my neighbourhood, for instance, are to get their butter here; there is no railway communication.

54,393. Yes, but I am talking about those who can?—Yes. I should say, speaking generally all over the county, there is no sale even in Llandrindod sufficient for any dairying to be carried on on a large scale.

54,394. We were told by Miss Joseph that she put down butter in casks. Is that the custom in your neighbourhood?—In my neighbourhood it is more often put down in steens. Those are earthenware pans.

54,395. Holding 40 or 50 lbs.?—Not so much—smaller.

54,396. What do they do there?—They keep it until the butter is scarce. They sell their butter at a good price, and eat that which is potted in the summer, if you follow me. In my neighbourhood, they sell the butter when it is at a good price, and eat what they potted in the summer. I will take the ordinary farmhouse in which butter is made in the summer, when there is no sale for it. As I know, last year or the year before, a great deal of butter was taken to market and brought back. They were offered 8*d.* and 8½*d.* a pound for it, and instead of selling it at that price it was potted down, and it was eaten by the farmers themselves in the house in the winter. The butter potted down was eaten, and they sold then what they made, it being at a better price. The butter they cannot sell at a good price is kept for their own consumption.

54,397. With respect to the lectures on manures, were they sufficiently elementary to be appreciated by the people?—No, I think they were decidedly too chemical, if you understand what I mean. There were too many chemical symbols employed, and they were not, as you say, sufficiently elementary for the adult mind to grasp, and the adult mind in Radnorshire is very slowly moved.

54,398. I suppose the Radnorshire farmers would look over a hedge if you had any field experiments?—I do not quite follow.

54,399. Have you had any field experiments?—None whatever.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,400. I thought perhaps, if they would not attend a lecture they might look at a plot of land?—I should like to say that having given this money to Aberystwyth we were practically in the hands of Aberystwyth as to what they would give us.

54,401. Yes; but I suppose Aberystwyth would accept any suggestion you made them?—I have no doubt they would, but unfortunately we are deprived of the power of making them now.

54,402. The course we take in Montgomeryshire is to suggest what we require, and then they afterwards draw out a scheme and submit it to the county council for their sanction. We are allowed to make any alterations we think best. Have any private gentlemen carried out any experiments on their home farms?—Yes, I think in one or two instances there were experiments, Professor Parry's instructions were followed.

54,403. Were the results published?—I do not think they were—not in my county. I believe they were published in this neighbourhood, or the next county.

54,404. So that really the neighbouring farmers would not derive any benefit from them?—Practically, I should say, from the manure lectures, no benefit whatever was derived. I believe someone rather cynically said that the manure agents derived a benefit.

Professor Rhys.

54,405. Do I understand you to say that there is no sale in winter for fresh butter here at all?—No, I did not say that; I said practically the sale was nil here. Of course there is a population in Llandrindod in the winter.

54,406. Till when do you consider the winter continues—till the beginning of the season, so to speak?—Yes, I should say so.

54,407. I think I found during the last few days that it answered the purpose of people to send butter here from St. Clear's?—I think they are, perhaps, prejudiced in Llandrindod against Radnorshire butter. I know we had no difficulty in selling them our school butter, and I believe if we had not sold them that, they would very likely have gone out of the country for other butter.

54,408. There are at least 600 people here during the winter?—Yes, there are more, but there are farms in the immediate neighbourhood which would supply sufficient for them.

54,409. Do you personally approve of this policy of the county council, in not voting any money for the teaching?—I did not vote on it.

54,410. You do not approve of it?—I do not approve of it. I can hardly be expected to as chairman of the committee. I asked them to abolish my committee at once. I am bound to say that I think it would have been fairer at first if, instead of devoting nearly the whole of the whisky money or liquor money, 600*l.*, to intermediate education, they had devoted less to that and more, or at any rate, some portion of that, to permanent agricultural instruction in the county.

54,411. Yes, I think they ought to take some means of teaching people like those of Llandrindod to appreciate the products of Radnorshire ?—That is so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,412. But you could have an agricultural side to an intermediate scheme ?—Yes, but unfortunately we are obliged to be in the hands of the Commissioners as to an intermediate scheme, and it does not seem, if they are to have their way, that they will allow what we wish.

54,413. But they allow some latitude as to the subjects to be taught in the intermediate schools ?—They do. I think we have practically 2,500*l.* lying idle, waiting for the Charity Commissioners to make up their minds, and to say, after we have found the money, how we shall spend it.

54,414. But it is not lost ; if you have the money it will accumulate while it is not being used ?—I should say it is a great loss : there is one generation at least of boys and girls who might have the benefit of it.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,415. You would like to see the county council moving in the matter ?—I do not think it is the fault of the county council ; it is the fault of the Charity Commissioners, who have had our proposals for a scheme before them since 1892, and have not yet formulated these into a scheme.

54,416. Where is the obstruction ?—It is with the Charity Commissioners.

I should like to say one thing about rating. You heard something with regard to that subject. I am speaking generally for the whole area which I know of. The average rating for the year is not more than 1*s.* 10*d.* to 2*s.* 2*d.* unless there is the exceptional case of a school board, but we are very hardly pressed upon in Radnorshire by one fact, that we have no Union wholly within our own boundary, and therefore we have largely to contribute rates to the poor of neighbouring counties, which affects us in many instances very harshly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,417. Your rates, then, are not high compared with other parts of Wales ?—I should say our rates are not, usually. In my neighbourhood the rates of my union have been practically 10*d.* half yearly, that is 1*s.* 8*d.* a year.

54,418. Did that cover everything ?—That covered everything ; it covered the county rate and everything. This year it is rather more.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Knighton.

SIXTY-THIRD DAY.

The Assembly Rooms, Knighton, Radnorshire, 12th May 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, BART. (IN THE CHAIR).

Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.
Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. J. E. VINCENT recalled and further examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,419. I believe you wish to hand in some tables?—I will hand in a table of abatements and reductions, and some observations as to the history of rent on 22 estates in Breconshire, the acreage of which is 78,155 acres. Also of 14 estates in Radnorshire, the acreage of which is 71,977. I do not know whether the Commission would care for them or not, but there are a couple of agreements which have not yet been put in. The first is on the Marquis of Camden's Breconshire estates, and the other is on Mr. T. Wood's Gwernyfed estate. Of course you can take them or not as you wish.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

[The witness handed in the following tables.]

RADNORSHIRE.

LIST of ABATEMENTS and REDUCTIONS.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to the History of Rents.
Mrs. E. R. Banks and W. H. Banks, Ridgebourne, Kington.	(In Radnor and Brecon 1,875 acres.)	10 per cent. has been returned to tenant on several farms. On a few a year's or half-year's rent has been written off.	Since 1877 some rents have been reduced 25 per cent., others less,	The estate as a whole has not been re-valued, but most of the rents have been reduced. No rents have been raised except for additional buildings upon which the tenant pays a per-centage.
Mrs. S. J. Bryan -	Crumgoed. (1,080 acres.)	We have on many occasions given something back, but cannot say what per-centage. All has depended on the need of the case.	Since 1877 the rents have been permanentlyreduced 15 to 20 per cent.	—
J. P. Chesment-Severn.	Penybont Hall. (In Radnor and Montgomery 10,000 acres.)	10 per cent. abatement has been granted in the years 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1892.	Since 1877 rents have been permanently reduced in five cases—average 12 per cent.	The estate has not been re-valued within the last 100 years. During the last half century practically no rents have been raised; interest has been charged for draining and fencing under enclosure awards, which the landlord has got to keep in good repair.
John Corrie Carter, Cefnfaes, Rhayader.	Upper Cefnfaes. (39 acres.)	I have made no abatements, except where I have by arrangement taken small portions into my own hands from the tenant for plantations, &c.	—	—

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to the History of Rents.
Mrs. Gibson-Watt, Doldowlod, Rhayader.	Doldowlod, Rock House, Boatside, and New Radnor. (In Radnor and Brecon, 9,500 acres.)	An abatement of 10 to 15 per cent. was made from 1880 to 1885; 15 to 20 per cent. from 1886 to 1889 according to age of tenancies; 5 to 10 per cent. from 1889 to 1891.	In 1892 all farms were let tithe free and a permanent reduction of 5 to 10 per cent., made and a further temporary abatement of 10 per cent. allowed which we have reason to believe, according to age of tenancies, satisfied all the tenants.	The estate has not been revalued within the last 50 years. During that period rents have been raised in a few cases where change of tenancy has taken place, but in each case the farms now let at 5 per cent. below the valuation made.
George Augustus Haig, Pen Ithon.	Pen Ithon. (From 2,400 to 2,500 acres.)	I have frequently made abatements of 10 and 20 per cent., and during the last three years have given maize—usually one sack of maize for about 10*l.* of rental. But there is not a farm on my property at the rent it brought in up to 1879. Besides this I now give lime free and do a great deal of fencing, while before 1879 the tenants all kept up their own fencing, buying wood out of their own pockets.	There is not a farm on my property that has not been reduced 20 per cent. and many farms very much more. Pen Cwm was once let at 550*l.*, then at 450*l.*, now at 250*l.*; Ddulley Bank used to let at 225*l.*, it is now let in two divisions for 130*l.* (90*l.* and 40*l.*); Gorse used to let at 40*l.*, now for 28*l.*; Lower Llaithdre used to let at 56*l.*, now at 40*l.* with 6 acres more land. The farms, owing to the growth of the plantations, ought to have improved in rent as shelter is valuable, and had prices of stock and other things remained the same they would have improved.	Undoubtedly my rents have been raised. They were 454*l.* and 30*l.* when I bought, but for each 1*l.* spent in purchase money I have spent 3*l.* in permanent improvements—planting, enclosing, draining, road-making, new and greatly extended farmbuildings of all sorts. I was spending my own money and therefore reckoned no interest on the money I spent. Had I been spending borrowed money the income received would not have paid one-third of the interest.
Sir H. E. F. Lewis, Baronet, Harpton Court, Kington.	Harpton Court. (10,000 acres.)	From March 25th, 1886, to September 29th, 1888; also from September 29th, 1891, to September 29th, 1892, the tenants were allowed 10 per cent. reduction on their rents.	Permanent reductions of rent amounting to 610*l.* a year have been made.	The estate was valued in 1864, the result being, as far as I know, a slight increase of the rental. During the last half century, in a few instances, on a change of tenancy rents were raised, but have been again reduced.
P. C. Milbank, Norton, Presteigne.	Norton. (3,000 acres)	An abatement of 10 per cent. was granted last year and a promise of 15 per cent. for two more.	Since 1877 some rents have been permanently reduced.	The estate was valued last year when I purchased the property; the result is that it reduces receipts very slightly.
Lord Ormathwaite, Eywood, Titley, Herefordshire.	Llandewy, Cefnllys, and Gladestry. (13,500 acres.)	Ten per cent. abatement was made to all tenants in 1887, 1888, and 1892.	The rent-roll since my succeeding has been reduced by 246*l.*	The estate, to the best of my belief, has not been re-valued during the last 50 years. I have in no single case raised a rent since I have been in possession. In two instances, where the old tenants gave up farms to take larger ones in Shropshire, I received more from the new tenants than from the old.
Mrs. G. H. Philips, Abbey Cwm Hir.	Abbey Cwm Hir. (7,750 acres.)	Very liberal allowances have been made, varying from 20 to 5 per cent. for many years.	No reductions are required as the estate is very justly rented.	The estate has been revalued, but the valuation was not acted upon. No rents have been raised during the last half century.
Honourable Horace Plunkett, M.P., Mount Street, London.	Beguildy. (1,300 acres.)	A per-centage has been returned to some of the tenants during last three years.	The rent has been reduced about 5 per cent. since 1885.	—
Charles Coltman Rogers, Stanage Park, Knighton.	Stanage Park, Cwmgilla. (3,700 acres.)	Abatements of 10 per cent. were made on all rents due September 29th, 1879; 10 per cent. on rents due September 29th, 1885; the latter was continued half-yearly till March 25th, 1888, when rents were all reconsidered and some reductions made permanent.	Since 1877, nearly all rents have been permanently reduced, amounting to 320*l.*, or about 11½ per cent. on the rental.	The estate has not been re-valued. No rents have been raised since 1878.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to the History of Rents.
Major-General J. R. and Mrs. Sladen, Rhydoldog, Rhayader.	Rhydoldog. (4,823 acres.)	Five per cent. returned whenever depression of farming interest made it necessary. For the last two years, from 7 to 10 per cent. returned.	One small farm has been reduced.	The estate was re-valued in 1874 or 1875.
W. W. Thomas-Moore, Old Hall, Llanvihangel.	Old Hall, Maesgwynne and other small estates (2,960 acres.)	Ten per cent. of the last half-year's rent.	Permanent reduction of rent-roll 245*l.*	The estate has not been re-valued. Rents have not been raised within the last 20 years.

BRECONSHIRE.

LIST of ABATEMENTS and REDUCTIONS.

Earl of Ashburnham, Dover Street, W.	Talgarth, 2,533 acres	15 per cent. in 1877 and 1888; 5 per cent. on one half-year in 1889; and 15 per cent. on one half-year in 1892.	One farm rented in 1873 at 600*l.* was reduced to 500*l.* in 1877; another rented in 1882 at 90*l.* was reduced in 1886 to 70*l.*	No rents have been raised except when land adjoining the town of Talgarth has come on hand by the death of tenants, and has been let in plots for accommodation purposes.
Marquis of Camden	Brecknockshire estates, 7,500 acres.	10 per cent. in 1880 and 1881, 1885–8 and 1892. 15 per cent. in 1893.	Rent of four farms reduced from total of 654*l.* to 555*l.*	Estate was re-valued in 1856, and some of the rents were then raised as found necessary. Since then the rents have been adjusted from time to time on changes of tenancy and the nominal rental is now about 7½ per cent. above that of 1856, before the valuation then made.
Mrs. E. R. Banks and W. H. Banks, Ridgebourne, Kington.	(In Radnor and Brecon, 1,875 acres.)	10 per cent. has been returned to tenant on several farms. On a few, a year's, or half-year's, rent has been written off.	Since 1877 some rents have been reduced 25 per cent.; others less.	The estate as a whole has not been re-valued, but most of the rents have been reduced. No rents have been raised except for additional buildings upon which the tenant pays a per-centage.
Mrs. Bold, Boughrood Castle.	Llanfihangel tal-y-llyn. (830 acres.)	- - - -	One farm to 1884 was let at 220*l.*, is now 180*l.* Another farm and bytach till 1880 was let at 320*l.*; for the farm I have 180*l.*, for the bytach the agreement is 60*l.*, but I have never received so much.	—
J. D. Dickinson, Ystradwrallt, Nantgaredig.	Glanhonddu. (1,000 acres.)	I have not, since 1877, granted any abatements.	I have reduced one farm from 210*l.* to 180*l.*, and another farm from 150*l.* to 130*l.*	—
Mrs. E. H. Gibson-Watt, Doldowlod. Rhayader.	Doldowlod, Rock House, New Radnor. (In Radnor and Brecon, 9,500 acres.)	An abatement of 10 to 15 per cent. was made from 1880 to 1885; 15 to 20 per cent. from 1886 to 1889, according to age of tenancies; 5 to 10 per cent. from 1890 to 1891.	In 1892 all the farms were let tithe free, and a permanent reduction of 5 to 10 per cent. made, and a further temporary abatement of 10 per cent. allowed, which we have reason to believe, according to the age of tenancies, satisfied all the tenants.	Rents have been raised in a few cases where a change of tenancy has taken place, but in each case the farms were let at 5 per cent. below the valuation made.
E. H. Greenly, Titley Court.	Oakfield, Caeran. (2,000 acres.)	1879, 1880, 15 and 10 per cent.; 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, some 10 per cent.; 1885, some 15 per cent.; 1887, 1888, some 10 per cent.; 1892, 10 per cent.	1881, permanent reduction in most cases of 15 per cent.; 1886, permanent reduction in most cases of 15 per cent. The total reduction of rent roll since 1877 has been something over 20 per cent.	So far as I know the rents have not been raised during the last 50 years. The property has been in my possession about 20 years.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to the History of Rents.
Mrs. Gwyn, Dyffryn, Neath.	Abercrave. (2,145 acres.)	Abatements are frequently granted. Amounts of 10 per cent., 15 per cent., and 20 per cent. have been remitted to individual tenants — leaseholders as well as yearly tenants. Ten per cent. all round was remitted at the last rent audit.	Many of the rents have been permanently reduced. During the last 12 years ending September 29th, 1892, the rental of the Breconshire estate has been reduced about 10 per cent. all round.	—
Capt. Howell Jones-Williams, Cui Park, Talybont.	Coity Mawr and Cui. (2,000 acres.)	On many occasions I have granted abatements of rent.	Roughly, I have reduced seven farms 175*l.*	—
James Lewis, Aberdare.	Glyncollwng. (In Brecon and Glamorgan, 1,800 acres.)	Ten per cent. for the last seven years, excepting in 1889–90; and 15 per cent. for the last half-year ending August 1892.	No permanent reductions.	—
Sir W. T. Lewis, Bart., Aberdare.	Cwmtâf. (In Brecon, Glamorgan, Carmarthen, and Monmouth, 1,200 acres.)	An abatement of 10 per cent. per annum has been granted to the Cwmtâf tenants for the half years ending Michaelmas 1891, Lady Day 1892, and Michaelmas 1892, respectively. Two of these farms, purchased in 1888, were then subject to an abatement of 10 per cent., which abatement has been continued, in addition to the further abatement of 10 per cent. in 1891 and 1892. Another farm in Breconshire has been reduced from 40*l.* to 30*l.* per annum for the last six years.	- - - -	I have only acquired the farms within the last 20 years, and there has been no re-valuation since they have come into my possession, nor have the rents been raised.
Capt. Lloyd-Harries, Llandilo.	(In Brecon and Carmarthen, 5,811 acres.)	10 per cent. allowed at Michaelmas 1885, Lady Day and Michaelmas 1886 and 1887, Lady Day 1888, and Lady Day and Michaelmas 1892.	In some cases reductions have been made.	The estate was re-valued in 1877, the result being a small increase in some places not amounting to 3 per cent. on the rental.
T. Lloyd-Barrow (for his wife, the owner of two-thirds of the Lloyd estate).	Lloyd. (In Brecon and Carmarthen, 4,457 acres.)	20 per cent. in November last, and 10 per cent. for the audit now due promised.	—	—
R. H. Mansel, as trustee for Mrs. Mansel and own property.	(In Monmouth, Glamorgan, and Brecon, 500 acres.)	Since 1877 the following abatements have been given:—5 per cent., 6½ per cent., 17 per cent., 9 per cent., 10 per cent., and 8 per cent.	—	—
Hugh P. Powel, Castle Madoc, Brecon.	Castle Madoc. (2,750 acres.)	I have since 1877 given back 10 per cent. on several occasions.	Most of my farms have been permanently reduced, excepting those where rents have not been raised for nearly half a century or those which are let as accommodation land.	The last time the estate was re-valued was in 1837, during my father's life. A few farms becoming vacant were re-valued some years ago with an increase of rental since reduced.
Rev. David Price, 18, Castle Street, Brecon.	Noyadd Farm and Brintymawr. (199 acres.)	I have allowed a rebate for several years on Noyadd of 25 per cent., and last year I have reduced the rent to that extent.	On Noyadd farm, one-fourth. On Brintymawr I have made no reduction as the farm is let at a very low rental.	Although I have had two or three tenants on each farm, the rent has not been increased since I came into possession some thirty years ago.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to the History of Rents.
Trustees of the late Miss Charlotte Story-Maskelyne.	Losgoed. (3,300 acres.)	From September 1879 till September 1885 a 10 per cent. abatement (in some instances more) was regularly made. In one or two instances in lieu of the 10 per cent. more than an equivalent was allowed in the form of a remission of a portion of local rates or other allowance. During this period on one holding in lieu of 10 per cent. there was allowed in March 1880, 15 per cent. in September 1881, 20 per cent., in March 1882, 23 per cent., in September 1882, 27 per cent., in March 1883, 37 per cent., in September 1883, 30 per cent., in September 1884, 26 per cent., and in March 1885 this holding was permanently reduced 33 per cent.	In 1885 and 1886 a permanent reduction was made amounting to 26 per cent. on the old rent roll, and the rents have since remained at the same figure, except that one holding was increased 14½ per cent. from March 1890 till September 1892 when the 14½ per cent. was taken off again.	The estate has not been valued for purposes of rental so far as the owners are aware during the last 50 years. No rents have been raised in the last 20 years except as noted in the previous column, and this was under a mutual arrangement between landlord and tentant in view of the heavy reduction previously made.
Miss Clara Thomas, Llwynmadoc.	Llwynmadoc. (9,728 acres.)	Abatements for three half years ending Michaelmas, 1886, of 15 per cent.; and for two half years ending Michaelmas 1892 of 10 per cent.	Taking the rental of 1853 as the basis; the rental in 1863 was 2 per cent. higher; in 1878, 23·9 per cent. higher; and in 1893 is 4·8 per cent. higher than the rental in 1853. The general rise, based on a new valuation, took place in 1874, amounting on the whole to 22 per cent. The general reduction amounting to 14 per cent. took effect from Michaelmas 1886. Individual reductions made at various times since 1876 account for the further 5 per cent. of reduction.	The estate was valued by J. M. Davies, of Froodvale, Llandilo, in 1873. His valuation was 36·2 higher than the rental in 1855. The rents were raised as the result of this valuation 22 per cent. on the 1855 rental.
A. V. H. Vaughan-Lee, Dillington Park, Ilminster.	Lanllay. (In Glamorgan and Brecon, 5,800 acres.)	No general reduction or abatement has been made, but in some instances allowances have made.	Taking the whole of the farm rental it is 7 per cent. less now than in 1877.	No general re-valuation has taken place, but in some instances rents have have been altered. Comparing the rental of a portion of the property (about 3,500 acres), the difference in the rental between the present time and 50 years ago is 44*l.* 10*s.* in favour of the present time.
J. E. Vaughan, Rheola, Neath.	Rheola. (In Glamorgan and Brecon, 5,800 acres.)	On occasions abatements have been made in individual cases; but no general abatement has been made, the rents having remained unaltered for a very long period.	The rent-roll from farms on this estate is about 4 per cent. lower than it was in 1887, and in some cases the lands are let tithe free, which increases the per-centage of reduction by about another 2 per cent., making in all 6 per cent. reduction.	There has been no general valuation of the property during the last 50 years. A considerable portion of it had been let at nominal rents for lives by a former owner, a fine having been taken, and as these fell in the farms were re-let at fair rents.
Miss Susan Williams, Trephilip.	Pentregwyn. (200 acres.)	I gave back 10 per cent. per annum in 1879, the times being so bad, and this continued till 1885, when I permanently lowered the rent.	I permanently reduced the rent 30*l.* in 1885, viz., from 120*l.* to 90*l.*	——
Lieut.-Col. Wood, Gwernyfed Park, Three Cocks.	Gwernyfed. (5,227 acres.)	Per-centage returned:— 10 per cent. in 1885. 15 „ 1886. 15 „ 1887. 10 „ 1888. 2½ „ 1889. 10 „ 1891. 12½ „ 1892. 20 per cent. on losses of sheep by liver rot in 1880.	In one or two cases I have permanently reduced the rent by paying the tithe.	I believe the estate was valued in 1863. Rents have not been raised on sitting tenants. On fresh takings there has been sometimes a small increase, but generally on account of some improvement executed by me.

The witness withdrew

Mr. JAMES HAMER recalled and further examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Previously examined at 54,258–54,268.

54,420. I think you desire to give rebutting evidence as to something which was stated yesterday?—Yes, I went into part of the case yesterday, as far as I could from my personal knowledge, and I also reported yesterday evening the facts to Mr. Severn. He desired me to emphatically deny the allegations which were brought against him yesterday, that is, for disturbing tenants for political reasons. The facts are as I stated them yesterday, and which I suppose it is not necessary for me to repeat.

See 54,225–54,241.

54,421. No, there is no necessity to repeat them. Have you anything to add?—I may say one thing to show there was no political bias in the matter with reference to the family at all. We appointed a brother-in-law one of our workmen.

54,422. What family do you speak of?—The Bufton family. The house was vacated by Thomas Price who occupied it. We let that cottage with a small holding of a few acres to a brother in-law of Bufton, and he has been our workmen ever since. Again to show that Mr. Severn had no political motive in any way against the family of Bufton, we had a cottage which was vacated a year or two afterwards, and we allowed Mrs. Bufton, the mother of Bufton, to occupy that cottage by paying the tenant of the other (it was a double cottage) a small acknowledgment for occupying it. I think that shows we had no political feeling with reference to the family of Bufton at all. Mr. Severn emphatically denies disturbing him for political purposes. The reason was as I stated to the Commission yesterday. Further Mr. Scandrett will speak to the notice served upon him, and Mrs. Boulter, the daughter of Mr. Evans, will speak as to the notice which was served upon him. I do not know whether at the close of the list of regular witnesses for to-day you would allow me to give evidence, but I am instructed by Mr. Severn to make an appeal to the Commission to allow me to give general evidence, as his character has been rather attacked in this matter. Mr. Severn is a gentleman of 80 years of age, and he cannot take any part in this inquiry. He succeeded his father who had occupied in the county.

54,423. Before you go into general evidence I will take the wishes of my colleagues upon the matter. The rules of the Commission are that notice of intention to give evidence should be sent seven days beforehand?—Yes, but there has been a charge brought against Mr. Severn, and I should like the Commissioners to allow me to give general evidence. I am quite prepared to answer any question upon any part of your inquiry, and I shall take it as a great favour on behalf of Mr. Severn to be allowed to do so, as he has always borne an excellent character in this county.

54,424. We are bound to give precedence to those who sent in their evidence in the ordinary way?—I think I can give some information to the Commission on subjects which would be of advantage, if you would like to hear me.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,425. Mr. Bufton stated yesterday that Mr. Severn himself had called with his brother. Does Mr. Severn deny that?—Certainly. I admitted yesterday asking Bufton to vote. It was not Mr. Severn who spoke to him at all.

54,426. Then with reference to the gardener, who was a tenant of Miss Severn's, have you made any further inquiries respecting that case?—I have.

See 54,14[illegible] 55,039–55,044.

54,427. What is the result?—She denies that it was from political motives. I went there yesterday afternoon, after the Commissioners rose, and I stated what had taken place. She denies it, and if you like I can explain the whole of the facts of the case.

54,428. If there was no truth in the thing, why did she not come forward to make a statement herself?—She is an elderly lady and I do not think she goes out of the house except in the front; she is 76 or 77 years of age, and she scarcely ever goes further than her lawn in front of the house.

54,429. Then will you kindly give us the explanation?—Well, the Autumn before, Miss Severn wanted to discharge the gardener.

54,430. The autumn before what; before the county council election?—Before the county council election.

54,431. When was the county council election?—In March 1892, I think I may say that Miss Severn's housekeeper is a married woman, and her husband has been living in South Wales. Miss Severn wanted the husband to come and manage the garden, and to look about the house and to give the man notice to leave. The housekeeper objected to it. I got this information from the wife as well as from Mr. Severn. She objected to her husband coming to live there. She thought it would not be very pleasant to have her husband in the house. After the election he sent a message to Miss Severn; I do not mind saying this, that Miss Severn did not see the man personally, but anything that transpired, transpired through the housekeeper. There was no personal interview on the part of Miss Severn. That I understood from Mrs. Davies.

54,432. With the gardener?—With the gardener.

54,433. If there was any canvassing done, it was done through the housekeeper?—Yes, through the housekeeper. The housekeeper told me that. I did not see Miss Severn on that question. She took some message; she did not give me the message; she said "I can "stand no more of this nonsense, he shall go."

54,434. What nonsense?—There had been something about attending; he was only working there part of the time; he was not fully employed at the house; he had been going and coming, I suppose, just as it suited him.

54,435. Anything further?—Nothing further.

54,436. What about the servants. The allegation was made that she interfered with the servants?—I asked the minister. The young woman was a Baptist. He told me when she attended service she attended his chapel, and Mrs. Davies the housekeeper told me afterwards when she attended any service she attended the Baptist chapel. She does not go out every Sunday, but when she does she goes to the Baptist chapel.

See 55,038.

54,437. Is it true that Miss Severn told the servants that they were not to go to the Baptist chapel?—That is more than I can say. They do now I can say, but I do not ask that.

54,438. There is no interference with their religious opinions now?—No, there is not.

54,439. Did not the minister come to Miss Severn and tell her that he thought it was not right that she should interfere with the people?—That is more than I can say. I understood it was her, so that I asked the housekeeper. I did not ask Miss Severn the question, and I asked Mr. Jones, the minister at the Baptist chapel; he said: "When Mrs. "Davies does attend service she attends at my "chapel." I asked Mrs. Davies, and she said when she attended anywhere she attended at the Baptist chapel. As I think I said yesterday, I wish to repeat that our tenants, with very few exceptions, and there are between 50 and 60, are nearly all Dissenters. I question if we have half-a-dozen churchmen, and I may say I am a Dissenter myself.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,440. I suppose it is quite true that this gardener was turned off and sent away after the county council election?—Yes, it was after. I may say there was a report at the time, and Mr. Severn, the brother, sent me to Llandrindod to make inquiries about it, and he remonstrated with Miss Severn for such a foolish thing, and she denied it was for political purposes. I went up at Mr. Severn's request, and he was very much annoyed, but she said there were other reasons why he was sent away.

54,441. Do you not think it would have been more discreet on her part if she had left it for three weeks or a month?—I am quite prepared to admit that Mr. Severn thought so too. He sent me up. I wish to be quite candid with the Commission. I do not wish to conceal anything whatever.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,442. The allegation with reference to the servants was, I think, that Miss Severn had warned them not to attend chapel. You do not know anything about that?—I did not ask Miss Severn that question. I asked the housekeeper herself, and she told me when she attends any service she attends the Baptist chapel.

54,443. That is beside the mark?—I did not ask Miss Severn.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 54,906.

Mr. WILLIAM SCANDRETT called and examined

Sir John Llewelyn.

See 54,241.

54,444. Where do you reside?—Penybont.

54,445. Were you a tenant of Mr. Severn's at Penybont?—I lived under the present Mr. Severn and his father for 38 years.

54,446. Did you have notice to quit?—Yes.

54,447. Why?—Because I wished him to give me notice.

54,448. Did you ask Mr. Hamer to serve you with notice to quit?—I asked him to ask Mr. Severn. My wife and I had decided to give up business and to live upon what little we had. I requested Mr. Hamer to ask Mr. Severn. I thought it more prudent for him to send me a notice than for me to send him one.

54,449. When was that?—I should think it was about 12 years ago; somewhere thereabouts.

54,450. Is it true that politics were the cause of your giving notice?—Not in the least.

54,451. Mr. Bufton asks this question: "Had "you heard that you were to take notice before "you went to ask them to give you notice?"—No, I sent to ask Mr. Severn to send me notice; he declined to do so. He would not do so.

54,452. Why did you not give notice in the usual way, and not ask them to give you notice?—Because I thought it would be more prudent to have a notice from the landlord than for me as a tenant to give him notice. I wish further to say that after he sent back to say he did not wish to lose me as a tenant, and he would not have given me notice. I think I did not tell Mr. Hamer that I intended to give up business; I think not, but I will not be positive about that. When he said he would not send me notice I sent again to him to tell him that I intended to give up business, and that the place was of no use to me. I did give up when the six months were up, after he gave me notice. If politics had induced Mr. Severn to give me notice he would have done it, but he refused to do it as first. After consideration he agreed to send me a notice, and he did.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,453. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Bufton with regard to this notice?—I do not know anything about that notice particularly.

54,454. Did you tell him that you were going to give up the house?—I might have done so, but I do not recollect.

54,455. You had no conversation at all with him?—That I cannot say. It is 12 years ago as I stated before. I am getting on for 90 years of age now.

54,456. I thought you might have remembered whether you mentioned it or not?—I do not remember.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,457. Are you aware that it is the usual thing for the tenant to give notice to the landlord when he wants to leave a place?—Yes, I am aware of that.

54,458. Were you afraid that Mr. Severn would in any way be offended if you gave notice to him?—That was my idea about it.

54,459. Do you think he would be offended with you if you told him the reason you gave notice was that you wanted to leave the house?—I thought it was better for the tenant to ask the landlord to give him notice than for the tenant to give notice. That is my idea. I might be wrong, we have all different ideas on different subjects.

54,460. I think it would be more prudent on the part of the landlord to refuse to give you notice?—Perhaps so. May I make one remark further, and that is, when I was about to leave, a few days before I did leave, Mr. Severn came down to the house to see what repairs it would require for the incoming tenant. My son occupied the house after. He lives with Mr. Severn, and Mr. Hamer was with him, and as he left, after he had inspected the house, Mr. Severn said to me, "I am sorry, Scandrett, that you are going "to leave us. I hope the remaining years of "your life will be spent in comfort. You are "one of the oldest tenants of my father."

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,461. Mr. Vincent hands in this question: "Is it the custom in this country when a tenant "wishes to retire from business for him to ask "the landlord to give notsce?"—I do not know whether it is the custom or not. It is a mere matter of opinion I think.

54,462. Mr. Bufton asks this question: "Is "your son butler to Mr. Severn?"—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mrs. ELIZA BOULTER called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,463. Is your address the Post Office, Penybont?—Yes.

54,464. Are you the daughter of Mr. Evans?—Of the late Mr. Evans.

See 54,241. 54,465. Who was mentioned yesterday?—Yes.

54,466. Did your father hold some land under Mr. Severn?—Yes, land belonging to the cottage.

54,467. Was there more than one holding?—Not at the time he first occupied it. We removed from the cottage to the premises I now occupy, while the old premises were undergoing repairs. We found that the premises we are occupying now were better situated for the post office, and we asked Mr. Severn to allow us to remain there and still hold the land which belonged to the other cottage, which he permitted my father to do.

54,468. What did he do with it then?—He let the cottage to Mr. Edward Bufton, shoemaker.

54,469. Is that Mr. Edward Bufton the brother of this gentleman?—Yes.

54,470. Your father occupied one holding himself and sub-let the other to Mr. Bufton?—Yes, simply because he did not require the house, only the stable and land which belonged to the other cottage.

54,471. Did your father receive notice to quit in respect of the holding he occupied?—No, not the holding he occupied; that would be the cottage where we held the post office.

54,472. Did you receive notice to quit in respect of the other?—He received notice to give up the other one.

54,473. Had politics anything to do with that notice?—I believe not the slightest. We had no reason to think so.

54,474. Who occupied this cottage afterwards?—After Mr. Bufton left it?

54,475. Yes?—Mr. Severn's house-porter—an elderly man.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,476. So far as you know there was no political consideration mixed up with the matter?—I am quite sure there was not.

54,477. Have you heard any reason assigned?—No, nothing, only that Mr. Severn's house porter wished to have the cottage that belonged to the land my father had at the time.

54,478. Had the other man been long in the neighbourhood?—He lived at a small holding of Mr. Severn's in the neighbourhood, and he wished to come nearer the village on account of attending the hall on Sundays—attending to the dogs and duties about the house, I think. That is the reason he came to live in the cottage that my father rented.

54,479. Had he been living some time at where he was before he got this cottage?—I should think he would have been.

54,480. Was there any particular reason at that time to make the move?—Yes, I should think there would be a particular reason owing to his taking the duties of another old man who had left the Hall. Thomas Price was an old man and wished to be nearer the Hall to attend to the dogs and other duties about the house. That was the reason given to my father, so far as I know.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,481. There is a question handed in by Mr. Bufton, "Why had your father notice to quit"?—I think it would be on account of Mr. Severn wishing his servant to occupy the cottage that my father held.

54,482-3. And another question, "Had he "notice for the two cottages?" I think you answered one and not the other?—No, he had not for the two. I should like to state one thing as to Mr. Severn's kindness when my father died. It was through Mr. Severn's recommendation that I had the appointment, and he has been most kind to us at all times. I think it is through Mr. Severn's influence that I have the appointment I now hold.

54,484. I understand when notice was given, it was given in respect of one of the two holdings and not in respect of the other?—Not in respect of the other, and we still have the land which belonged to the other.

54,485. There was nothing against your family?—Nothing at all that I am aware of.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Bufton recalled and further examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Previously examined 1st Qu. 54,257.

54,486. Do you wish to add anything, Mr. Bufton?—I should like to remind the Commissioners that I did not state yesterday that Mr. Severn called personally upon my brother, but that he and the agent saw him going to the carriage to go to the polling booth. It was Mr. Severn's agent who called upon him and asked him these questions as to voting, which he admitted yesterday.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,487. It was my mistake then?—Yes; I only want to put that right. I have had no opportunity, of course, of bringing any further proof. But as regards Miss Severn's case, the man who was evicted was coming down, but has missed the train. He is coming by the next train, but I suppose it will be too late. There is one witness here who can give evidence who was stopped in the same way as the gardener.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,488. I dare say you will observe how very undesirable it is to receive such evidence second-hand if the people themselves can come?—Quite so; I did not think it was going to be rebutted.

54,489. We can hardly take their evidence to-day, if they have not sent notice of the evidence they intend to give?—I am entirely in your hands. It was such a clear case that I had not the slightest idea that it was going to be refuted. I may tell you that the man went there the evening before, which, of course, Mr. Hamer cannot deny, as you can gather from his statement; and he was asked, through the housekeeper, whether he was going to vote for me or for the other candidate, and he said he should not say which, and he was told straight—

54,490. Told by whom?—By the housekeeper—that he would be dismissed. Well, he said he should not say who he was going to vote for. The next morning he went as usual, and he was told his services were no longer required. There was another man—Mr. Jones—stopped in the same way after the election. He was hauling all the coal, and he never had to take a load afterwards. That was the general election; the same time as the servants were stopped going to the Baptist chapel. Mr. Jones, who was supplying Miss Severn with coal, was stopped. He was told he should not haul any more. He happened to be the Liberal agent for that district. Mr. Jones, the Baptist minister at Llandrindod, went to this man twice (he was also stopped for his political views) to know if there was anything to be done, because the two servants happened to be members of his chapel, that is, the Baptist chapel, Llandrindod, and they were told they must not go there, but they must go to church. See 55,036.

Sir John Llewelyn.—continued.

54,491. Did you hear what Mr. Hamer said with regard to Miss Severn's housekeeper, that she still goes to the Baptist chapel?—I did. It is quite right, but it was on that ground that Mr. Jones, the Baptist minister, wrote a note to Miss Severn. I am not quite sure whether he threatened to expose her in the papers, but, however, after he wrote that letter to her she permitted the servants to continue to go to chapel, after being kept away for one or two Sundays. Mr. Jones is here, and would like to testify to that if necessary.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,492. You still maintain your brother had to leave owing to that?—That was the general opinion, and I have not the slightest doubt myself. Of course it is hard to prove those things.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Hamer called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,493. You are Mr. Richard Hamer, Cwmgilla, Knighton?—Yes.

54,494. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

54,495. What is the size of your holding?—It is something over 500 acres.

54,496. Would you tell me what the rent is?—426*l.*

54,497. Do you give evidence for the district, or for yourself only?—I believe for myself.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,498. You are well acquainted with the district in which you live?—Yes.

54,499. I have a note on your statement that you give evidence for the Knighton district?—It may be for the district.

54,500. Are you the spokesman of any meeting, or any number of men?—No.

54,501. Have there been any enclosures in this district?—Not of late years. I should think it must be 40 years since there were any.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,502. What do you consider the effect of the enclosure that took place 40 years ago may have been?—It has been to encourage cultivation in one way. There has been a good deal of land cultivated. The next thing was there was a good deal of land put out into small allotments for people with a little capital—plenty of small holdings

54,503. Would that have the effect of giving men with small capital a chance of becoming purchasers of small holdings?—It would.

54,504. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that it was taken advantage of in that way?—Yes, very much so.

54,505. Were recreation grounds apportioned?—They were.

54,506. What became of them?—They are let out now to tenants. The money at one time went to the National Schools, but now I think it is taken possession of by some authority—I do not know what it is. They receive the money now, and I believe it is accumulating.

54,507. Was it put out for allotments?—It was put out for recreation ground.

54,508. And then?—Then it was put out for allotments—what I know of.

54,509. Were the allotments taken advantage of?—No, they were not.

54,510. So the churchwardens took the land, did they?—Yes.

54,511. And let it out?—And let it out.

54,512. Do you know in whom the money is vested?—I do not know now, but there are some Commissioners that take it now, and receive the money, and I believe it is accumulating to build or improve the recreation ground. At one time it went to the National Schools.

54,513. Do you consider there is more confidence under large or small landowners?—I myself should prefer large landowners. I think there is more confidence with them.

54,514. Is there any drawback to the tenure of land under small landowners?—You mean with regard to being tenants?

54,515. Yes?—There is a great drawback, that under small landowners sometimes a property gets divided and left to different children, and then it has to be sold, so that the tenant has not the security under small landlords that he would have under large ones.

54,516. Do you consider that differences of language, politics, or religion have any effect in this neighbourhood?—Not at all that I know of.

54,517. What is the usual date of entry?—25th March.

54,518. And are the tenancies annual?—Yes, yearly, generally speaking.

54,519. Are there many leases?—Not many, I think.

54,520. Do you think there are more changes now of tenancy than there were formerly?—There have been a few of late years, I think rather more than formerly.

54,521. Are there any oppressive clauses in the old agreements?—I never had anything to do with an oppressive clause that I know of.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,522. If there are any, are they enforced?—I never had any enforced, nor heard of any.

54,523. Do you think that penalising clauses in an agreement are necessary?—Yes, I do.

54,524. As against a bad tenant, I suppose?—Yes, or a good one, for he may plough up land such as meadow or pasture land.

54,525. I take it a very good tenant would not do that, would he?—Well, he may do it. I think it is a very good precaution to put in.

54,526. But if there are any, you do not know of any cases of enforcement?—No, I do not. I know of a case where it could have been enforced if they had liked, but it was not done.

54,527. How is the rent calculated?—When you are taking a farm, do you mean?

54,528. Yes?—They generally find out how many acres you have, and how much an acre you consider it is worth, and then calculate it.

54,529. It is fixed upon a gross sum calculated at so much per acre?—Yes.

54,530. And it is I suppose arranged by private treaty?—Yes.

54,531. Can you suggest any better mode than that?—No, I cannot.

54,532. Do you think farms are let to the highest bidders?—No, certainly not.

54,533. I suppose a landlord in letting would take into consideration the best farmer?—Yes, and what he is worth whether he is able to stock the farm or not, I should fancy.

54,534. Are there any reductions or abatements in rent?—Yes, there have been a good few.

54,535. Sometimes one and sometimes the other?—I do not know of any rise in late years.

54,536. No, but have there been any permanent reductions?—Yes.

54,537. And some abatements?—And some abatements.

54,538. The rent in your own case has been modified, I think, has it not?—Yes it has.

54,539. I think you told us that 426*l.* was the amount. It has been reduced?—Yes.

54,540. In respect of that reduction did you obtain a reduction of your assessment before the Assessment Committee also?—Yes.

54,541. What is the practice of the Assessment Committee of your board of guardians in respect to an abatement?—An abatement of rates do you mean?

54,542. Whether the Assessment Committee would reduce the assessment of an abatement only is made, and not a reduction?—They do not—you mean the per-centage?

54,543. Yes?—They do not, generally speaking.

54,544. But in the case of a permanent reduction they would?—Yes, then they reduce the rates.

54,545. Is that reduction the result of an understanding between the landlord and the tenant?—Yes, in my case it is.

54,546. Have there been any cases of rents being raised since 1874?—Not that I am aware of.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,547. What can you tell us about the prices of agricultural stock?—The prices of stock.

54,548. Yes, and of all agricultural produce?—I do not know of anything that is selling well at present.

54,549. Has there been generally a fall in prices?—There has, very considerable.

54,550. When are the rents payable—how long after they become due?—There are different times under different landlords. My landlord is about four months—four to five months. Some give six months even.

54,551. What is your opinion of the preferential claim of the landlord. Is it beneficial or the contrary to the tenants?—I think if a landlord is sure of getting his rent, if it is within six months or 12 months after, he gives a tenant a chance of meeting better markets and keeping his stock longer.

54,552. You think then that the preferential claim for rent is beneficial to the tenant?—I do.

54,553. How are the tithes paid?—The tithes are now paid with the rents.

54,554. Formerly they used to be paid by the occupier?—Yes.

54,555. The land tax, chief rent, and income tax are paid by whom?—By the landlord.

54,556. Who pays the rates?—The occupier.

54,557. Have those rates increased or not?—They have increased.

54,558. How much?—The road rates are considerably increased.

54,559. Should you say that they have as much as doubled in the last 25 years?—Yes, they are quite double since turnpike gates have been taken off.

54,560. What are the causes?—I think the removing of the turnpike gates in a great measure.

54,561. Is there anything else?—I think that the officials have more salary now.

54,562. Wages?—Yes—labour.

54,563. Cost of labour?—Yes.

54,564. That would not of course come under the head of rates?—It comes out of the rates.

54,565. Oh, that is what you mean—the cost of labour upon the roads, and so on, is the cause of the rates being increased to that extent?—Yes.

54,566. I understand. Do you consider the larger or smaller farms to be most beneficial to the country?—I think the larger the farm is the better they are managed generally, because they have more strength in labour and horses.

54,567. More men and horses are used on the farm?—Yes. With regard to the inhabitants, I think, perhaps, if there were more smaller farms children would be reared up with more advantage to the country, and they would make better servants.

54,568. In bad times which suffer the most, the large holdings or the small holdings?—I think the small holidings.

54,569. Is labour scarce?—It is.

54,570. Has much land been reclaimed?—Yes.

54,571. By whom?—By the tenants chiefly.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,572. Has there been much laying down of arable land to pasture?—Not so much in this neighbourhood.

54,573. If this takes place, who provides the seeds for permanent pasture?—The landlord, in most cases that I know of.

54,574. And the farmer finds the labour?—Yes; sometimes the landlord allows manure. I have had it allowed in my case once or twice.

54,575. Have the root crops increased or not?—They have increased very much of late.

54,576. Who does the improvements upon the land—the buildings, for example?—The landlord.

54,577. Who does the drainage?—The landlord.

54,578. Who would find the quicks for fences?—The landlord in my case, and in the case of everyone else that I know of; I do not know of anyone else who would find it.

54,579. By protection fences in your statement, I suppose you mean boundary fences?—Yes.

54,580. And does the landlord find materials for gates?—Yes.

54,581. What does the tenant do—does he erect the gates?—Yes; he erects the gates—I generally do so, at least.

54,582. Upon that question, who finds the hinges for the gates?—I do in my case. I cannot answer for other people.

54,583. It is rather a peculiar point, because I have known in some estates—and I am sorry to say it is so on my estate—that the custom was that the landlord found the gates, but not the hinges, and the consequence was that the gates were never hung, and they very soon went to pieces?—I think where the tenants have to find the hinges they look after them very much better.

54,584. Yes; and it is better too, I think?—I know I have a little farm of my own that I let, and if I had to find the hinges I should be very often at it.

54,585. What is your agreement about improvements? Have you a copy of your agreement with you?—No, I have not.

54,586. You have an agreement for your farm?—Yes.

54,587. But you have not it with you?—No I have not it with me.

54,588. With regard to improvements, do you generally consult the agent before you come to an agreement?—How do you mean?

54,589. Your own words in this précis are, "I generally consult the agent for the purpose "of coming to an agreement." That is, I suppose, in respect of any improvements that may be done?—Any ploughing up of a field, or stocking up of a hedge, or anything like that, we always go to him about. If the field does not come under the agreement, and I wish to plough it up, I generally consult the agent.

54,590. Is there any custom with regard to the sale of sheep in sheep farms?—Not just in this neighbourhood. I think there is when you go higher up in the country, but not just round here.

54,591. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have read it through, but I have never taken much notice of it.

54,592. Do you consider it satisfactory or not?—You have to farm very well to get compensation under that Act.

54,593. Do you object to the counter-claim of the landlord?—No, I do not see that I could object to it. I think that the landlord wants protecting as well as the tenants in some cases.

54,594. Have there been any instances in this neighbourhood of that Agricultural Holdings Act being taken advantage of?—Not that I know of, just round here.

54,595. It is too cumbrous and expensive a machinery, perhaps?—Well, it is rather an expensive affair to go through. I know one or two cases that have been tried, but it is a very difficult thing to work. You want to farm extraordinarily well to get compensation.

54,596. Is the Ground Game Act enforced?—Not in my case.

54,597. You are not troubled with game?—No, not at all.

54,598. But it is generally enforced in the country?—I think the tenants have the hares and rabbits where they like. I do not know of any that do not. The landlord generally has the winged game.

54,599. Is there any attention paid to fruit culture?—No, not here.

54,600. Or to any other sources of profit besides ordinary farming?—Not besides ordinary farming.

54,601. Have you anything to say about railway rates?—I think they are very heavy, particularly the local rates. For instance, if you have to send anything from Craven Arms to Penybont, they would charge you nearly as much as coming from Liverpool to Penybont.

54,602. Has there been any combination or co-operation at all?—No, not in this neighbourhood; not near here. I think there was one started down in the adjoining county, but it failed.

54,603. What kind of co-operation was that?—Farming.

54,604. It was farmers' co-operation, what for—for agricultural manures and seeds?—No, for occupation. They thought, I suppose, that they would be able to manage things better by going into a combination of tenants, but it did not succeed.

54,605. Are there any friendly societies?—Yes.

54,606. Do the people avail themselves of those societies?—Yes, generally.

54,607. What can you tell us about the accommodation for labourers?—They are very much improved to what they were a few years ago.

54,608. Does your sanitary inspector see to the sleeping accommodation of the farmhouses?—If he thinks it necessary, I believe he can.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,609. Does he do so as a matter of fact?—I think he does do so in some cases.

54,610. May I ask who is your sanitary inspector?—I think it is Mr. Gough. I am not sure, but I think it is.

54,611. Is Dr. Harding your medical officer of health here?—No, he is not. I think it is Dr. Graves.

54,612. Would you tell us something about the cottages?—You told us, I think, that they had been improved. Have the cottages got gardens?—Yes.

54,613. Are there any small holdings attached to the cottages?—To some of them.

54,614. Are they usually let with the farm, or not?—In my case they are let with the farm, and I let some little fields out to the cottagers if they wish to keep a cow or two, or something like that.

54,615. What would be the length of notice to the sub-tenant?—If he pays rent independently, he would have to have a six or 12 months' notice; if it is only a weekly workman with a little land, it is generally about three months' notice that we give.

54,616. When did the agricultural depression begin?—We have had pretty well of it now for 15 or 16 years.

54,617. Should you say it began about the year 1875?—It would be about that.

54,618. What do you think the cause of the depression is?—I have no doubt the foreign competition has a great deal to do with it, and we are very unequally rated. I think that has a good deal to do with it. The next thing is, I think, keeping the children in school for so many years is not beneficial. My opinion is that they should have so many attendances instead of being kept in until they are 14, and then allowed to come out. Many of them do not pass, and it is a great detriment to the country.

54,619. Do the young people work now as well as they used to in years gone by. Is the rising generation of agricultural laborers as effective as the late one?—I think the most intelligent rising generation is leaving the country and going into the towns, and taking situations upon the railways and different places.

54,620. The young able-bodied men are emigrating?—Yes, I think so—very much more than they did years ago.

54,621. Where are they emigrating to?—To the chief towns principally.

54,622. You do not mean they are emigrating to Australia or America, so much as to Glamorganshire and such places?—Yes.

54,623. Will you tell us why it is they go there?—I think it is the inducements: they think they are going to get more money.

54,624. Better wages, that is one thing?—Yes, better wages.

54,625. What else; do they get better housing there?—I do not think so.

54,626. Do they get more society?—They mix more with a good many people, and there is more to see.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,627. More to see, and more advantages in the way of reading rooms?—Well, they can read here plenty. There are plenty of papers flying about for them.

54,628. Have they opportunities for evening classes or recreation in the way of lectures or concerts, or anything that amuses them after dark in the winter?—Not in the agricultural districts.

54,629. Do you not think that has some natural effect in attracting them to the larger centres of population?—I do not think so.

54,630. I will put it in another way. Do you find that they have a tendency to come back again after a time to the country in which they were brought up?—There are a good few come back, but they generally come back very poor.

54,631. Then they do not keep much money, even if they make much money?—I do not think they do.

54,632. Perhaps those men who make money in the works do not come back?—I have not seen any of them come back myself.

54,633. Could you suggest any remedies for the depression?—Not unless you do something with regard to foreign competition. If there could be a tax put upon that it would be one great thing towards a remedy. I think if we could have the money rated as well as the land, that would assist the farmers very much. There is a great deal of money that people get in pensions and different things, and they only just pay on the houses they occupy, whereas the farmer has to pay on so many acres of land.

54,634. Do you think it would be a good thing if foreign meat and produce were labelled?—I do not know that there would be so much in that as there would be if a duty could be put upon it, because there would be so many officials wanted to look after it then—to see that it was foreign meat, and that it was labelled, so that the one would pretty nearly counteract the other.

54,635. What is your opinion of the general relations between landlord and tenant. Are they friendly or otherwise?—Particularly friendly, what I know, I think.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,636. Is there any demand for allotments in this part of the country?—Do you mean for allotments of the recreation ground.

54,637. Yes, recreation ground, and ground for labourers?—I have not heard of any that I am aware of here.

54,638. Are you a member of the board of guardians?—Not now. I was a guardian for about 10 or 12 years.

54,639. To what do you attribute it that there are more changes?—There has been a good deal of property sold in the neighbourhood within the last three or four years.

54,640. Has any of this property been purchased by the tenants?—Yes, some of it has.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

54,641. And were they able to pay for their farms, or were they obliged to mortgage them?—I cannot say, I am sure. I think some of the tenants were pretty well provided. I could not say for all.

54,642. They are doing pretty well, of course, if they are able to pay for their purchases, but we have found some farmers who have been obliged to mortgage their land, and they were worse off than the tenant farmers?—I have known such a case.

54,643. Have you had any abatement in your rent at all?—Yes.

54,644. Of what amount?—Pretty near 100*l.* a year, not quite.

54,645. But that is a permanent reduction?—Yes, that is a permanent reduction.

54,646. You have had no abatement during the last year or two?—I had an abatement of 10 per cent. at one time, and then I had a further abatement afterwards—a permanent one afterwards.

54,647. You consider that the preferential claim for rent is beneficial to the tenants. Do you think that the tenants suffer by the tradesmen pressing them for their money, and the manure merchant?—I think they would have to suffer worse if the landlord were to press them as well.

54,648. Then you say with regard to the rates that it has been a loss to the neighbourhood that the turnpike gates have been done away with?—A very great loss.

54,649. To the farmers at least?—To the farmers. There are so many now that occupy the roads and drive about on them that do not pay a shilling towards it.

54,650. What class of people do you consider them?—I think I saw 100 carriages the other day going up to a fair at Clun. Those people would be going from Birmingham and London and travelling all over the country, and they do not pay a penny.

54,651. The brewer, the baker, and so on, travel on the roads free now, at the tenant farmers' expense?—They do. There are plenty of them keep three and four horses, who are not perhaps rated above 30*l.* or 40*l.* a year.

54,652. You consider that is a hardship to the tenants?—I do. I think there ought to be a wheel tax, and that they ought to pay their share the same as the tenant farmers do.

54,653. What is your opinion about bicycles?—I think it would be a very good thing if there was a rate on them. They are very dangerous nasty things, I should be very glad to see a heavy rate put on them. My team is very often frightened, and sometimes they cause accidents.

54,654. They cause many accidents?—They do.

54,655. Do you not think it would be a good thing, with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, if the landlords claim were sent in at the same time as the tenants?—It is sent in pretty quick after, is it not.

54,656. The counterclaim comes after, as a rule?—Yes, it comes after, as a rule.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

54,657. Would it not be well if they were both sent in at the same time?—It is very often the case, I think, that the landlord would not send a claim in if the tenant did not. The tenants have to send the claim in first before the landlord sends his.

54,658. But do you not think the landlords sometimes base their claim upon the claim that is sent in by the tenant?—There is no doubt that the landlord would make a counterclaim if the tenant sent in an oppressive claim, or anything that was not right.

54,659. You said that on one occasion the tenants combined. What was the cause of their non-success?—It was not tenants; it was about the time that there was an agitation about here among the labouring class some time ago, and a farm was taken, and they farmed this farm for two or three years, but it did not answer, and they gave it up.

54,660. It is something new to us. I understand the labourers took a farm and conducted it themselves?—Yes.

54,661. How long did they continue this?—I think about two years, I am not sure. It was not more than two years.

54,662. They found it did not pay?—They found it did not pay.

54,663. They did not make much money over it?—No, I think they were losers, by what I could understand. They fell out which should be master, perhaps.

54,664. I think this is the first time that we have found a sanitary inspector does his duty well. He seems to go round the farmhouses and the cottages to see if they are in a fit state for the people to live in?—He is supposed to do it; he is paid for it.

54,665. Yes, he is supposed to do it, but we do not find that he does it in the districts that we have been in?—If there is any complaint from the labourers, and if there is anything the matter with the houses, they can go and lay their complaint before the sanitary inspector, and it is his duty to see that they are in sanitary repair.

54,666. Do you consider that the most able-bodied men are leaving this neighbourhood?—There are a great many young men leaving the district.

54,667. Then you have only the aged men and the very young, I suppose, to carry on the farm work?—Well, we have not got the strength of labour that there was years ago.

54,668. Do you not think it is a loss to employ inferior labour. Would it not be better to give better wages to thoroughly able-bodied men?—Yes, there is no doubt about that, but you cannot always choose your labour. You must put up with what you can get sometimes. I have to do it.

54,669. Quite so, and you do not like to turn an old labourer away when he has served you a good many years?—It is seldom that I do, and I do not think that it is the practice very much.

54,670. Is yours a dairy farm?—No.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

54,671. Is there much poultry kept in the district?—Not particularly. We keep a good deal, but not for the sake of keeping poultry. There is not much attention paid to the poultry particularly. We generally keep a good deal, but not to say to make the rents on it. It is more in the ladies' way, I think—the farmers' wives.

54,672. Is the accommodation sufficient for them?—For the poultry?

54,673. Yes?—Yes, I think pretty well.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,674. What do you think has been the effect of enclosing land. Do you think it has operated beneficially on agriculture?—I think so. From what little experience I have of it myself, I should think it does.

54,675. Is there much land here that could be profitably enclosed?—I do not know of any very near here. It pretty well is all enclosed everywhere in this neighbourhood.

54,676. You say that there are a few more changes in the neighbourhood than there were formerly?—There have been these last two or three years I think more than formerly.

54,677. Owing to the depression?—I think it was more owing to a large property having been sold here than to depression.

54,678. Are there any failures among tenant farmers in the neighbourhood?—No, I think not. I do not know of any; not very much; there may be one or two, but not so very much. There are occasionally, but I do not think it is a general thing at all.

54,679. Do you think that the farmers generally are pretty hard up now?—Yes, they are hard enough up, there is no doubt of that, I can speak for myself; I am hard enough up. but still I can pay everyone. I think they are about as well off here as they are in other countries.

54,680. Supposing a farm becomes vacant; are there a good many applicants for it now?—Yes, if it is a good farm there are plenty of applications for it.

54,681. What about a poor farm?—Well, a poor place there are not so many applications for. If it is anything like a useful farm there are plenty of applications.

54,682. Do you think that the preferential claim for rent has anything to do with the competition for farms—the fact that the landlord allows a year's credit?—Yes, but I do not think that is the reason of the competition for farms.

54,683. Have you a copy of your agreement?—No, I have not.

54,684. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Rogers, Stanage.

54,685. You have a copy of your agreement at home, have you not?—I believe I gave the copy to my agent two or three years ago, when I was taking some extra land, and I have not had it since, but I had it at one time.

54,686. You have not had it back?—I have not had it back.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,687. Are you not getting rather anxious about it?—No, not at all.

54,688. Does Mr. Rogers generally supply his tenants with a copy of their agreements?—I believe so. I had one when I took the farm to begin with, that is 30 years ago.

54,689. Do you remember the clauses in the agreement?—Yes, pretty well.

54,690. Are there any binding covenants there respecting cropping?—No, not respecting cropping in mine, but there was with regard to ploughing up and felling trees, lopping trees, and those sort of things.

54,691. What about the sale of produce; were you allowed to sell all the produce on the farm?—Not in the agreement, but I have done so. In the agreement I was prohibited from selling.

54,692. That is the hay and straw?—Yes, the hay and straw.

54,693. You would ask Mr. Rogers' permission before doing so?—No, indeed I have not.

54,694. Do you find in depressed times like these that tenants take a good deal of liberty in that way—that the landlords are rather lax in enforcing the clauses in their agreements?—I do not know. I have lived in good times and bad times, and I have never had any difficulty with landlords yet. I have had two landlords.

54,695. Have you sold any hay and straw this last spring?—I sold some straw.

54,696. What were you getting for it?—I think about 5*l* a ton, pretty near.

54,697. Was that wheat straw?—Yes.

54,698. And you found it answer better for you to sell it than to consume it on the premises?—Yes, I think it did. You could get bone manure up on the banks, and get it much easier up than you could cart the dung up.

54,699. You bought manure with the money?—Yes.

54,700. Can you speak to other estates as to whether abatements or reductions have been made?—Yes. I know they have been made in several cases, but I do not think they have in all.

54,701. To what extent?—I do not know, but about 10 per cent. I think 54,702. Ten per cent.?—I think so—that is as near as I could say.

54,703. How did you obtain your reduction; was there a valuation made of the farm?—No.

54,704. You asked for a certain amount?—I asked for a reduction. The agent came over, and we went over the farm, and then we agreed.

54,705. You had it reduced about 87*l*.?—It would be near enough to 100*l*.—something like that.

54,706. How long have you been in your place?—Thirty-one years at March.

54,707. You say that the rent was advanced in 1874?—Not advanced. I took it in 1863 or 1864, and it was at that time when I took the farm.

54,708. It was not advanced in 1874, then?—No, it was not advanced at all.

54,709. Were rents advanced generally from 1870 up to 1874?—Not that I am aware of.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,710. What is your method of farming? Do you raise much corn?—Yes, pretty well, but it is not a large acreage of corn—70 or 80 acres perhaps out of mine, which is a little over 500 altogether.

54,711. You raise less wheat than formerly?—Yes, mine is not a wheat farm. I never grow very much wheat.

54,712. What do you farm chiefly—oats?—Oats chiefly.

54,713. But formerly you used to raise more wheat. Is that so?—We grew more wheat when it was at a better price, but I do not think I ever grew more than 30 acres of wheat.

54,714. Do you feed stock?—Sheep and cattle.

54,715. You do not sell them as stores, but you generally feed them?—I generally feed them and get them out as well as I can.

54,716. Supposing you had a duty on wheat, as you say, you would have to pay more for your feeding stuffs, would you not?—I think we should take more on the wheat and stock too, if there was a duty on the foreign produce that came in.

54,717. But do you not think that your landlord, if you made more on your stock and wheat, would come to you and say, "You can afford to "give me more rent?"—That depends upon who the landlord is.

54,718. But they are not all saints?—But those that are not saints are very soon found out, and a good tenant never applies to them for a farm, or very seldom.

54,719. Do you know of any vacant farms?—No, I do not at present.

54,720. So that you see there is a good deal of demand for farms?—Oh, there is. If there is anything like a good farm, and a good landlord, there are plenty of applications for it—no doubt about it.

54,721. Do you think it is possible to tax one product at the expense of others?—I do not see why foreign produce should not be taxed the same as ours is. If we have to send anything out into foreign countries, our produce is taxed.

54,722. But if you tax wheat, the manufacturer will complain afterwards that his articles are not protected?—I think every article is protected except the farmers; they are not protected nor their produce. We do not get enough to represent us in Parliament.

54,723. Well, that is your fault?—No it is not.

54,724. I suppose that the majority of electors in this country are farmers, and then it rests entirely with them if they do not send their proper representatives?—We send some very good men, but I think they are outvoted sometimes when they get there. I think the manufacturers are looked after very much better than the agriculturists are.

54,725. You think that the children nowadays are over-educated?—Not over-educated, but I think that there are children kept in school that would never get educated, they would never learn education, and they are kept there too long; they are kept there until they are 14, and then they pass out without being educated. I think if they had so many attendances to go through, and if they did not learn in that time, then it would be about time that they should come out, and assist their parents, and learn something else. I think they are kept there too long.

54,726. If there is a dull boy who cannot pass, you think you should put him on a farm?—Put him in something in justice to his parents and to the country, when he his dull in school and does not learn.

54,727. Do you think a dull boy in school is fit to learn anything?—We can manage so long as they can work. If they are kept till they are 14, they come out, and they think they are too clever to learn anything.

54,728. What you want is a bit of muscle, and you do not care so much about the learning?—A bit of willingness, too, is a great thing.

54,729. Who generally make the best servants; the children of small farmers or the children of cottagers?—I think the children of a small farmer generally speaking do.

54,730. Are there sufficient small holdings in the neighbourhood, do you think, for labourers to rise into the position of small farmers?—Pretty well. I think the enclosure threw a lot of small holdings in the country. People who had a bit of money bought land and built on it, and then they had small holdings. If you got girls that can milk and do any of the farmhouse work, and young men who can shear and so on, I think it would be a good thing for the country if there were more small holdings.

54,731. How do you find things with regard to the maids. Are they scarce?—Yes, they are rather scarce.

54,732. You have to pay them pretty high wages?—Yes, they are pretty high.

54,733. What do you pay a dairy maid?—About 14*l.* up to 17*l.*, generally speaking, if they are good girls.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,734. Have you large hiring fairs in this part of the country?—Yes, there are some.

54,735. At what time?—It begins about the 1st of May, and keeps on pretty well through the month at different places and different towns in the neighbourhood. There is one here on the 17th and 18th, a large hiring fair.

54,736. 17th and 18th of this month?—Yes, of this month.

54,737. How many farm servants have you of your own?—That I keep in the house.

54,738. Yes?—I keep too girls and three boys and two men.

54,739. Do you find sleeping accommodation for the men in the house?—What I keep in the house, yes.

54,740. Not in the outhouses?—Not in the cottages.

54,741. Where do they sleep, in the dwelling-house or in the outhouses?—In the dwelling-house.

54,742. That is the custom about here?—Yes, chiefly so.

54,743. Did I understand you to say that the sanitary inspector sees to the sleeping accommodation in farmhouses?—I do not say that he does, but he could do so if he liked. If there were any complaints made, and if it was the fact that the sleeping appartments were not good, and filthy, there could be a complaint made to the sanitary inspector, and he would then come and inspect the sleeping apartments.

54,744. Have you ever known of such a case as that being raised?—I have known of houses being condemned that were not fit for habitation.

54,745. Farmhouses?—Yes, farmhouses.

54,746. The cottages, I think you said, are in pretty good condition?—They are improved these last 20 years to what they were before.

54,747. They would come under the sanitary inspector's supervision?—Yes, they would.

54,748. He looks after them also. As to differences of language, politics, or religion, is there any difference of language in this district?—Not but very little.

54,749. Are there any Welsh speaking farmers at all in this district?—No, not near here.

54,750. Do you remember any when you were a boy?—No, not near here. You get plenty when you get into Montgomeryshire, and higher up in the top of Radnorshire, but not in this neighbourhood.

54,751. Yes. At one time, I think you said, the churchwardens used the money towards education which was obtained from the allotments intended for recreation ground?—It went to the national schools at one time. This land was put out for recreation ground at the time of the enclosure, but it was never used for that. It was then put out into allotments.

54,752. How was it that it was not wanted for recreation. Was it inconveniently situated?—Not particularly so, but I suppose that they get plenty of recreation round about here—in the fields and lanes and the roads, without going to this barren piece of land that was put out for them.

54,753. And for some time the money went to elementary education?—Yes, it did.

54,754. What does the county council do for education now, do you know?—I do not think they do anything at present.

54,755. They used to give a portion of the drink money, did they not?—I never knew of any being given.

54,756. What is that used for?—The drink money?

54,757. Yes, the drink money?—I do not know the term. I do not know what you mean.

54,758. I am sure I do not know what other name to give it. It is a Government grant of about 700*l.* in this county?—We have the Government grant. That is given according to how the children pass.

54,759. I am not talking about that at all. I think it was mentioned yesterday as being 700*l.*—the drink money given from the Exchequer?—I never heard of it.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

54,760. It is given to each county?—I think the money that you mean is the money that is given to the county council to expend as they think proper.

54,761. Yes, but what do they expend it for?—In technical education, a good deal of it, I think.

54,762. Is there any at all spent on technical education now?—Yes, such as dairy lectures and chemical lectures and those things.

54,763. Are you quite sure that there is any money given out of it towards them now. Have they not stopped that also?—I am not sure.

54,764. On the whole it does not seem that your county is particularly eager about education. That is what I gather?—I do not know. Our schools pass a pretty good examination here.

54,765. That does not quite agree with what you said—that the boys do not pass at 14?—I referred to those that did not pass. I say there are plenty that pass at 11, but there are some boys and girls kept in school up to 14, and even then they do not pass.

54,766. But to be the subject of complaint they must be pretty numerous?—I do not know that there is any complaint.

54,767. Are they very few?—Yes, very few, I think.

54,768. I thought you were making a complaint about a considerable number?—No, there is not a considerable number.

54,769. But it cannot be, then, a great grievance?—No; but I think those that do not pass should be allowed out to assist their parents, because it is a great hurt to their parents for them to be kept in school up to 14.

54,770. Then you think there ought to be some alteration made in that respect?—It does not make much difference to me. I only speak of what I think in that respect. I think if the children do not pass after making so many attendances, that there must be some fault.

54,771. Is that a fault of the teaching?—I do not think all children are as clever as others.

54,772. Not in this county?—Nor in any county.

54,773. But I do not think we have heard a complaint in any other county?—But I have had something to do with another county. They do not all pass.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,774. I should like to ask you one question. You spoke about the competition for farms. We are very near the English border. Is there any competition for farms in the adjacent counties in England?—Yes; in Shropshire if there is a good farm there is plenty of competition.

54,775. So that it is not singular to Wales?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,776. What is the name of your farm?—Cwmgilla.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,777. Is it not a fact that the landlord being aware of your purchasing so much manure, is the reason that he did not take any notice of your selling some of the produce of the farm?—Yes, I think it is.

54,778. It would not do for all tenants to do that—men that do not bring any manure to their farms?—No, I think not.

54,779. When you commenced farming, what would it cost you to have such a servant as the one you mentioned just now?—A servant girl?

54,780. Yes, a servant girl, when you commenced farming?—About 9*l.* to 10*l.*

54,781. How many servants do you keep?—Two, generally.

54,782. What would the other servant girl take?—One would have about 3*l.* or 4*l.* 30 years ago, and now she would be paid from 8*l.* or 9*l.* to 10*l.*—the little girl. Then the dairy girl would be paid 30 years ago from 9*l.* to 10*l.*, but now about 15*l.*

54,783. With regard to the men, are they advanced in proportion?—Yes. Men I have had for 15*l.*, I am paying now 25*l.* in the house to the same sort of man.

54,784. Have you had a decrease in your rent that would meet the advance in the price of labour?—No, I have not.

54,785. With regard to the differences in prices of farm produce now, are you compensated for that. You have had your farm reduced now?—Yes.

54,786. Do you think that the advance in the price of labour, and the lowering of the price of produce would be met by that reduction?—The lowering in produce would amount to more, a good deal.

54,787. Then you do not consider that with a reduction of 87*l* you are as well off now as you were then?—It was not very good times when I took the farm—in 1864—but since then we have had some very good years. I could better afford to pay for my farm some years since then, than if I was to have it for nothing now.

54,788. You have igcreased the production of your farm?—Yes, I have.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,789. How many servant men do you keep?—I keep four workmen, and three in the house. Then we let out a lot of labour besides—hoeing turnips and that sort of thing.

54,790. What do you pay for those workmen?—They are paid different wages, from 12*s.* up to 13*s.*

54,791. Any extras?—Yes, they have a pig, and 2*l.* harvest money, and cider, cottage, garden, and potato ground.

54,792. What do you pay the men that are in the house?—I give one 25*l.* and others down to 14*l.*—according to the different stations they take on the farm.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,793. Has not the increase in roots caused an increase in labour?—It does cause an increase in labour, but the more roots you grow the more stock you can keep, very much.

54,794. Certainly. Do you employ any females in the fields?—Very few. You can scarcely get one now.

54,795. Or boys?—Not besides what you can keep in the house.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,796. What amount of stock does your farm carry; what number of sheep have you?—I generally keep about 800 there in the summer.

54,797. Have you a sheep walk?—No, I have not. It used to be a walk, but I have cultivated it a great deal. It was a walk when I took it.

54,798. What number of cattle have you?—About 100.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,799. Herefords, I presume?—Yes, Herefords.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,800. I have a question handed in by Mr. Nixson. "Does it occur to you that if the people "leave the land there must be something un- "satisfactory in the condition of life in agricul- "tural districts, and that men would remain on "the land if there was a better chance of gaining "a living on it?"—My impression is that it is education and the railway facilities that have been the means of a great many of the young men going away. They read more of what is going on in large towns and different places, and they go there to seek their fortunes.

54,801. A question by Mr. Bufton "Are the "other tenants under the same agreement as "you are as regards game?"—I believe so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Davies called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,802. You are Mr. David Davies, a tenant farmer, formerly of Llanbister?—Yes.

54,803. You have been lately occupying a farm; what is its name?—I have been living at Tynacwm. I moved only yesterday to another place.

54,804. To another farm?—Yes.

54,805. What is the name of your present place?—Windy Hall.

54,806. Do you speak Welsh?—No.

54,807. English?—Yes.

54,808. Tynacwm, in Llanbister, used to be in four or five separate farms?—As far as I can learn it has been.

54,809. Were there separate houses and buildings on it?—Yes.

54,810. How is it now?—It is all in one now, and only one small house on the whole.

54,811. Was that large enough to house the men and animals?—No; it is not above half enough to house the creatures in the winter that it will keep in the summer.

54,812. In what condition are the buildings there?—Well, it is in a very bad state. There is a good deal fallen, and the other is tumbling to pieces as fast as it can.

54,813. Has any part of that farm been allowed to go out of cultivation for want of fencing?—Yes, I think so; as far as I can learn it has.

54,814. How much?—Well, I cannot exactly say. There are 12 or 14 or 15 acres, as I know, gone out.

54,815. Gone out to the hill or common?—Yes.

54,816. Do I understand from that that the fence between the hill and the common has fallen down?—Gone down, yes.

54,817. How long did you hold that farm?—Five years I have been a tenant myself.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,818. Had your father had it before that?—Yes, he had.

54,819. For how long?—Well, I cannot exactly tell; it is seven or eight years, or somewhere thereabouts.

54,820. Would that seven or eight years be in addition to the five years that you had it?—Yes.

54,821. Did he live there?—No, he did not.

54,822. He had it as a bye-take?—Yes.

54,823. Has any part of the building that was upon the holding gone down during that time?—Yes, there is one house and a good deal of building gone down.

54,824. Did you propose to take on the farm again under any circumstances?—Yes, I did several times.

54,825. What were the conditions?—If they would allow me a little towards the building till they would put it up.

54,826. And what in the alternative?—Or else I would go and try to take another to suit my mind.

54,827. Did you offer that if they would make you a money allowance until they repaired the building you would stop?—Yes.

54,828. And after they had done the building that then you would pay the whole rent?—Yes.

54,829. So that it was not the rent so much as the building that you had complained of?—That was it.

54,830. What was the answer you had?—Well, they refused to allow any money, and they told me, or told my father, that they were going to put interest on the building when they built any new building.

54,831. Did they say they could not afford it?—No, they did not say that they could not afford it.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,832. But they told you that they could not let it differently?—That was the answer that I had.

54,833. And when they were going to build they intended to charge interest on the building?—Yes.

54,834. Who was your landlord there?—Mr. Stephens his name is now.

54,835. Is he a large landowner or a small landowner?—Oh, he is a large landowner.

54,836. How much land does he hold?—Well, he owns a good deal of one parish.

54,837. How many farms?—I cannot tell; there are a good many farms altogether. It used to be a landlady, his aunt, I believe.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,838. Your farm is in the parish of Llanbister?—The farm that I am speaking of was in Llanbister.

54,839. And the farm you hold now is in what parish?—In Beguildy.

54,840. You say you do not speak Welsh?—No, I cannot.

54,841. Could your parents or grandparents? Do you remember any Welsh in that part?—My parents cannot. I do not know much about my grandparents.

54,842. You do not remember any of the old people who talked Welsh still in these parts when you were a boy?—No, not much, I think.

54,843. How many farm servants do you keep?—I was keeping two at Tynacwm.

54,844. Had you room for them to sleep in the house?—Yes.

54,845. And that is the usual thing?—Yes.

54,846. Do you find labour scarce?—Yes.

54,847. What is the reason?—Well, I do not know. They emigrate somewhere out of the country.

54,848. What?—They go somewhere out of the country. It is hard to keep them.

54,849. Still you pay higher wages than you used to?—Yes; it is higher since I started now than it was then.

54,850. Still they go away to the ironworks?—To the ironworks and coalworks.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,851. What is the acreage of Tynacwm?—Well, I cannot tell exactly. I never knew what was the acreage; it is somewhere about 100 acres, I should think.

54,852. And is there a sheep-walk attached to it?—Yes.

54,853. What number of sheep will the farm carry?—Well, it will carry very little in the winter. You have got to send them off somewhere in the winter time.

54,854. You have to winter them?—Yes.

54,855. How many do you keep in the summer on the mountain?—Oh, it will keep a good many in the summer—from 200 to 300.

54,856. Was it sheep that you kept chiefly on the farm?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,857. How did you do with the stock when it came on to winter—did you keep them in the buildings as they were?—We kept a few, as much as we could, and sold the rest at Michaelmas.

54,858. Then in the spring you would have to buy again?—That was the way we had to do.

54,859. And of course that is rather unprofitable, because cattle as a rule are dear in the spring and they are cheap in the autumn. That is so, is it not?—That is just so.

54,860. What did you do with the hay and the straw—did you consume it all?—Well, we would try. We used to consume as much as we could, because we were getting as much hay as we could for the sheep instead of straw. It is a very poor farm for grain or hay.

54,861. Did you till any?—Oh, yes; we tilled a little for horses and for the few cattle.

54,862. Were the buildings suitable for horses?—No, they were not suitable at all. The horses were kept in the hay-bay, as it ought to be.

54,863. How many horses did you keep there?—Two.

54,864. Did you apply to the landlord for buildings?—Yes, every year, and they were promising every year; but a promise was all—to build every summer.

54,865. You say that Mr. Stephens owns it now, but a lady used to own it?—Yes; his aunt I believe.

54,866. He inherited it?—He inherited the property after her.

54,867. Has there been anything done to the buildings since you left?—Very little; nothing worth speaking about; very little.

54,868. In what state are his buildings on the other farms?—I do not know a deal about it, but I am afraid it is in a very bad state on the estate, as a rule, generally.

54,869. He owns other farms, does he not?—Well, there are only two little bits of building on the whole.

54,870. Do you know whether the estate is encumbered?—No, I do not know anything of that.

54,871. Is he regarded as a pretty rich man in the neighbourhood?—Well, I do not think he is, but she had plenty of money if she had used it in building or anything of that kind.

54,872. In what state was the dwelling where you lived at Tynacwm?—It was in a bad state when I went there, It was repaired when I went there a little.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,873. You say that some land has gone out of cultivation because there was no fencing; how were the fences allowed to go down?—I cannot tell, without it was neglect.

54,874. Was that neglect before you came to the farm?—Oh, yes.

54,875. Was it caused by there not being many labourers about to keep up the fencing, or what was the reason, do you think?—I cannot tell what the reason was in particular, but if they had a mind to put them up they could have found labourers, I think.

54,876. Could they have found money to pay them?—Yes, comfortably.

54,877. You mean the landlord?—Yes.

54,878. But do you not think it is the tenant who is obliged to keep up the fencing on the farm? You do not expect the landlord to keep up all the fencing, do you?—Not all the fences that are on that.

54,879. What fences are they; are they mountain fences, or what?—There is a lot of fencing there. When the rent is at the same as it is now, it is impossible for any tenant to keep the fences on that ground as it is.

54,880. And pay the rent?—And pay his way.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,881. Do I understand that this was a boundary fence—an outside fence?—Between the farm and the hill.

54,882. And it is customary for the landlord to keep that particular fence in order?—Well, I do not know that it is customary, but it is too much for the tenant to do.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,883. What is the fence; is it a wire or a stone fence?—It used to be a wood fence, but it has been put up since my father had it as a wire fence.

54,884. What do you mean by a wood fence?—Wooden rails and edged up.

54,885. A sort of mixed fence?—Yes; it was a very poor fence.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,886. Can you tell me what was the amount of the rent when these were five separate buildings?—No; I cannot tell you.

54,887. Do you think it was more or less than it was when it was put into one?—It has been a little more but not much, I think.

54,888. It is a little more now?—No, a little more than what it is now.

54,889. Are there as many people living on this farm now as there used to be when they were small holdings?—No, not near as many, there used to be families in each of the places.

54,890. And how many are there now?—Only this one family.

54,891. How were the repairs on this estate as compared with other farms?—There is very little repair done, I think, as far as I can learn.

54,892. On any of the farms?—Yes.

54,893. Is it a general complaint of the tenants that they cannot get the repairs done?—I think it is.

54,894. Have you any remedies to suggest?—Well no, I have not much remedy, but I think that the farmer ought to be protected in some way.

54,895. Do you think that if these fences were kept up properly by the farmer he could pay any rent?—No, I do not think he could.

54,896. What rent are you paying?—65*l.*

54,897. Have you no idea what it would cost to put this fence in repair?—Well, it would require a man nearly to keep it in repair afterwards—one single man.

54,898. All the year round?—Yes, every year.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,899. There are some questions put in by Mr. Vincent. "Am I right in saying that your "landlord succeeded to his property only "recently." That is Mr. Stephens, I suppose?—A little more than 12 months ago, I think.

54,900. "Have you your agreement in Court?"—I have no agreement of any sort.

54,901. "Did the landlady agree to keep the fences in order?"—No, nothing that I know of.

54,902. "Is it not usual for the tenants to agree to do this?"—Well, I cannot say.

54,903. "The landlady was very old before she died, was she not?"—She was aged; but not very old.

54,904. "Is not Mr. Stephens a gentleman of very moderate means as a matter of fact," he is not a very rich man?—I cannot tell. I think he is.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,905. What are we to understand by that. Is it moderate means you mean, or what?—The landlady had plenty of money, I cannot tell, but I do not think that this Mr. Stephens had much before he had the property.

The witness withdrew.

Sir John Llewelyn.

We have now completed the list of those gentlemen who have sent in their names according to the ordinary rules of the Commission. Mr. Stephen Pugh and Mr. William Davies have not answered to their names. As we are here we shall be very glad to hear any evidence as far as our time will permit us, between this and 2 o'clock, if any gentleman desires to come forward.

Mr. James Hamer recalled and further examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

See 54,443. 54,906. Where do you live?—I live at Penybont.

54,907. What do wish to say?—I am agent for Mr. Percy Severn. I am also secretary to the County Agricultural Association, and I hold other public appointments. I also have the honour to represent my parish on the county council. My wish would be to give evidence with reference to Mr. Severn's estate.

54,908. What is the acreage of that estate?—It is somewhere about 10,000 acres; that includes hill-land as well as low-land.

54,909. What is the rental?—3,400*l.*; that is within a few pounds either way; but I think that does not include some cottages; there are cottages in addition; that is the farms.

54,910. Therefore the agricultural rent would be about 7*s.* an acre all round?—Yes. The late Mr. Severn came into the property about the year 1808, and the present Mr. Severn succeeded to the property in 1875. During that time the custom on the estate has been to allow families to succeed on the death of the father. The preference is given to the widow, and, if there is no widow, one of the sons. We have families on the estate who have been there for generations.

54,911. Are you agent also for any English property over the border?—No.

54,912. All in Wales?—All in Wales.

54,913. Are you aware of any conditions that would be different in England and in Wales?—I believe the occupation of farms in Radnorshire is very similar to the adjoining counties of Hereford and Shropshire. In some cases in Herefordshire the tenancy commences at Candlemas instead of Lady Day. Lady Day is the general custom in the county of Radnor; there are a few cases I believe in the lower part of the county where the tenancy commences at Candlemas, but in the upper part of the county they are entirely Lady Day takings. The Lady Day rents on our estate are collected about the beginning of September; it may be the last day of August, but it is always after the 27th August, to allow some stock fairs which are held to have past. The Michaelmas rents are collected in the beginning of January. I may say, when we have given a per-centage, if the farmers do not pay up on the day of the rent audit, we do not in some cases debar them from having the per-centage if they pay later on; so that a man who cannot quite pay up on the rent day is not pushed to do so, and he does not suffer from not having the abatement which we have given The estate has not been valued by a valuer at all. When there is a farm to be let, it is let by mutual agreement between the landlord and the tenant. The only fault that I have to find with change of tenancy is this, that our farmers generally leave us to go into larger farms, and in that case they generally leave a member of the family to go on in the old farm. The notice is six months. We often take up a farm on even only a month's notice; that is, if they can introduce to us a suitable tenant. We have had cases in the springtime where a farmer has had the chance of taking a larger farm; he has done so, and he has introduced to Mr. Severn another responsible tenant, and we have made no quibble about receiving the proper notice. I may say that Mr. Severn bought a small farm this year at public auction; the rent was 80*l.* before, and we have reduced the rent this year to 70*l.* I believe the feeling between landlord and tenant is everything that can be desired. Mr. Severn's instructions to me, as his agent, are these (I believe it is rather peculiar), that I am not to wrong his conscience. He says, "If you "do a dishonourable act, it reflects upon me, as "you are my agent." Those are my instructions from him. He has lived in the county all his life, and on the most friendly terms. There has only been one grave charge against him, which turned out to be quite untrue. It was over some Rebecca riots. He sat as a magistrate at Penybont, and he dismissed the charge because it was not proved. Then the Wye Board of Conservators tried to remove him from the position of justice of the peace. He is a sensitive man, and that very much upset him; and the grave charges brought against him yesterday also very much upset him. I should like to answer any questions with reference to the terms of agreements or anything else which any gentleman may like to put to me.

54,914. You said just now that on changes of tenancy the outgoing tenant introduces some one who would be a suitable successor. Has any money ever passed over those transactions?—Well, if it has passed, it is without our knowledge.

54,915. Have you set your face against that?—We do not encourage it, but if there is anything passes, if the man is a suitable man we make no question. Of course, if he is not a suitable tenant, we should reject him.

54,916. It appears to me that if a landlord were to sanction that in any way, he never could refuse his sanction in future to any tenants?—There is a case in point now. I was asked that question recently, and I said, "Now "mind, if you accept anything for going out, I "shall tell the new tenant not to expect any-"thing if he goes out under similar circum-"stances." I always tell them that; they do not do it blindly; they know the facts of the case.

54,917. It appears to me to constitute a tenant right?—It is done, but I have always told them that—at least I have in two or three cases, I should say, in which it has occurred.

54,918. It would hardly be a good thing for the incoming tenant; he wants all his capital, I suppose, to put into the land?—Well, they have to pay perhaps for spring ploughing, it is generally for work done.

54,919. That is quite a different thing; but is there anything in the nature of goodwill?—I should say it would be very small indeed for goodwill.

54,920. But such a thing has been known?—I daresay it has.

54,921. In your opinion has that ever been recognised by the landlord?—No, never.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,922. What abatements have been made by Mr. Severn?—Ten per cent. in the '80s—in the latter end of the '80s,—and now 10 per cent. again. I may say that the rents have not been increased except on certain improvements for many years. Some of the rents are the same as they were 50 years ago.

54,923. What improvements do you do?—We do all buildings. The tenant certainly does the haulage, and he would be charged nothing for any repairs. We built a new house only the other day, when a new tenant was coming in; there we did not think it right for the new tenant to do all the hauling; the new tenant did the hauling for the timber and the slate, and I think the lime as well; the sand was close to.

Mr. Griffiths.

54,924. Do you know any instances where tenants have been paid for general improvements on their farms on leaving?—No, I do not.

54,925. If there is any of this good will given, do you not think it is sometimes given on account of such improvements that have been made by the former tenant?—Well, if there has been such a case it would be, but I do not know of a case of any amount being given; it might have been a trifling consideration, but nothing of any amount.

54,926. The tenant would not claim for improvements from the landlord, provided the incoming tenant were to give him something for the improvements he had made?—I do not think there have been any permanent improvements made on our estate, not what you may term permanent improvements.

54,927. But as to general improvements, a man may cultivate his farm well and manure it well, and improve its value to nearly double in many instances?—In that case I do not know that he has ever received anything more than a nominal sum, but it generally follows in the family.

54,928. But members of the same family are not quite above receiving a few pounds?—Oh, they may not be. There is one thing I wish to say about sons working at home on the farms. We have several instances of that on our estate, and we have found that our tenants have been able to put out their sons to larger farms than the ones they occupy with us. There are cases in point where two sons have been put out on larger farms. Recently we had a case where the father asked to be allowed to put his son in the farm he held, and we allowed the son to go on at the same rent which his father had been paying for 40 or 50 years.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

54,929. Had the father there any other source of income beside the farm?—Not besides the farm. Now he is retired and living on his means. With reference to the clauses as to game, before the Ground Game Act of 1880 Mr. Severn always objected to hares and rabbits—or, I should say rabbits; unfortunately there are very few hares in the county of Radnor. Nothing gives him more annoyance than seeing a number of rabbits on a farm; in fact he nearly sent two tenants away because of their not keeping the rabbits down; he said he did not care to see them destroying his quicks and fences. Professor Rhŷs has referred to what he called the drink money. It seems there is a stigma rather on the county of Radnor for being backward in intermediate education. I wish to say that that does not lie with the county council at all. If there is any blame at the present time it may be attached to the Charity Commissioners. The first Joint Education Committee formulated a scheme which was not in accordance with the wishes of the majority of the county council. That scheme was rejected. A new committee was appointed. That committee sent up a report in the year 1892, and we have not yet had their proposals formulated in a scheme, nor have the Charity Commissioners published their scheme. So that the delay is with the Charity Commissioners. The point is whether the Charity Commissioners or the representatives of the people should have the deciding voice in regard to the location of the different schools in the county; and as a member of the county council I contend that the representatives of the people should have the choice in the selection of sites.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,930. Do you know exactly what the difference between you is with regard to sites?—The first proposal suggested that there should be a mixed school at Rhayader, a boys' school at Presteign, and a girls' school at Knighton. The opinion of the county council was that there should be a mixed school at Presteign, or a boys' school, and a mixed school at Llandrindod Wells, as being more accessible to the county of Radnor than Rhayader.

54,931. The Charity Commissioners have delayed dealing with that?—That was the scheme that the first committee proposed. The county council threw it overboard, and the Charity Commissioners now want to put a school at Presteign, and join us with Breconshire at Builth. We are not willing to have joint action at Builth with an intermediate school; we want to have one at Llandrindod. So that the fault lies not with the county council altogether, but with the Charity Commissioners, I take it.

54,932. That ought to be brought home to them, I think?—I think so, too. I am not quite certain, but I believe there has been some communication with the member for the county with reference to it. You mentioned yesterday about railway rates, and that it was unfortunate that action was not taken by some representative body in the county. Mr. Edwards, the member for the county of Radnor, who is president of our agricultural association, joined a deputation to attend with reference to railway rates, in connexion with the Royal Agricultural Society of England. So that we have taken some action in the matter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I know many instances where traders have approached the railway companies and have got considerable concessions.

Witness.

I am very much obliged to you for giving me an opportunity of coming before you.

The witness withdrew.

The Rev. WILLIAM WILLIAMS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,933. What is your address?—I am a Baptist minister living at Knighton. I have been here for over 15 years.

54,934. You offer to give some evidence as to the general condition of farms?—That was one head that I put down. Will you allow me to say that I know of a good many farmers who are afraid to give evidence here to-day. If some of the farmers in this county had had the same courage as the farmers in Carmarthenshire and Cardiganshire, you would have had evidence almost as startling.

54,935. What are they afraid of?—Afraid of their landlords; not all of them, but a good many are. There are some good landlords, but there are others again that their tenants are really afraid of them.

54,936. What do they think that the landlords could do to them?—Well, there is no doubt at all but that some landlords would cause them to suffer in some way or other.

54,937. You have no faith, then, in the Witnesses Protection Act?—The people have no faith in it. Some of the farmers have no faith in it, that I know.

54,938. Do they think that the landlords would turn them out of their farms in consequence of their giving any evidence here?—Some of them are no doubt afraid of it.

54,939. Really?—Yes, no doubt of it, from what they have told me themselves.

54,940. Do you know any instances of your own knowledge of capricious evictions?—Those cases I have no doubt at all are very hard to prove; there are so many ways in which some landlords, of course, can show their displeasure; you cannot exactly find out why they treat the tenants in such a way. You are fully convinced in your own mind, but to get the evidence is very difficult; and in a similar manner with regard to some farmers and their men.

54,941. I will leave out the word "capricious." Are there any instances of your own knowledge of evictions taking place—without using the word "capricious"—instances of farmers being turned out of their farms?—I have every reason to believe that in some cases farmers have been turned out simply because of their politics.

54,942. Do you know any instances where men have been turned out of their farms?—I have some in my own mind.

54,943. Will you name them?—The men would not be willing for me to give their names.

54,944. You say there are cases or there have been cases of evictions here?—I have not the slightest doubt a few cases in this county.

54,945. But do you know of any cases of eviction?—Yes; men have told me that they could not understand any reason but their politics for their being turned out of their farms. Other reasons were given, but they were not considered to be the real ones.

54,946. But you do not give instances?—Well, the men would not be willing for me to give them. Then in a similar case with regard to men employing labourers. I have known a case in connexion with the last election. Of course it would not be safe to charge the man who discharged the men with discharging them for political reasons.

54,947. You are speaking now of the relations between farmers and labourers?—Yes. It would be most difficult to prove it, but no other reasons were given that were considered by impartial people to be satisfactory. With regard to game, that is a sore grievance on some estates. With regard to that matter again, some farmers are afraid to give evidence, though they tell you, as they have told me many a time in their homes and in the markets, that they are eaten up with game, but they have not the courage to come and state their grievances. Then I was going also to mention the state of some dwellings, both farmhouses and cottages. Of course there are some excellent farmhouses and excellent cottages, and particularly in this neighbourhood. There are a good many excellent cottages, better than small farms up in the country; there are others again, especially small farm-houses, that are not at all well arranged internally and not with sufficient room. Had it not been for the presence of ladies in the court, I could give you dreadful instances, shocking instances, of the way sleeping accommodation is arranged, tending greatly to indecency and immorality.

54,948. That is, I suppose, where there are a whole family in too small a house?—Where there would be, say, a father and mother and children between 15 and 20—well, all sleeping in the same room. I have known cases of that kind. I hope you do not think I am doing wrong to mention this.

54,949. Not the least in the world we are very glad to get information on that subject. What is your remedy for that?—Well, I thought the nuisance inspectors would have something to do with a matter of that kind.

54,950. If so you have your remedy to your hand in your local authorities?—I should think they have power to deal with it.

54,951. Have you looked into that matter?—I have mentioned it more than once. I do not refer so much to this locality with regard to that matter.

54,952. Well, it is very general all over the world more or less, and is not confined to farm-houses, is it?—Oh, no.

54,953. I would merely ask you whether you have looked into that matter from the standpoint of the existing sanitary authorities?—Yes, but the authorities seem to be very slow in looking into these matters. I also wish to state that it seems to me that in many cases agents are rather more oppressive than landlords.

54,954. Is that generally the case, or is it only in special cases?—I do not say generally, but in a good many cases.

54,955. Can you instance any?—It is the same as I said just now. The men who told me these things would be afraid to come here and give evidence and would not be willing to give their names; there is a good deal of fear.

55,956. Have you taken any pains to satisfy yourself as to the truth of these allegations?—I have.

54,957. Whom do you refer to?—Several instances. During the last 15 years I have been going to different parts of this county to all parts of the county pretty well, and other counties, and I have come across several cases of the kind. That is all I have to say, I think.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,958. We have heard of a practice in some places of the agent receiving a little gift, varying from a few pounds up to a hundred pounds, for helping a tenant to get a farm. Is that sort of thing talked about in this part of the world?—I have known one or two cases of that kind.

54,959. Has it been a matter of common rumour?—Yes, but I would not say that that is general.

54,960. But such a thing has been talked of sometimes?—Oh, yes.

54,961. In what way would you say that the agents were more oppressive than their masters; I think that is what you said?—Interfering more with the tenants in regard to matters that the landlords had not authorised them to do, and particularly with regard to politics.

54,962. But how exactly do you know what are the terms between a landlord and his agent? What makes you think that they are interfering beyond what their landlords authorise them to do?—Well, there is a general impression on the part of the tenants that the landlord himself would not do such things—would not go so far.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

54,963. But you see an agent may be kept by the landlord to take off the unpopularity of certain proceedings?—That is quite possible.

54,964. The agent, no doubt, has got to keep his own position, and he may have certain rules laid down for him by his landlord which do not reach the public?—Yes.

54,965. Do you think you could apportion the responsibility?—Well, that is the impression that often prevails.

54,966. With regard to the sanitary conditions and what you described just now. You heard what was said this morning, that did not seem to satisfy you. Did you hear Mr. Hamer?—Yes.

54,967. He said you might give notice to the sanitary inspector, and that everything worked out beautifully apparently. Where is the obstruction; where is the difficulty?—There is very great difficulty oftentimes. See 55,04

54,968. Where does the machinery stop?—Either with the inspector or with the guardians, I believe.

54,969. You elect the guardians and you pay the inspector?—Yes.

54,970. Cannot you get these people to discharge their respective functions?—They do not seem to do it. They certainly do not do it in many cases.

54,971. What is your suggestion; what remedy have you for that state of things; does the sanitary inspector ever go about the country?—To some places. There are other places, I believe, where he has never been seen.

54,972. But cannot you call his attention to that, or cannot the inhabitants—the guardians. Is there no way of putting this machinery in motion?—There ought to be.

54,973. You have not studied that?—I am simply stating the facts—that the machinery has not been put in motion in many cases.

54,974. And in this lamentable state of things, what, as a matter of fact, is the result on the morality of the district, do you know?—I believe it tends to make it worse, a good deal.

54,975. Do you know at all what the statistics are?—I have not them by me now.

54,976. Have you looked at them?—Oh, yes, I have more than once.

54,977. What struck you in reading them—that the part of the county that you know is very bad, or the county generally?—Not worse than other counties.

54,978. But you think generally that these things call for immediate reform?—I do most certainly.

54,979. Do you notice whether there is any improvement in the accommodation in farms for labourers?—Yes, there is a good deal of it going on with good landlords, certainly.

54,980. In some districts more than others?—Oh yes; they vary very much. I do not wish to condemn landlords wholesale or masters wholesale.

54,981. Some of them may not be able to give as good buildings as they wish, perhaps?—I believe a good many landlords live beyond their means, but they do not seem to cut down their expenses at all; but if the tenant wants things to be done they complain of want of means. I have heard that frequently.

Sir John Llewelyn.

54,982. What landlords live beyond their means; do you know any?—Well, a good many seem to do it, and then when any application is made in regard to improvements in the way that Professor Rhŷs suggests, they complain that they have no money.

Professor Rhŷs.

54,983. Have you known of any cases of the kind?—Oh, yes.

54,984. Then with regard to the fear of the farmers to come forward; how do you discover that?—By what they themselves say.

54,985. Or by you asking them—which?—In the course of conversation it comes up.

54,986. What do they say; give me the substance of the conversation; how do they put it?—Well, that they are afraid of the consequences of doing it.

54,987. They would not use the word "consequences" very likely; how would they put it themselves in familiar language—that they are afraid of Mr. so-and-so?—Of the landlord.

54,988. Not the agent?—Well the agent and landlord work together with regard to the matter.

54,989. Then you say that they suffer very much from the game. Do you know of any estates where the farmers are afraid to kill the ground game—afraid to carry out the Ground Game Act?—Yes.

54,990. Afraid of killing the ground game?—Yes.

54,991. And do not do it?—They do not do it but to a very limited extent.

54,992. Lest they should offend their landlords?—Yes.

54,993. You know such cases?—I know such cases.

54,994. Then in other cases where they suffer from the game generally, do they ever ask for compensation for damages?—Yes.

54,995. They do sometimes venture to ask for damages?—Sometimes, and have it, and sometimes they do not have it.

54,996. Are there any that are afraid of asking for damages or for compensation?—Yes, I have known cases of that kind.

25,997. Where there was reasonable ground for thinking that they had suffered, but they were afraid to ask for any compensation?—Yes, certainly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

54,998. You think that the sanitary inspectors do not carry out their duties as they should do?—They certainly do not.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

54,999. You are aware that the sanitary inspector is the servant of the rural sanitary authority?—Yes, it would be the guardians.

55,000. I cannot tell what the proportion is in Knighton, but there are ex officio guardians I know, and they have a right to sit on the rural sanitary authority as well?—Yes.

55,001. Do you think it is because the sanitary inspector is afraid to give offence to the landlords that he does not report the state of the farmhouses?—Very likely, in some cases.

55,002. Do you think that he will carry out his duties in a more fearless manner when he becomes the servant of the district council?—I do not know I am sure; it is to be hoped so.

55,003. What is the character of the tenant farmers in Radnorshire as far as thrift and industry go?—I believe they are remarkably thrifty and industrious taking them as a whole.

55,004. And sober?—Yes, taking them on the whole; they will compare favourably with those of any county in either England or Wales.

55,005. Are they pretty independent in character or are they servile?—There is a good deal of servile spirit on the part of many.

55,006. What is the cause of that?—What I stated just now, the fear of their landlords. Sometimes, very likely, the fear is groundless, and at other times, again, I think there is ground for it.

55,007. Do you think that security of tenure would promote manliness of character among the tenant farmers?—Gradually.

55,008. And that it is a desirable thing?—Most desirable. It is one of the things that is needed most, as far as I am able to learn—of course together with fair rents.

55,009. Do you know anything about the condition of the farmers financially?—Yes, a good deal. I have been among farmers all my days, and I am the son of a tenant farmer myself.

55,010. What is their condition at the present time?—No doubt many farmers are very short of money.

55,011. Do you think they are satisfied with the abatements made by their landlords?—In some cases, and in others they are not.

55,012. Do you know whether they complain of the abatements that are made to them, those that are not satisfied?—Well, they complain plenty.

55,013. Do they complain to the agent or to the landlord?—I have no doubt at all that they do.

55,014. You think they are not afraid to complain, although you say their fear is so great?—Some, no doubt will be afraid.

55,015. Why should they be afraid? Is it because the landlord or the agent might think that they were natural grumblers?—And dissatisfied.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,016. You have had an opportunity of mixing with the tenants in this neighbourhood.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

What is it they wish with regard to game: do they ever express to you what their wishes are?—I do not think that they would object at all to their landlords coming and shooting over the tarm so many times in the year, without mentioning the number of times; but what they object to is for so much game to be kept on the farms—a large number of pheasants to be reared, and a large number of hares.

55,017. Are there many keepers?—Yes, a good many.

55,018. Are they popular with the tenants?—Well, not always.

55,019. Do you think if they had no keepers the tenant farmers would keep game sufficient for their landlords to come and shoot?—I should think so: quite sufficient for their tenants' interest.

55,020. They have no ill-feeling towards the landlord. You think they would try to preserve game and give him some sport?—Oh, I think so.

55,021. Has any complaint been made to the sanitary authorities about these cottages and farmhouses that are in such bad order?—I have known cases where complaints have been made.

55,022. And nothing done?—Sometimes something has been done.

55,023. Do you think the sanitary inspector would be a popular man amongst the landlords if he were to order this house or that house to be pulled down as not fit for human habitation?—He ought not to study popularity, but to do what is right.

55,024. Quite so; but do you think he is always in a position to do that?—Well, he ought to be.

55,025. Is he not often employed by the landlords besides?—Yes. Very likely there are many sanitary inspectors afraid to offend the landlords.

55,026. Do not you think that, besides the fear of the landlords, there are many farmers, again, who compose the sanitary committee, and the inspectors are afraid, on that ground also, to act independently?—In a good many cases.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

55,027. They are not free to act as they would like to?—I am afraid not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,028. There are three or four questions handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Will you allow me "to divide your timid farmers into two groups; "that is to say, the men who have not been "evicted, and the men who have been evicted?" You said there had been some evictions to your knowledge. "Can you suggest anything which "the second class, the men who have been "evicted, can fear? What have they to lose?"—Well, Providence has opened up the way for some of them to get better farms, and others, again, have had very great difficulties; there is no doubt at all about that.

55,029. "The Ground Game Act is operative "in the district, is it not?"—How could it be in operation when there are so very many hares about?

55,030. "Is it in operation in the district?" That is the question?—Then why should there be any complaints?

55,031. I cannot answer that. It is for you to answer the question. This is Mr. Vincent's question, you understand, not mine. "The "Ground Game Act is operative in the district, "is it not?"—I cannot understand how it should be carried out, and all these complaints about now. That is my answer to that question.

55,032. "What is you occupation?"—Baptist minister.

55,033. There are two questions by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Has not great distress been caused "in this district by the failure of the Liberator "Society?"—No, only in very, very few cases.

55,034. "Can you suggest any remedy for the "prevention of such frauds in the future?"—All companies ought to be under Government supervision.

55,035. Mr. Vincent asks:—"Will you name "any estates on which the tenants are afraid to "exercise rights under the Ground Game Act?"—It would be an unfair thing to name estates, too.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JEFFREY JONES called and examined.

Sir John Llewllyn.

55,036. Where do you reside?—Llanfair House, Llandrindod.

55,037. What is the evidence you wish to give?—As my name has been mentioned in connexion with the evidence in Miss Severn's case I wish to make a statement. When these cases which have been mentioned before you were enforced, I happened to be at that time the district political agent, and I happened at the same time to be the man employed to haul Miss Severn's coal. At the time of the election of 1892, and on my taking part at the election—

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

55,038. Was it the county council election?—No, a county election—I was district agent at the time of the county council election as well. As soon as I took part in the election I was stopped from doing the work. I may also mention that being agent for that district, the minister of the Baptist chapel came to my house on several occasions to ask me what was to be done in connexion with the stopping of the two maids coming to chapel. I told him that if she did not give way by fair means, I should put the case in the hands of a society that I had been told of that would help in such cases. In the meantime he wrote her, and she saw her folly, and gave way, and admitted them once more to go to chapel. Then in the case of Mr. Thomas Owens.

55,039. Who was Mr. Thomas Owens?—The one stopped at the time of the county council election.

55,040. Do you mean the gardener?—The gardener. The lady sent the maid out to ask him for which of the persons he intended to vote. His answer was that he would not tell anyone, that he would not even tell his own wife, and he stuck to this. The next morning he went to his work. There had been no complaints before against him or against me as haulier, but the next morning when he went to his work he was instantly dismissed on his appearance on the ground.

55,041. You have heard it stated this morning that there were previous complaints?—There were no previous complaints.

55,042. Did he state to you that there were no complaints?—Yes, he did state it to me.

55,043. You have heard it stated this morning that there were?—Yes, I have heard it this morning. I may mention that she does not require anyone on the place continually; he was only there about two days a week, or two or three days, and he was going there every morning for an hour or two, and then sometimes during the whole day to bring in coal, and do little things to the house and little things in the garden.

55,044. He told you there had been no previous complaints?—No previous complaints whatever. There was some evidence given this morning that I should like to rebut as to the housekeeper's husband coming here. This housekeeper was in such a bad way that the man told me himself that she cried bitterly when the lady sent her out with his last pay.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,045. Was in such a way about her landlady?—Yes, it vexed her when the man was so stopped, because he was very useful about the house, and he attended to them so well, and they were going on so well together that the girls cried when he was stopped, and undoubtedly in the opinion of the whole people in the neighbourhood at the time they all cried "shame" to the actions of the lady. I have no doubt in my mind but what it was religious and political bias.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,046. Is it a fact that this man was stopped from his work the very next day after he had refused to state how he would vote?—As soon as he came with the papers to the house the next morning as usual, he was stopped.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,047. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Has not the occasional man of whom you "speak been succeeded by a permanent man?" —I cannot say. This man is not there all his time. He is there most of his time, but the other man could have been as permanent as this one.

Professor Rhŷs.

55,048. He might have been?—He might have been.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS GOUGH called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,049. Where do you live?—Grove Villas, Knighton.

55,050. I believe you are the sanitary inspector for the rural district of Knighton?—I am. Having heard the evidence of a former witness I wish to say that I have been sanitary inspector for the last 18 years, and my appointment as sanitary inspector is a permanent one; also that I am not in any way afraid of any landlord in the district. I also wish to say that during the 18 years I have been inspector no landlord or agent has ever in any way tried to interfere with me in the performance of my duties.

See 54,947.

With regard to the state of the labourers' cottages they are very much improved to what they were years ago. It has been my duty to send notices to the landlords on the various estates in this district, and I have done so from time to time as I have become aware of defects or nuisances. I have no hesitation in mentioning the various estates; as to the Brampton

Brian estate in very many instances the cottages have been improved; there are a great number of cottages there. In every instance in which there has been notice served the old ones have been improved. On the Stanage estate also wherever I have given notice I have always had the work done. On Lord Ormathwaite's estate, which is a very large one in this district, the houses 15 years ago were in a very bad condition, but there have been new farms built from time to time, in fact there was an understanding with the owner of that estate that a new farmhouse should be put up every year. There have been a large number put up, and the property has been very much improved.

With regard to overcrowding, I am not aware of any overcrowding anywhere in my district, that is, more residing in the houses than should reside there. I am not aware of it at any rate. I always tell the people to send me notice privately of anything that may occur in my district. If they do send me notice I visit it. I have had notices sent me, and they are entered privately in a book which I am bound to keep. I have had very few notices during the last 18 years. I do not think I have had a dozen notices sent by private persons, although I ask for them.

55,051. Has the Rev. William Williams ever given notice of any case?—He never has even spoken to me on the subject.

55,052. I suppose there is a little practical difficulty with regard to cottages everywhere. A labourer sometimes has a large family?—Yes, sometimes.

55,053. And if his cottage is a small one it becomes a practical difficulty that is not very easy to get over with the best of intentions?—In places where I have had notices of that I have gone to the people. With respect to one cottage—an instance I just remember now—the tenants had to take a room in an adjoining house for part of the family to live in. And the landlord, the owner of the house, afterwards made provision for it, and it was remedied. Wherever it is necessary, and I am aware of it, I move in the matter.

55,054. It is undoubtedly contrary to morality to allow a lot of young men and women to herd together?—Yes, the new cottages built now are built with more bedrooms. The old cottages were built with two bedrooms, and there was a difficulty with regard to sleeping accommodation. The new cottages have three bedrooms. With respect to the older ones where there is a large family we have to take steps to remove them. I am not aware of a single cottage—I have not one on my books at the present moment—where such a thing exists.

55,055. To that extent you consider the neighbourhood of Knighton will compare well with other parts of Wales?—I think it will compare well with any adjoining district at the present time with regard to labourers' cottages. I am not inspector for the town. I do not know what the town is. I cannot say. I have no part of the town in my district; I am in the country, the rural district.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,056. Are the cottages held by the labourer direct from the landlord, or with the farm?—Some are held in one way, and some in the other, the farmers generally have the cottages.

55,057. They are sublet to the labourers'?—Yes.

55,058. Is it then so easy to abate the nuisance?—I find no difficulty.

55,059. Do you devote your time entirely to that?—No, I do not. I am District Surveyor of Highways for the Knighton Highway Board.

55,060. Do you occupy any land?—No, I do not now. I have been a farmer.

55,061. Are you in a position to deny the statement made by Mr. Williams that there are such cottages in the neighbourhood?—I say there is no such cottage to my knowledge in my district as Mr. Williams described.

Professor Rhŷs.

55,062. What might be the extent of your district? Could you roughly state it?—My district is the whole of the Knighton Union, about 8,000 population.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

55,063. Are there any villages in it?—Oh, yes, several, a number.

55,064. Can you give the names of some of them?—Knucklas, Duthlass, Beguildy, Llangunllo, and Bleddfa.

55,065. You say you asked the people to inform you?—I always ask them wherever I go.

55,066. What people?—The inhabitants, the occupiers of the houses I visit.

55,067. You could scarcely ask everyone. Whom do you get at?—Those I call upon—the wives of the people I call upon.

55,068. Sometimes they do not want improvements?—Sometimes we have to force the occupiers quite as much as we have to force the owners to keep their houses right.

55,069. So that it does not follow that they would always tell?—They would not tell anything about their own cleanliness.

55,070. They might tell you about their neighbours?—Yes.

55,071. Do you drive through the villages every now and then or what is the plan you adopt?—I go from time to time through the villages.

55,072. Have you been to any of these lately?—Yes, I was at two or three yesterday.

55,073. Name them?—I was at Beguildy, and all the villages from there down.

55,074. That is up the valley?—Yes.

55,075. How far is that from here?—Eight miles. I am not all my time at sanitary inspection; nothing like it.

55,076. The highway business leads you into the sanitary business to a certain extent, I suppose?—Yes, at the same time.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,077. Mr. Vincent asks a question: "It has "been suggested that you are afraid of the "landlord. Is that so"?—I am not afraid of any landlord in my district.

55,078. This is a question by Mr. Nixson: "Do you make a house-to-house inspection"?—There has been a house-to-house inspection of every house. I do not make it regularly, but I call and try to find out where every nuisance exists.

55,079. "If so at what periods"—Generally all through the year from time to time. Sometimes one part of the district, sometimes another. This district is a very large one, it would be quite impossible to make a regular periodical house-to-house inspection.

55,080. "Are you an agricultural tenant"—I am not at present.

Professor Rhŷs.

55,081. If you make a house-to-house inspection you have to take it in portions, have you not?—When I go into a village I go and call at houses in the village.

55,082. That does not quite convince me that it would cover the whole district in time unless you take them regularly, one portion after another?—It would take a very long time to cover the whole district; the district is so very large.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

55,083. You make notes of what district you inspect from house to house?—Every place I have visited is entered in a book when I come home, and put before the Rural Sanitary Authority at their meetings, and they can tell where I have been and where I have not been by looking at my journal. It is regularly put before them at every sanitary meeting, and they know where I have been and what I have done.

55,084. Is this journal open to anyone besides the sanitary authority?—I show it to any person who wishes to see it.

55,085. But as a matter of right. It is placed before the sanitary authority?—Yes, but I am not aware that it is open to the public.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,086. That constitutes a regular system of visits?—The journal states what places I have visited, and all the cases, and what they were, whose property, and the owners and the occupiers, and what the matter was that caused the report.

55,087. Are you able to do the whole of the district in the current year?—No; I should not be able to see it all in one year. Oh, dear, no.

55,088. The district you have to cover would take more than a twelvemonth?—Oh, yes.

55,089. Still, it is a systematic inspection?—It is a systematic inspection; and then I endeavour to get information in every way that I can so as to be informed where I am wanted, and to visit every house. To visit houses where there is no inspection required at all would be a waste of time.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,090. Is it not possible that, on an examination of your books, the guardians might report that you are not doing your duty to the Local Government Board?—If they examined my books they could see what I was doing.

55,091. They could see if you were not doing your duty?—Oh, certainly, they would soon tell me so—that is, if they were not satisfied with it—because any book shows my work. Whether it is much or little my book shows it.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned sine die.

APPENDIX.

LETTERS from MR. W. F. D. SAUNDERS, of GLANRHYDW, to MR. WILLIAM THOMAS, PONTANTWN, near CIDWELLY, referred to at 37,076, 37,077, and 38,197–38,251.

Glanrhwdw,
July 4th, 1893.

DEAR MR. THOMAS,

WILL you please to bring me your half-year's rent, due last Lady-day, together with the tithes, 16*s.* 11*d.*, less 2*l.* 10*s.*, and less income tax, to the "Bridge Inn," Pontantwn, on Tuesday, July 18th, at 12 o'clock. Please also to bring your last half-year's receipt with you. I must remind you that the allowance of 5*l.* a year I made you was only for two years, because I shall not allow it to you again after that time. I made the allowance thinking it would make you contented; from what I hear it has quite failed, so it is useless to continue the allowance, and so I shall give it then to someone else who may appreciate it more. Not only are you discontented, I hear you are also trying to stir up ill-feeling between my tenants and me (unsuccessfully I am thankful to hear); this as long as you are my tenant, I will not allow. My tenants are quite capable of managing their own business without your interference, so I think if you attended to your own business a little more, and to other people's a little less, it would be better for all parties. There is no need for you to stay at Pontantwn Factory longer than you wish, and sooner than that you should suffer loss in any way by remaining on as my tenant, I am quite willing to take your holding over next September, should you wish to leave, if you will give me a written notice to that effect written seven days from now. I have no objection whatever to your attending any meetings you may wish, and making any statement about your own case you like; but should you make any statement I think it best that you should also say that you are at Pontantwn Factory only as long as it suits you to be there, that you find it pays you to rent land from me, and let out your own land; that you have had an allowance made equal to about 12½ per cent. for two years, and that you are able to employ labour to work in your factory, and so have plenty of spare time to interfere with other people's business; I do not think your case will be found a hard one, but I object to your making statements about any of my farms about which you can know nothing. I have done all I can to make all comfortable, it is not my fault the want of rain, neither is it my fault that a Government is in power which, as soon as it comes in, puts a stop to all confidence, and so spoils all trade, and during whose power everything always has and always will go wrong.

Yours truly,
(Signed) W. F. SAUNDERS.

To Mr. William Thomas,
Pontantwn Factory.

Glanrhwdw,
July 24th, 1893.

DEAR MR. THOMAS,

IF you are still not satisfied with your taking from me, I can get you 15*l.* for yourself if you are willing to turn out the end of this next September. Kindly let me know at once if you will accept this or not, as I wish to arrange at once with a man, should you wish to leave.

Yours truly,
(Signed) W. F. D. SAUNDERS.

Factory, Pontantwn,
July 25th, 1893.

DEAR MR. SAUNDERS,

IN reply to your letter of the 4th inst., I hardly thought you would form such an unfavourable opinion of me without first satisfying yourself of the truth of the representation made to you by the person or persons responsible for the statement, that I am trying to stir up ill-feeling between your tenants and yourself. I am sorry that I shall be under the painful necessity to call on whoever told you to prove his words. I never asked one of your tenants, nor even a single tenant within the parish, to attend the meetings held to take into consideration the evidence to be given from the parish. Personally I am indifferent whether the farmers will take advantage of the visit of the Royal Commissioners, and in reply to yours of the 24th, I beg to say that I have not shown anyone any intention to leave the factory.

Yours truly,
(Signed) WILLIAM THOMAS.

W. F. D. Saunders, Esq.

Glanrhwdw,
July 27th, 1893.

DEAR MR. THOMAS,

A ROYAL COMMISSION, attended by landlords and tenants, to inquire into the cause of the depressed state of agriculture I would most thoroughly approve of, and do all I could to assist with any information at my disposal, but meetings to get up evidence to put before a Royal Commission which landlords are not invited to attend I do not approve of, as the only object can be to put tenant against landlord. This is too absurd, as one cannot get on without the other; such a meeting was held at Llangendeirne, of which I hear you were one of the chief movers; from this I gathered you were not satisfied with your holding from me, so was enabled to make you the offer I have, as I have no wish that you should suffer loss or any inconvenience by remaining a tenant of mine. I conclude from your letter you decline my offer.

Yours truly,
(Signed) W. F. D. SAUNDERS.

Original Statement in Welsh of the Evidence of Mr. Lewis Lewis, Carnau Gwynion, Gwynfe, given at Llandovery. Question 39,655 (48th Day).

Cyflwynedig i'r Ddirprwyaeth Gymreig Dirol.

Deugain mlynedd yn ol, rhentodd fy nhad, sef Edward Lewis, Brynpedol, Cwmaman, fferm o'r enw y Lan, Llangadog. Mesurai rhwng chwech a saith ugain erw. Mae ei haner yn wlyb, uchel, a diffrwyth, a'r rhelyw yn dir canolig ei ansawdd, a'i wyneb i gyd i'r gogledd. Ei rent oedd 55p., ac addawodd y meistr lease o 14 mlynedd. Ofnai fy nhad ei derbyn, gan fod y fferm yn ddieithr iddo, a'r rhent yn rhy uchel, yn ol tystiolaeth y cymydogion. Gan ein bod yn deulu cryf, sef tad a mam, a chwech o blant mewn maint i weithio, ymroddwyd o ddifrif i amaethu, a mawr ac amrywiol y gwaith a wnaed: gan fod y tir wedi ei hir esgeuluso, ymosodwyd i arloesi, sychu, a gwrteithio y caeau salaf yn gyntaf; heblaw y dyrus anial a gliriwyd, arloeswyd agos 400 o latheni o hen gloddiau ceimion, a chodwyd agos 300 llath o rai newyddion cywirach, a chredaf fod cymaint bum' waith o gwteri wedi eu gwneud genym yno; symudwyd pridd cronedig talarau a ffosydd, wedi ei gymysgu â chalch, ar hyd y caeau. A chludwyd yn flynyddol yno rhwng 30 a 40 llwyth o galch, a hyny dros flordd yr oedd agos ddwy filldir o honi mor gul, gwlyb, a garw, fel yr oedd yn ddigon o benyd wasanaeth i ddyn ac i anifail i'w theithio; a thebyg, os nad gwaeth, oedd y ffyrdd ereill a gyfeirient yno yr adeg hono. Enillid y calch drwy gludo glo i'w losgi, o Brynaman i Benyrhiwwen.

Credwyf na feiddiodd neb gyhuddo fy rhieni o afradlonedd, na'u plant ychwaith, cyhyd ag y buont yn y Lan. Brethyn a gwlenyn cartref, rhib, a moleskin oedd y wisg fynychaf yr adeg hono. Byddai y dorth haidd yn amlach na'r dorth wen ar y bwrdd, ac o'r ceirch ceid bara ac enllyn, sef sucan, a rhynion wnai y tro yn lle rice, a chroesawid cawl a llaeth yn fwy na'r te a'r coffi byth a hefyd, fel yn bresenol. Nid oedd un o honom yn euog o blygu glin i Bacchus, na gwneud aberth llosg efo'r bibell er dyhuddo'i blys. Yr oedd fy nhad yn ddirwestwr er cychwyniad y gymdeithas, yr wyf yn meddwl, a minau er yn blentyn, a'r lleill o'r teulu yn ymarferol, os nid mewn enw. Wedi rhai blynyddoedd o drin y fferm, yr oedd gwedd newydd a harddach ar y meusydd, y cloddiau, a'r perthi, yr hyn a dueddodd fy nhad i geisio y lease addawedig; ond nis cafodd hi er ei cheisio drachefn. Er hyny, credai fy nhad ei air, nad oedd perygl y cawsai ymadael tra y telid am y tir; gyrid pob gorchwyl yn mlaen fel cynt, hyd o fewn rhai misoedd i dderbyniad y "notice to quit," yr hwn a gafwyd ar ben wyth mlynedd. Effeithiodd y son am, a derbyniad y notice, yn ddifrifol ar fy nhad, a dywedodd wrth ei gludwyr fod notice wedi d'od iddo ef o flaen hwnw—y gwir a ddywedodd—ehedodd ei ysbryd diddichell a phur i wlad nad oes twyll, trais, nac anghyfiawnder o'i mewn, yn mhen pum wythnos o'r Lan. Tystiai y meddyg (Dr. Thomas, Llan ——), iddo farw o doriad calon. Aeth yn aberth i raib landlord a'r gyfraith fyddai yn ddiraddiad i wlad baganaidd ei harfer. Y rheswm dros y notice oedd fod merch i'r perchen wedi priodi, ac eisieu lle arni. Wedi yr holl draul a'r drafferth am wyth mlynedd gan deulu cryf, gweithgar, a darbodus, naturiol oedd disgwyl cryn dipyn o elw. Cawsom ddigon o fwyd cryf ac iach, a dillad clyd, os yn arw. Prin 8p. y flwyddyn o log gafwyd ar yr holl eiddo, byw a marw, a berthynai i'r fferm. A rhaid oedd boddloni heb geiniog o gyflog drwy y blynyddoedd. Cyfiawn yn ddiau fuasai cael ad-daliad am yr holl welliantau na chafwyd fawr oddiwrthynt, ac yn enwedig oherwydd cael myn'd ffwrdd agos ar haner yr amser addawedig; yn lle canoedd o bunoedd, cafwyd papur yn cynwys canoedd o eiriau yn rhybuddio i beidio cyffwrdd a'r domen dail, ac yn bygwth os gwneid, er nad oedd rhawied o dail ar y buarth pan aethom yno. Cawsom hefyd ddychwelyd gyda cherbyd gwag o'r buarth, oherwydd i ni fethu symud ein heiddo oll mewn pryd.

"Eraill a lafuriasant, a chwithau a aethoch i mewn i'w llafur hwynt."—Ioan iv., 38.

Pan fo eisiau tir ar rywun, dylai yn gyntaf ofyn i'r deiliad a ydyw yn ymadael; os dywed ei fod, dyna ffordd rydd a chydwybod rydd ganddo i fyn'd at y meister; felly y gwnaeth fy nhad 32 mlynedd yn ol, pan rentodd Carnau Gwynion, am y swm uchel o 50p., mwy o 10p. nag oedd ddwy neu dair blynedd cyn hyny,—y codiad a barodd i'r deiliad fethu talu. Fferm o 100 erw, yn yr un cwmwd a'r Lan, a'r un nodweddion, i raddau yn perthyn iddynt, ond fod y lle hwn lawer yn ddiffrwythach pan ddaethom iddo; mae ei raen yn rhagorach erbyn hyn, wedi cario cymaint o bridd, tail, a marl i'w wyneb, wedi gadael yr aradr a'r og i rydu. Rhyw 25 mlynedd yn ol, planwyd o ddwy i dair erw o'r pawrdir cysgotaf oedd yma, heb ofyn am dano, na rho'i ceiniog yn ol ar ei gyfer, mewn rhent na dim arall. Yn Mawrth 1871, notice i wthio lease o saith mlynedd, codi'r tir i 60p., troi 10p. yn flynyddol i dori cwteri, a minau i'w cau ar gost fy hun. Bu brwydr galed rhyngom; y diwedd fu, cael y tir am 50p., yntau i ddwyn holl draul y cwteri, a minau i dalu pump y cant am y gost. Mawrth 1892, notice i dynu un rhan o dair o'r tir oddiwrthyf, llwyddwyd i'w gadw eilwaith. Medi, yr un flwyddyn eto, notice drachefn i adael yr oll yn awr, os na roddwn yr un faint am dano ar ol tynu 13 erw oddiwrtho; wedi misoedd o bryder, heb wybod pa fan i fyned, caniataodd o gylch haner gwerth y tir a gollwyd i mi, heb gael dim ar gyfer y gwelliantau wnaed arno. Yr arferiad er ys blynyddoedd bellach gan feistri ystyriol yw gostwng y rhent yn hytrach na'i godi. Credaf mai prif achos y codiad yw y gwelliantau wneuthum ar y tir, ynghyd a rhaib deiliaid diegwyddor am dir, a'r gwahaniaeth barn rhyngwyf a'r meistr a'r ystiward; pan sieryd fy meistr a mi am wleidyddiaeth, nid wyf yn celu fy marn: mae genyf gystal hawl i'w mynegi ag sydd ganddo yntau. Credaf fod ffermydd yr ardal hon yn gyffredin yn rhy ddrud o un rhan o dair o leiaf ar dymorau prin eu cynyrch a gwan eu masnach, fel mae er's hir amser bellach. Pris y da, a'r defaid, a'r gwlan yn aml yw haner yr hyn oeddynt o gylch 20 mlynedd yn ol; y ceffylau, un rhan o dair, y moch, un rhan o bump, ymenyn, un rhan o ddeg, a'r caws, un rhan o dair, yn is. Ychydig brydlesi sydd yma; dysgwylir i ddeiliad dalu mwy am ei dir cyn cael un; ansefydlogrwydd masnach, ac ofn codiad ar ei welliantau wedi yr el allan, yn peri diofalwch am ei chael. Y mae deiliad Brynchwyth wedi cael un, ac nid oes neb wedi ffermio cystal ag ef yn yr ardal hon er pan cafodd y brydles.

Y mae cytundeb gan fy meistr, Major C. B. Lewis (Gwynfe House, gynt), ar ei ystad, a hwnw yn rhy unochrog a chaeth y rhan fwyaf o hono, a rhwymir y deiliaid oll i'w arwyddo, yr hwn sydd mewn iaith nas gall un o bob saith ei ddeall.

Y mae'r gof, y saer, a'r sadler, y crydd, a'r teiliwr, wedi agos dyblu eu harian o fewn y 40 mlynedd diweddaf.

Felly hefyd y gweithwyr, a'r gwasanaethyddion, y maent un ran o dair o leiaf yn uwch eu cyflogau. Addawodd fy meistr adgyweirio a thoi y ty â slates ymhen tair blynedd ar ol ei rentu; y mae dros 30 o flynyddoedd er hyny, a'r gwaith heb ei wneud eto; y mae mor oer ag ysgubor, gan nad oes ceiling ond dan un ran o dair o hono. Ar ystorm o eira, gorchuddir y loft, y gwelyau, a'r cwbl fyddo o dan y tiles, ag eira. Bu raid i mi dalu y crefftwyr am doi y llaethdy, heblaw cludo'r defnyddiau, tori lle a gosod ffenestr, ei lorio, a'i feincio o'r newydd; propiais dan dô yr ysgubor, a'i ddiddosi ef â thô yr ystabl am flynyddoedd, a chymell llawer cyn cael tô newydd, a chario'r cwbl ar gost fy hun. Ugain mlynedd yn ol costais dy gwair, ei ddefnydd a'i wneyd, felly hefyd am dô a thoi y carthouse. Mae y bwyd yn lled wahanol i'r hyn oedd 40 mlynedd yn ol, yn fwy dymunol i'r archwaeth; ymbwyllaf cyn dyweyd ei fod yn well; credaf fod ffrwyth y ceirch, y dorth haidd a chymysg, y bwdran, y cawl, a'r llaeth, yn tra rhagori ar y dorth wen byth a hefyd, a'r te a'r coffi parhaus. Esgeulusir cynyrch cartref er dilyn ffasiwn flysig y dref a'r gweithiau. Ni chaiff ffermwyr ucheldiroedd gig ffres lawer yn amlach nag y byddant yn lladd mochyn, ac ambell bryd mewn ffair neu farchnad. Tybiaf fod y gweithiwr yn ei gael yn amlach.

Mae cymaint o wahaniaeth yn ngwisg y tirfeddianwr a'i ddeiliaid ag sydd rhwng eiddo y paun a llwyd-y-berth.

Bwyta, yfed, ac ymbleseru ar dir a mor, yw prif amcan llu o honynt, ar draul llethu eu deiliaid a thlodi eu gwlad eu hunain. Unig wyliau y rhan amlaf o ffermwyr a gweithwyr yr ardal hon yw myn'd i ffair neu farchnad mor aml ag y bydd neges ganddynt.

Mae yr wylnos a'r daith ar derfynu yma: y cyngherdd a'r eisteddfod ambell waith yn eu lle.

Rhentir y game a'r plas ar ystad Gwynfe i unrhyw estron a roddo fwyaf am danynt. Llythyren farw yw y Ground Game Act oherwydd hyny.

Annibynwyr yw y lluaws yma. Eglwyswr yw fy meistr, a Cheidwadwr o ddaliadau: siarada ychydig Gymraeg a'i ddeiliaid, ond gwell ganddo Saesonaeg. Y mae yma ffermwyr a'u plant yn enill drwy garto glo, sand, ceryg, a phethau ereill, a thrwy weithio mewn gwahanol ffyrdd er cael dauben y llinyn yn nghyd, ac er y cwbl methant. Y mae yma rai wedi prynu eu ffermydd yn ddiweddar ar yr ystad hon. Rhent un cyn ei gwerthu oedd 32p., y llog yn awr yn ol 3½ y cant oddeutu 20p. yn rhagor. Prynodd y deiliad ef rhag cael ei droi allan; gwnaeth amryw yn gyffelyb, a braidd na lithrodd fy nhroed i'r un pwll a hwythau. Trowyd yn ol yn y rhent ar bedwar taliad yn y blynyddoedd 1885, 1886, 1887, a 1892, y swm o'i gyfrif yn un o 3s. 6c. yn y bunt. Diau fod yma lawer yn benthyca er talu y rhent, ond gwnant hyny mor ddirgel ag y gallant, rhag dangos eu gwendid. A gwerthir anifeiliaid, yn groes i addysg y ddiareb, o "beidio gwerthu giar ar y gwlaw," er cyfarfod a galwad y meistr, a llawer baich trwm a chynyddol arall a osodir yn annheg ar ysgwyddau celyd yr amaethwr diwyd a hir ei amynedd.

Yn wyneb yr oll ffeithiau yna, onid yw yn hen bryd cael cyfreithiau tirol cyfiawnach yn ein gwlad, tebyg i'r rhai gafodd yr Iwerddon flynyddoedd yn ol. Credaf y gellid codi dwbl y cynyrch ag a wneir yn bresenol dan lywodraeth unochrog arglwyddi. Ac onid yw yn warthnod ar Brydain Fawr fod y degwm yn rhedeg yn y cyfeiriad y mae, tra y dylai fod, er's hir amser, wedi ei droi i ysgafnhau beichiau y trethdalwyr.

WELSH BALLAD, BY REES JONES, PWLLFFEIN, AUTHOR OF "CRWTH DYFFRYN CLETTWR."

Quoted by Dr. D. Rhys Jones at Cardigan.—Question 43,477, 52nd Day.

YMDDIDDAN

Rhwng Dd. Lloyd, Yswain o Alltyrodyn, Llandyssul, Ceredigion, a'i ddeilades Sara, Gwaralltyryn.

[Sara.]

Dydd da i chwi, fy meistr mwyn,
A ro'wch chwi glust i wrando'm cwyn?
Mae'n dilyn beunydd ofid cas
Mae'r Lease sydd genni bron myn'd ma's.

[Llwyd.]

Mewn gofid pa'm y byddwch chwi?
Cewch Lease o'r newydd genyf fi.

[Sara.]

Parch i chwi, Syr, os fi a gaiff
Y Lease three everlasting life.

[Llwyd.]

Three everlasting!! Syndod mawr!
I fyw'n y fann lle'r y'ch yn awr?
Cyhyd a chystal fydd i chwi,
Un everlasting, coeliwch fi!

[Sara.]

Ni wna (fe dd'wedodd un o'm bro)
Un everlasting ddim o'r tro;
Ond os three everlasting gawn,
Y byddai'n Lease ragorol iawn.

[Llwyd.]

Pa faint o rent a ro'wch i mi,
Os rhoddaf Lease three lives i chwi?
Ac os cewch chwi, nid pawb a gaiff,
Y Lease three everlasting life.

[Sara.]

Cewch ugain punt hob dimmau goch,
A dwy wydd dew o gafnau'r moch,
A dwy iar ynyd gribgoch lân,
A llwyth o lo i gadw'ch tân.

[Llwyd.]

Wel, boddlon wyf, chwi gewch y Lease
Ac ar eich tir tywynned tês;
Llwydd ar eich gwaith o bryd i bryd,
I gael crynhoi y rhent yng nghyd.

[Sara.]

Anghofiais ofyn a gaf fi
Y cynnyg cyntaf gennych chwi?
Os gwelaf, er fy ngofid cas,
Three everlastings yn myn'd ma's.

[Llwyd.]

Cewch, Sara, cewch, a Lease hir lân,
Three everlastings, fel o'r bla'n,
Pawn weloch chwi, neu rai o'ch trâs
Un everlasting yn myn'd ma's.

Facsimiles of Bidding Letters (in Welsh and English).

Handed in by Dr. D. Rhys Jones, at Cardigan, on the 52nd day.—Question 43,493.

The following is the established form of a Bidding Letter throughout Carmarthenshire, even in cases where the parties concerned may have no knowledge whatsoever of the English language. The explanation probably is that each printer has a copy of the common form, which he varies, as may be required, by the insertion of the particulars supplied to him by the person giving him an order.—D. Lleufer Thomas.

Swydd Aberteifi, Hydref 17eg, 1843.

GAN ein bod yn bwriadu ymuno mewn Cyflwr Briodasol, dydd Llun, y 30ain o'r mis presennol, annogir ni gan ein Cyfeillion i wneuthur Neithior ar yr achlysur, yr un dydd, yn Nhŷ Tad y Ferch Ieuangc, a elwir y King's Arms, yn nhref Llandyssul; y pryd a'r lle y dymunem eich cwmpeini hoff, a pha roddion bynag a weloch yn dda eu cyflen arnom y dydd uchod, a dderbynir yn ddiolchgar, a gydnabyddir yn wresog, ac a ad-delir yn serchog, pryd bynag y gelwir am danynt ar y cyfryw achos,

Gan eich ufudd wasanaethwyr,

SAMUEL JONES.
MARGARET EVANS.

Mae y Gwr Ieuangc, a'i Dad a'i Fam, (Timothy a Rachel Jones, Red Lion, Llandyssul) yn dymuno ar fod i bob Pwython dyledus iddynt, gael eu dychwelyd i law y Gwr Ieuangc y diwrnod uchod, a byddant yn ddiolchgar, ynghyd a'i Deidiau (John Jones, a Benjamin Daniel), ei Frawd a'i Chwaer-yn-nghyfraith (Daniel a Catherine Jones), a'i Frawd (Benjamin Jones), am bob rhoddion ychwanegol.

Hefyd, mae y Ferch Ieuangc, ynghyd a'i Thad a'i Mham (John a Catherine Evans, King's Arms, Llandyssul) yn dymuno ar fod i bod Pwython dyledus iddynt, gael eu dychwelyd i law y Ferch Ieuangc y diwrnod uchod, a byddant yn ddiolchgar ynghyd a'i Ewythr a'i Mhodryb (John a Hannah Jones, Gilfachddafydd, a Dafydd a Mary Davies, Dolau Cwerchir, ag Elias ac Anne Thomas, Llandyssul) a'i Brawd a'i Chwaer (Evan a Susan Evans) am bob roddion ychwanegol.

Pob Pwython dyledus i ddiweddar Chwaer y Ferch Ieuangc (Elizabeth Evans) a elwir i mewn y pryd hyny.

Carmarthenshire, July 4th, 1878.

AS we intend to enter the matrimonial state, on Thursday, the 25th of July, we purpose to make a bidding on the occasion, the same day, at the young man's father's house, called Ty'r Bwch, in the parish of Llanfair ar y Bryn, when and where the favour of your good and agreeable company is respectfully solicited; and whatever donation you may be pleased to confer on us then will be thankfully received, warmly acknowledged, and cheerfully repaid whenever called for on a similar occasion,

By your most obedient servants,

OWEN GWYN.
ELEN MORGAN.

The young man, his father and mother (Llewelyn and Margaret Gwyn), his brothers (Evan and Rhys), and his aunt (Gwladys Bowen, Llwyn y Fedwen), desire that all gifts of the above nature due to them be returned to the young man on the above day, and will be thankful for all additional favours granted.

The young woman, her father (Rhydderch Morgan, Castell y moch, Lannon), and her brothers and sister (Howel, Gruffydd, and Gwenllian), desire that all gifts of the above nature due to them be returned to the young woman on the above day, and will be thankful for all additional favours conferred on her.

The young man's company will meet at Ffynnon Loero; and the young woman's at Pant y Clacwydd.

Notes on Labourers' Wages and on Diet.

Handed in by Dr. D. Rhys Jones, at Cardigan.—Question 43,492, 52nd Day.

Copies of Accounts of Wages of Labourers and Servants engaged at Ffynonwen, in the parish of Llangunllo, Cardigan, in 1839 and 1850–1 respectively. Extracted and translated into English by Dr. Rhys Jones, and handed in Question 43,492:—

Notes by witness.—This slightly increases the balance against the labourer bringing it to 1*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.*, instead of 18*s.* 9*d.*

The actual money earned was 11*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.* My father did not use to put down the daily wages paid. The wages which fit best for this amount are 8*d.* per day for winter months, and 9*d.* for summer months, harvest being excluded. If I mistake not we have about 15 lbs. butter and about 60 lbs. cheese, 16 Winchester barley, 27 wheat, and one Winchester of oats, as the principal items of food. There must have been at that time three or four children, ranging from seven years downwards. The wife's knitting and the pig must have supplied their clothing. This was a time when potatoes were very scarce. The family was supplied with a great deal of whey, skim-milk, and butter-milk from Ffynonwen. There was also a barley loaf of bread, a piece of cheese ½ lb. to 1 lb., and 2 or 3 ozs. of butter every Saturday night. I may add that all these children are or were lately all hardy and able to feed their children in a far different manner, though two or three years after the above date they were reduced on their father's death to parish fare.

The cottagers were used to have whey for helping to milk, and butter-milk and some butter for helping to churn. My father used to fatten and kill a sow every year. This meat was salted and dried. But on cutting up the sow he invariably gave each of the two cottagers 8 lbs. of meat free from bone. When on the division of a small farm he was allowed the farmhouse for another cottage attached to it, also the same quantity was divided in three portions. He was assumed to have a first demand on the cottagers. The men died one after the other from the two old cottages. On this account he was glad to have the third cottage. At last it came that he could not afford to employ the third cottager constantly. This cottage is now in ruins. Many men servants and maid servants in my father and mother's time served seven years and upwards. In these cases the man got a yearling heifer (but not of his own choice though one of the best) and the maid a pair of home-made blankets worth about 2*l.*

The food to the last remained very coarse. Salt meat was provided daily or nearly so on the farm, but as will be seen by the specimen account given meat was unknown to the cottager's wife and children except for an occasional meal obtained at the farm, and for the precious bit of meat supplied once a year. I think that when hering had been more abundant and cheap they were salted and dried by the cottagers.

Meat, butter, and cheese went under the common name of "Enllyn," and it was considered literally a sinful extravagance to have any two of these two together. The late Kilsby Jones knew this, and when indulging in butter and cheese together (the skim-mile cheese of course) he quoted Scripture in self-defenck saying, "What God hath united let no man separate."

Vaynor.—This is a superior farm, and has a large proportion of good meadow and pasture land, but the meadows 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, are very liable to be flooded. The dwelling-house is substantially built, but the roofs of the out-buildings require careful pointing with hair mortar, and crests placed on the ridges. I have based my figures on the average lettings througout the county, and taking into account the prices of agricultural produce during the last 15 years.

The sudden and probably temporary drop in prices of cattle and agricultural produce for this year should be met by an abatement while the depression lasts.

Penparkeithin.—This farm, which is held by the same tenant, contains good average land, sound for sheep breeding, and is much superior to most farms with a northerly aspect. The roofs of the houses on this also require the same treatment as those on Vaynor. All the land is in good heart, and appears to be properly managed by the present tenant.

When reletting these holdings the tithe rentcharge must be included in the future rent, therefore I have fixed a fair average amount (as stated below), to be added in lieu of tithes.

Amendment of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

Extracts from a Paper read by Mr. W. O. Brigstocke before the Carmarthenshire Chamber of Agriculture on the 20th November, 1894, and forwarded by him to the Secretary to supplement his evidence given at Cardigan on the 52nd Day.

* * * * * *

For many years I have been intimately associated with Welsh tenant farmers, and think that I know something of their aspirations and hopes, also of their faults and their failings; and it is my earnest wish to see full justice done to them, as well as to the landowning class of which I am a very humble representative. I purpose dividing my subject into three heads:—

(1.) To take a brief glance at matters as they existed before any sort of Agricultural Holdings Act was passed.
(2.) To consider the provisions of the present Act.
(3.) To consider what improvements are desirable.

* * * * * *

Now, gentlemen, having briefly touched on the two first heads of my subject I come to the third, which is by far the most important, and requires the anxious consideration both of landlords and tenants. It is universally admitted that the present Act is comparatively a failure; in this district it is practically a dead letter. Let us now, then, proceed to consider how it may be amended, so as to make it a practical working measure. As you know, the subject has been discussed at Chambers of Agriculture all over the kingdom, and the Central Chamber has published a very exhaustive and able report, with a great deal of which I concur. There are, however, some points on which I venture to differ. Probably, the most simple way of bringing the matter before you will be—

(1.) To analyse the recommendations of the Central Chamber.
(2.) To offer such suggestions as seem to me to be desirable.

The first recommendation of the Central Chamber is as to the basis of compensation, and they recommend that the words "justly due to the inherent capabilities "of the soil" be struck out. With regard to the improvement for which the landlord's consent is necessary some slight alterations are suggested, but as regards part 2, where only notice to the landlord is required, considerable alterations are put forth. The laying down of permanent pasturing, making gardens, orchards, or osier beds, not exceeding 1 acre, improving roads, improving water supply, reclaiming enclosed waste land, have all been added and put on the same footing as drainage, which is the only improvement in the schedule to the present Act. In the third part of the first schedule, where neither the consent of, nor notice to the landlord is required, the list of improvements is considerably extended, as the addition for compensation for artificial manure, lime, and feeding stuffs; any improvement other than those included in the first and second schedule, and which increases the value of the farm as an agricultural holding, may be treated as an improvement for which compensation can be claimed. This, obviously, is a very wide clause, and respecting which a good deal of controversy may naturally arise. With regard to procedure, valuers, and umpires, the Central Chamber recommend that there should be an official list of valuers, appointed by the County Council, and sanctioned by the Board of Agriculture, and that all umpires should be taken from this list; that there should be no appeal on questions of fact, or value, from the umpire's decision, but that on a question of law, an appeal may be made to the County Court Judge, whose decision would be final. With regard to distress, it is recommended that the right to distrain be limited to 12 months' rent due before making the diltress. There is also a very comprehensive schedule of dilapidations, and waste caused by tenants, in respect of which a landlord can, as is but fair and reasonable, claim compensation, but notice of the landlord's intention to make such claim must be given at least 28 days before the expiration of the tenancy, and that the period in respect of which any claim for waste or breach of covenant can be made, be reduced from four to two years. There is another recommendation, which I consider most fair and valuable, that at the commencement of any tenancy a record should be made and signed by both parties setting forth the existing condition of the holding. There are many other recommendations, but time will not permit of my referring to them in detail. The final one, however, is that the Board of Agriculture be empowered to grant loans to landlords for improvements, but is entirely silent as to the terms and conditions on which such advances are to be made.

I now come to my own suggestions for the improvement of the Act, and these I submit with the greatest deference, and throw them out merely as suggestions for discussion, and without any attempt to dogmatize :—

(1.) As to the basis of compensation, it appears to me that it should be based upon the actual expenditure, subject to the opinion of official valuers as to whether the expenditure is fair and reasonable and of such a character as to be suitable for the holding. For instance, if a tenant takes up the trade of a horse-dealer, and erects large ranges of stables to exhibit his hunters in, he clearly would not be entitled to compensation for them; but, on the other hand, if he erected suitable cowsheds, or hay barns, then I think he would be entitled to fair compensation for that class of buildings. The actual condition of the buildings, or other improvements, would, of course, have to be considered in fixing the amount of compensation payable to the outgoing tenant.

(2.) Then, again, as to improvements for which the landlord's consent is necessary. I am inclined to think that if the tenant gives due notice of his intention to carry out any of the improvements named in Part One of the First Schedule, and the landlord refuses to assent, the tenant may execute the improvements, and be entitled at the end of the tenancy to the same compensation that he would be entitled to had he obtained the landlord's consent. There is another matter respecting which a good deal was said before the Welsh Land Commission, namely, haulage of materials for buildings done by the landlord. It appears to me to be but fair and equitable that haulage of materials should be considered as an improvement in respect of which compensation should be payable, and I think that 20 years may be taken as a fair term during which the improvement might be taken to be unexhausted, so that should the tenancy determine at any time before the end of 20 years, the tenant would be entitled to compensation for the cost of the haulage, a proportionate part of it being deducted for each year during which the tenancy continued. The amount of the cost of haulage would, of course, have to be agreed upon before it was done, and a memorandum fixing the amount would have to be signed by both parties, and no claim in excess of the sum specified would be allowed. With respect to the mode of procedure, I am not altogether at one with the recommendations of the Central Chamber. In all cases where private arrangement failed I would make the county court judge the umpire. I lay very great stress on this point; to me it seems most desirable to have a gentleman who is not only learned in the law, but has the experience and training to marshal facts and sift evidence, and no judicial body has, after the test of many years, proved themselves more efficient and impartial than our county court judges. I would have two or more official valuers to every county; one to be appointed by the county council and one by the Board of Agriculture. These gentlemen would act as assessors, and sit with the county court judge, as naval officers sit in the Court of Admiralty, and also be authorised to view any farms, buildings, or works in respect of which compensation is claimed. It seems to me that we should thus have a thoroughly competent and impartial tribunal, and at the same time there would be no interference with the private rights of parties, either in respect to the settlement or getting up of their cases. I fear that I have already trespassed too long on your patience, and must weary you no more, for though the subject is most interesting and important, it is very complicated and difficult, and I feel acutely my inability to treat it in a thorough or comprehensive manner. I have endeavoured, however, to touch on the most important features of the question; the position of both landlord and tenant before any legislation took place, their relations under the present Act, and, lastly, mentioned some of the alterations which, as it seems to me, would render the Act workable and valuable. I especially desire to emphasise that we have already to hand machinery which, with moderate amendments and simplifications, would suffice to meet the requirements of both landlords and tenants. The age of feudalism is past and gone; no reasonable landlord nowadays expects obsequious servility from his tenants. All we ask from them is candour and honesty; whilst they on their part have every right to expect fair, aye, perhaps, generous, treatment from us; but though it may seem sad to many, rely upon it, the less either party indulges in mere sentiment, the better it will be for both. Farming is essentially a business, and must be carried out on business-like principles by both contracting parties; nor need this in the smallest degree lessen or diminish their mutual regard and esteem. In spite of what has been said by ignorant and irresponsible persons, I emphatically assert that a most kindly feeling exists in South Wales between landlords and tenants, and if I have spoken one word, or offered one suggestion, that will strengthen and cement that natural bond of union, I shall feel that I have not spoken in vain.

Noyadd Estate.

Statement as to Rental and Expenditure.

Handed in by Mr. C. E. Morgan Richardson at Cardigan.—Question 43,736, 52nd Day.

Note.—The acreage of the estate is about 2,500 acres. The expenditure for repairs during the 18½ years amounts to 4,146*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.*, or nearly 15 per cent. on the gross rents. When the estate was taken over by the Trustees it was heavily charged with annuities, &c., and the net rents after paying those charges and the repairs during the first 12 years would only be about 123*l.* per annum. The Trustees' accounts for the 18½ years were audited and vouched by Messrs. Ham and Co., chartered accountants, Bristol.

A LIGHT RAILWAY FOR CARDIGANSHIRE.

Papers handed in by Mr. Morgan Evans, J.P., at Aberaeron, Question 47,981 (56th Day).

No. 1.—The Proposed Llandyssul and New Quay Railway.

Preliminary Statement.

The committee formed at New Quay, November 1885, with a view of taking steps to further the scheme of the proposed line of railway from Llandyssul to Cross Inn, have to report that they engaged the services of Mr. Szlumper, the eminent engineer, to make a flying survey of the ground.

He surveyed two routes, either of which would be perfectly practicable both as regards gradients and cost of construction. Of these, however, the route by Ffordddrasol is much to be preferred, since it will better accommodate an important district and serve a much larger population.

Mr. Szlumper estimates the cost of the construction of the entire line, including stations, at 30,000*l.*, or near as possible 2,000*l.* per mile, obviously a remarkably inexpensive rate of construction, and fully bearing out the estimate given at the preliminary meeting at New Quay.

This estimate does not include land, the cost of which, however, except for a short distance at the Llandyssul end, will be merely nominal.

The gross earnings on the Carmarthen and Llandyssul line in 1884, 18 miles in length, was about 1,200*l.*, or about 240*l.* per week. Although the proposed line is only about 3 miles shorter, if the traffic is estimated at only 70*l.* per week, or less than one-third of the Carmarthen and Llandyssul traffic, it will yield a gross revenue of 3,640*l.*, which, after deducting working expenses at the rate of 55 per cent. will leave a net income for dividend of 1,638*l.*, or rather more than 4½ per cent. on the capital of 36,000*l.* If the earnings were increased by only 12*l.* per week, still a very moderate estimate, it would produce an additional 1 per cent., or 5½ per cent.

It is unnecessary to enlarge on the great and varied advantages of railway communication to the district. The farmers of Mid-Cardiganshire labour at present under great disadvantages, compared with most districts even in Wales, both as regards markets for their produce and facilities for procuring lime, coal, &c., while every other interest proportionately suffers. New Quay, which notwithstanding its present isolated position, is already a favourite seaside resort, greatly suffers from the same cause. No doubt, if railway communication was provided, it would attract a vastly increased number of visitors. Besides being furnished with acceptable markets for fish, which swarms in Cardigan Bay.

The line will serve a district comprised within a radius of 8 miles of its terminus at Cross Inn. This will include New Quay, Llanarth, Mydroilyn, and Aberayron on the north side, and Llandysilio, Llangranog, Penbryn, Rhydlewis, Troedyraur, &c., on the south side, in all a population of about 12,000.

Until the line was actually surveyed, and the gradient ascertained by a competent engineer, doubts were naturally entertained as to the feasibility of constructing the line at such a very moderate cost. Now that these doubts have been removed by Mr. Szlumper's survey and estimate, the committee confidently rely that the residents of the district and others interested by property and otherwise in it, will come forward in support of an undertaking which not only offers them a safe and profitable investment for their money, but also will serve to develop the resources, and add materially to the prosperity of the district.

The committee have pleasure in stating that several influential persons have already intimated their intention of taking a substantial number of shares; but they feel that in order to secure the success of this important undertaking, the hearty co-operation of the whole district is absolutely essential.

It is proposed to raise the capital required in 3,600 shares of 10*l.* each; the calls to spread over a period of not less than two years, to enable everyone in the district to assist in this important scheme.

Meetings will shortly be held in all the principal centres of the locality, and committees formed to canvass for shares; and when a sufficient number are secured, no time will be lost in applying for Parliamentary powers, and proceeding with the work without any delay. But until a sufficient number of shares are subscribed for, no legal or other liabilities will be incurred. All that is necessary to secure success is the hearty co-operation of everyone interested in the welfare of the district.

[Note.—On the opposite page of the circular, a Welsh translation of the above statement was printed. D. Ll. T.]

No. 2.—The proposed Llandyssul and New Quay Railway.

Sir,

At the series of influential and well-attended meetings recently held at New Quay, Llanarth, Castell, Pantgarreg, Brynmoria, Rhyd Lewis, &c., in connexion with the above railway, resolutions were unanimously passed in favour of the scheme, and committees formed in all the parishes. The line will serve to secure shareholders.

The strongest opinions were expressed that the railway would be an inestimable boon to the farmers and to every other interest, and that it would greatly enhance the prosperity of the entire district.

Mr. J. W. Szlumper, C.E., who surveyed the route for the proposed line, was present at the meetings, and satisfactorily replied to the various questions asked of him, and expressed his confident opinion that it could be constructed at the estimated cost, viz., 2,000*l.* per mile, an additional 6,000*l.* being required for land, plant, legal, and other expenses.

There should be no difficulty in raising this small capital of 36,000*l.*, for it is stated on good authority that this represents less than one-third of the money deposited at a low rate of interest in the local banks of the district, and there is no reasonable doubt that the shareholders will find it a safe and profitable investment.

This prediction is based partly on the following facts and figures relating to the traffic on the Carmarthen and Llandyssul line:—

That line is 18 miles long, and had in 1884 a gross traffic of 12,000*l.*, but it has since steadily increased, and the traffic in 1886 rose to nearly 15,000*l.*, or an increase of 25 per cent. in two years.

A gross traffic of only 70*l.* per week on the New Quay and Llandyssul line (15 miles), or less than a fourth of the traffic above indicated, would pay a dividend, after deducting 55 per cent. for working expenses, of 4½ to 5 per cent.

If, however, a traffic of 90*l.* per week is assumed, it would bring up the rate of dividend to 6 per cent., and so on in proportion as the traffic increased, and there is every reason to believe that in a very few years, with the development of the district, this low estimate would again be largely exceeded.

A considerable number of shares have already been taken, but it is most important that three-fourths at least of the whole should be taken up without loss of time, to enable the Bill to pass Parliament next session. No expenses will be incurred until this amount is subscribed for. The shares of 10*l.* each will be called up by easy instalments, extending over to two years or so.

If all who are able would take one or more shares, the capital could be very easily obtained. What is wanted is that a great many persons should take a few shares each, as the number of those who could a large number is necessarily limited.

To illustrate the mode in which the necessary capital could be obtained it may be assumed that—

400	persons would take	1	share	4,000
200	,, ,,	2	,,	4,000
150	,, ,,	3	,,	4,500
100	,, ,,	5	,,	5,000
50	,, ,,	10	,,	5,000
25	,, ,,	20	,,	5,000
925				27,500

The balance of the capital, viz., 8,500*l.*, will doubtless be taken up by the landed proprietors of the district, many of whom have expressed their warm sympathy with the undertaking.

The district is sadly in want of a railway to develop its resources, and to find a ready market for its agricultural produce, and the fish which is found in large quantities in Cardigan Bay. Doubtless, too, that part of the coast would become a favourite resort for visitors. It is, therefore, confidently hoped that the inhabitants of the district will use their utmost efforts to conduce to the success of this most important movement.

This statement has been submitted to Mr. J. W. Szlumper, C.E., and Mr. Stephen Evans, who entirely approved of its contents.

Yours, &c.,
THOMAS JONES,
THOMAS EVANS,
WILLIAM TIMOTHY,
} Hon. Secs.

PETITION.

Handed in by Mr. Stephen Davies, at Aberystwyth, at Questions 49,243–49,250, 57th Day.

To the Royal Commissioners on Land in Wales and Monmouthshire.

The humble Petition of the undersigned farmers of the neighbourhood of Llangwyryfon in the County of Cardigan.

Sheweth:

That in our opinion the rents of farms in our neighbourhood are excessive and unjust to the farmers, being at the present time higher than they were from 15 to 20 years ago, notwithstanding that upon an average of the last five years a depreciation of at least from 40 to 50 per cent. has taken place in the price of the produce of the land.

That many farmers keep their sons and daughters working on their farms without wages, and yet during the last 10 years have been unable to meet their engagements without resorting to the savings of previous years.

That owing to the migration of labourers to South Wales and other places farm labour is scarcer and more dear than it used to be. One of the principal reasons for such migration is the want of suitable cottages and small holdings for labourers. In our immediate neighbourhood during the last 40 years 45 of these cottages have been allowed to become unfit for human habitation.

That on Mynyddbach and other places there are many farmers who purchased their holdings when land was dear and have ever since been labouring under heavy mortgages at high rates of interest, such mortgages in many instances being now (owing to the depreciation of land) equal to and sometimes more than the saleable value of the property. If money could be provided for these farmers at a low rate of interest and the principal and interest made repayable by fixed yearly or half-yearly payments it would furnish such encouragement as would ensure better farming on their part and enable them in the course of 40 or 50 years to acquire their holdings free from incumbrance.

That in our opinion one of the chief causes of discouragement to farmers is their inability without the consent of the landlord under the present law to make such improvements as they may think reasonable with any hope of being paid for them, or indeed without having to pay for them a second time in the way of increased rent.

That we strongly desire the establishment of a Land Court in Wales so constituted as to command the utter confidence of both landlords and tenants, and with full power to fix fair rents and settle all disputes arising between landlords and tenants in respect of agricultural holdings and a simple cheap and expeditious system of procedure.

Copies of the agreement under which most of the farms in our neighbourhood are held are annexed hereto, and we respectfully beg to call your attention to them.

Your petitioners therefore pray that you will recommend the passing of an Act of Parliament containing provisions for the following purposes:—

1. The establishment of such Land Court.
2. The fixing of fair rents.
3. Full liberty to the tenant to make all reasonable improvements upon his holding without the necessity of obtaining the landlord's consent.
4. Absolute security that the tenant will be paid full compensation for all such improvements whenever he is compelled or desires to quit his holding.
5. Loans at low interest to enable farmers to pay off mortgages or to buy their holdings.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

E.—Letter from the Secretary to the Treasury to Mr. John Lloyd.

A.—Summary of Statement prepared by Mr. John Lloyd in 1890.

I.

This large tract of mountain land, in the county of Brecon, known as the Great Forest of Brecon, and comprising 40,000 acres, became vested in the Crown in the reign of Henry VIII., by the attainder of the Duke of Buckingham.

Over this tract of waste land the Crown possessed and exercised general forest rights, but derived little or no profit from them, as the rights of depasturing sheep and cattle, of cutting turves and other rights were vested in the owners, not only of land in the adjacent parishes, but also in several distant parishes. In fact this mountain land was the great pasturage and grazing ground for a large district of country in the western part of Breconshire. Incidentally it may be mentioned that in some parts the mountain range is as much as 2,600 feet high, and the whole forms the supply ground and source of not less than 17 rivers and brooks, inclusive of the Usk, the Taff, the Tawe, and the Neath Rivers.

Throughout England and Wales, during the latter part of the reign of George III. (about the year 1815), the Crown took steps to dispose of various properties of this description. These forestal wastes were an unproductive property, and the Crown being in want of money to proceed with the great Regent Street improvements, then being commenced in London, and to discharge other liabilities, it was thought that the revenue of the Crown might be benefited by the inclosure of the Great Forest of Brecon, and the sale of their interest therein.

Accordingly in the year 1815 the Crown authorities caused an Act of Parliament to be passed for the disafforesting and inclosing of this large tract of land, the principles of which Act were as follows:—

1. Sufficient land was to be sold to pay for all the expenses of obtaining the Act, surveying the land, and generally carrying out by Commissioners the various provisions of the Act.
2. A full moiety of the remainder was to be the freehold of the Crown.
3. The other moiety was to be divided among all commoners who were able to prove 20 years' user of the pasturage (the mines and minerals being reserved to the Crown). The commoners' land to be enclosed and divided, and then to be held severally by the commoners as freeholds by each respectively, according to the allotments made by the Commissioners under their formal award.
4. All forestal rights of the Crown were abolished, and the lands allotted were freed and discharged from all claims of the Crown, except such interests as were expressly reserved and excepted.
5. The mines and minerals under the surface of the Forest were reserved to the Crown, but in various portions limestone quarries were to be marked out, and reserved for the use of the commoners generally.
6. Allotments of land were to be made to the tithe-owners in lieu of tithes.
7. Several clauses in the Act provide for the building of a church, and the endowment of the clergyman with 150*l.* a year at the expense of the Crown, if the Bishop of the Diocese considers such necessary, in case any extra-parochial part of the Forest should become inhabited.
8. The final award and plan of the inclosure were to be lodged by the Commissioners in the Clerk of the Peace's Office at Brecon.

II.

Under this Act proceedings were taken by the Commissioners (Henry de Bruyn, of Southampton Street, London, and John Cheese, of Lyons Hall, Hereford), and an Inquiry was conducted into the commoners' rights, which extended over three or four years. Simultaneously a survey of the Forest was made by surveyors (Samuel Wharton, of Gray's Inn, and David Davies, of Llangattock, Brecon), and a plan prepared on the scale of 32 chains to 1 in. or 2½ in. to the mile.

Various difficulties arose in settling the claims of the commoners, and one law-suit with a Mr. Powell, with reference to 240 acres on Waun Liky, was taken for trial to Hereford. The expenses of the inclosure proceedings altogether had amounted to about 16,000*l.*, and to defray the expenses it became necessary to sell the best portions of the hill, namely, the slopes leading to the enclosed lands, comprising 8,000 acres.

After putting on one side the central portion of the Forest, comprising 13,620 acres, as the allotment for the Crown, and deducting the 8,000 acres sold for expenses as above, the Commissioners found themselves with about 17,000 acres to dispose of. This lay in two large divisions, one near the Carmarthenshire Van, and the other lying between the Taff and the Llia rivers, and for their respective shares of this there were a good many claimants. It had been the original intention to divide this residue in several freeholds, but owing to the mountainous character of the land and its sterile character, such was found by the Commissioners to be impracticable, and by an Amending Act passed in 1818, the Commissioners were released from the condition to divide and inclose the same, and it was provided that the commoners' allotments should be held and used by all in common. Of course, as far as regards the commoners, this was an utter breakdown of the inclosure scheme. They had lost the pasturage over the 8,000 acres sold, over the 13,620 taken by the Crown, and had left—and those only as a common allotment—the 17,106 acres which remained, much of which was of an inferior character, and also inconvenient for their use.

A small matter has to be noticed. The Commissioners had sold the 8,000 acres tithe free, forgetting the dues of the Church. To make this good, other common land was directed, in the Amending Act, to be allotted in lieu by the Commissioners to the Church.

While accepting as a fact the condition of things as brought about by these Inclosure Acts of the Crown, we cannot help remarking on the improvident and inconsiderate way this important property has been dealt with. Usually the Crown is supposed to study the interests of the people, and their tenants, and we frequently meet with the expression in the correspondence of that department, that the "amenity of the position" must be considered, and that all interests, equitable as well as legal, are to be very carefully provided for and safeguarded. We find here, on the contrary, that a large number of Breconshire farms, in the enjoyment from time immemorial of excellent and extensive sheep-walks, with convenient access thereto from long distances along the gently rising outlying limbs of the mountain range, found themselves actually cut off from direct access to the hill in almost every part, and the right of pasturage itself was diminished by more than one-half. To those who understand what Welsh mountain farms are, it will be at once apparent how serious and permanent an injury, lasting to the present day, was thus inflicted by this inclosure on the farming industry of a very wide district in Breconshire.

III.

Present condition of the Commoners' Allotments.

We have now to deal with the property of the commoners, as allotted to them, and which consists of an extensive sheep-walk on the western side, and another on the eastern side of the Forest, comprising together upwards of 17,000 acres. We find that this at present is under the control of no legal or properly constituted authority, and that there is no one authorised to protect the rights and interests of the commoners.

It will be in the recollection of the commoners that various disputes have arisen, and have been investigated in courts of law, as to the right of working limestone on certain parts of the mountain, and as to other rights of property, and upon a recent informal survey of the allotments, we found in several cases that the boundaries now existing do not accord with the authorised map; and we also heard of other attempted alteration of the boundary line, which has been stopped by individual action. In the case of the important limestone quarry at Penwyllt, the boundary wall has recently been pulled down, and a portion of the commoners' quarry improperly worked. In the case of the other allotments for limestone, it would seem that the roads appointed for access to them have been shut up, and the quarries have become practically useless to the commoners.

In a minor degree it may be desirable to frame rules for the proper allowance of stock, and generally for the management of the allotments, inclusive of its improvement, by making of surface gutters, as has been done on the neighbouring hills.

These allotment lands also form the gathering grounds of several streams, and perhaps at a no distant date some of the large towns may require to deal with the ground for water-supply purposes.

The commoners have, therefore, still a valuable property, and having regard to the absence of any authority to protect their interests, it is most desirable, and indeed almost a necessity, that they should be enabled to act together unitedly. This would be to their own interest, and also to that of the public; and there is at the present time serious danger of interference with their rights and interests, and even with the title to their property.*

IV.

Suggestions.

We consider the property of the commoners to be practically a freehold in common. With the exception of the mines and minerals, they have absolute right and control over it, and what is required is to give them power to exercise that control in a convenient and inexpensive manner.

The course to be pursued seems to be to obtain the constitution of the commoners as a body corporate, with power to carry out all such matters as they may deem necessary to be done for the due management, improvement, and protection of their property.

Mr. Lloyd then recommends:—

1. That the commoners should form themselves into a body corporate for the purpose of acting together unitedly in protecting their rights and interests;
2. And that steps be taken to call a meeting of the commoners for the purpose of considering the above recommendation, and how it can best be carried out.

Accordingly, various meetings of the commoners' allotment holders were convened, and it was resolved to introduce a Bill into Parliament in the session 1892–3.

* All the Crown's interest in their allotment, and in the reserved right to mines and minerals, was sold by them prior to 1821, and there has been no transaction by the Crown with reference to this property since.

The Acts of Parliament relating to the inclosure are 48 Geo. III., cap. 73 (1808); 55 Geo. III. cap. 190 (1815); and 58 Geo. III., cap. 99 (1818). The General Inclosure Act, 41 Geo. III., cap. 109 (1801), should also be referred to.

B.—The Proposed Bill of 1893.†

The following is the Bill as prepared and presented to Parliament:—

A BILL for constituting the Commoners of the Great Forest of Brecknock a Body Corporate, and vesting in them the Commoners' Allotments and Public Quarries with power to protect regulate and improve the same; and for other purposes.

Whereas an Act was passed in the fifty-fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George III. intituled "An Act to amend an Act made in the forty-eighth "year of his present Majesty to improve the Land "Revenue of the Crown so far as relates to the Great "Forest of Brecknock in the County of Brecknock and "for vesting in His Majesty certain parts of the said "Forest and for inclosing the said Forest": (Preamble. (55 Geo. III. c. 190 recites 48 Geo. III. c. 73.)

And whereas in pursuance of that Act Commissioners were appointed and authorised after due survey made and after disposing by sale of lands sufficient to defray the expenses of carrying out the Act and after allotting lands in lieu of tithes to allocate to His Majesty His heirs or successors one moiety of the lands of the Forest and to divide the remainder in severalty among the commoners who had established their rights to user of the Forest lands the same to be held free from all claims by his Majesty for forestal rights or any rights whatsoever except to the mines and minerals and power to work the same and also to allot certain limestone and other quarries in certain convenient parts of the Forest and also watering places for the use of the commoners:

And whereas another Act was passed in the fifty-eighth year of his said Majesty King George III. for altering and amending certain provisions of the first-recited Act and especially to release the Commissioners appointed as aforesaid from the obligation to divide the commoners' allotments severally among those who had established their rights of common and to provide that such allotments should thereafter remain open and unenclosed subject to such regulations for stinting the said lands as one of the said Commissioners might make: (58 Geo. III. c. 99.)

And whereas under the provisions of the above-recited Acts a formal award accompanied by a map or plan and dated the tenth day of June one thousand eight hundred and nineteen was duly made and enrolled by the Commissioners setting forth the names of all the commoners and the properties in respect of which they had proved their rights and the commoners' allotments together with the sites of the limestone and other quarries watering-places and roads set apart for the use of the commoners and also the Crown allotment the allotments sold to pay for the expenses incurred and the tithe allotments in lieu of tithe but the orders and regulations directed by the last-recited Act for stinting the commoners' allotments do not appear to have been made nor was any authority given for enabling the commoners by any common action to protect their allotment lands or limestone quarries from trespass damage or encroachment:

And whereas disputes have arisen and are likely to arise as to the access to the public limestone quarries and the right of working the same and as to trespasses on the allotment lands and encroachments generally on the boundaries of the allotments and the commoners have suffered and are likely to suffer much inconvenience annoyance and loss thereby:

And whereas the commoners' allotments extend over seventeen thousand one hundred and six acres of mountain land containing many streams and springs the surplus water from which might be collected and impounded and made available for the supply of large towns and populous places:

And whereas it is expedient that the commoners' allotments as defined in the said award together with the limestone and other quarries watering-places and † Note.—The Bill was before the Committee of the House of Commons, presided over by Sir Richard Temple, for three days. It was opposed by Lord Tredegar, who had in 1888 bought the Crown's reserved mineral rights, and who now claimed the freehold of the allotment, and full manorial rights over it as the grantee of the Crown. It was also opposed by the Marquis of Camden on the ground that plural voting was not given him in the election of the committee of management, and it was also opposed by the Cardiff Corporation, by Madame Patti-Nicolini, and Mr. Kershaw, the two latter on the ground of interference with the limestone quarries and lime-burning trade.

The Bill was eventually thrown out, and the cost to the promoters, being a few of the allotment holders, amounted to 600*l.*, exclusive of the fees of their counsel, which, on the failure of the Bill, were returned.

roads should be vested in some authority empowered to protect and improve the same:

And whereas the purposes of this Act cannot be effected without the authority of Parliament:

May it therefore please Your Majesty that it may be enacted and be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in this present Parliament assembled and by the authority of the same as follows:—

Short title.

I. This Act may be cited as the Great Forest of Brecknock Act 1893.

Incorporation of provisions of general Acts.

II. The Lands Clauses Acts except the provisions thereof with respect to the purchase and taking of lands otherwise than by agreement and such of the provisions of the Commissioners Clauses Act 1847 as are applicable to the purposes of this Act are incorporated with and form part of this Act and the expressions "the Promoters of the Undertaking" and "the Commissioners" in those Acts shall mean the commoners incorporated by this Act or the governing body elected by them as the case may be.

Incorporation of commoners.

III. The owners for the time being of the property in respect of which claims were allowed and specified in the said award shall be and are herewith constituted a body corporate with the title of the "Great Forest of Brecon Commoners" (herein-after called "the Commoners") and by that name shall have perpetual succession and a common seal and by the said name they may be sued and shall have power to sue and power to purchase hold and dispose of lands and other property for the purposes but subject to the provisions of this Act.

and make byelaws and regulations.

XII. The governing body may make such other byelaws rules and regulations as they may deem necessary for regulating the conduct of their officers and servants for appointing the time and place of holding their meetings and the summoning of the same also for providing for the due management of the affairs of the governing body and of the lands and premises vested in them.

Byelaws to be approved by Board of Agriculture.

XIII. All byelaws made under this Act shall be reduced into writing and shall be approved of or allowed by the Board of Agriculture and shall have the common seal of the governing body attached thereto.

Accounts to be audited.

XIV. Within the first three months of every year the accounts of the governing body shall be audited by an auditor to be appointed by the Local Government Board Such auditor shall have access to the books and accounts of the governing body and may examine in relation to such accounts the members of the governing body or any of their servants The auditor shall be paid by the governing body such sum as the Local Government Board shall appoint.

Copy of audited accounts to be deposited with clerk to county council.

XV. A copy of the audited accounts shall be deposited for public inspection at the office of the clerk of the county council of the county of Brecknock.

Investment and application of surplus revenue.

XVI. The surplus revenue appearing in any year to the credit of the general account in the statement of accounts to be deposited as aforesaid shall after retaining sufficient to pay the current expenses be invested by the governing body and shall be applicable to the improvement of the allotment lands and the purchasing additional lands and the rights to mines and minerals within the limits of the ancient Forest the working of the limestone and other quarries or in any way improving the common property vested in the commoners and in making roads thereto.

Arbitration in cases of difference.

XVII. Any dispute or difference which may arise between any of the commoners or between the governing body and any of the commoners or between the governing body or any commoner or commoners and any other party or parties with respect to any of the powers and provisions of this Act as to the mode of carrying out the same shall if required by either of the parties in difference be referred to an arbitrator to be appointed by the President of the Board of Agriculture and the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1889 shall apply to every such arbitration.

Access to mountains.

XVIII. It shall be lawful for all Her Majesty's subjects on foot or on horseback to have access to the summit of the mountains within the said allotments and if at any time hereafter such allotments shall be divided by fences then convenient gates shall be provided in the boundary and other fences erected Provided that such persons shall not wilfully do any damage to the said lands or disturb the stock grazing thereon.

Saving rights of Crown and grantees to mines, &c.

XIX. Nothing in this Act contained shall prejudice the right of the Crown and its grantees to the mines and minerals reserved by the recited Acts nor to the working of the same except so far as relates to the public limestone and other quarries and the working thereof.

Costs of Act.

XX. The costs charges and expenses of obtaining this Act shall be defrayed by the governing body and the sums of money belonging to the commoners now in the hands of Lewis Williams of Priory Cottages in the town of Brecon shall be paid to the said governing body and applied by them in part payment of such costs charges and expenses.

SCHEDULE REFERRED TO IN THE FOREGOING ACT.

C.—EXTRACTS FROM THE REPORTS OF THE SURVEYOR-GENERAL AND THE COMMISSIONERS OF WOODS AND FORESTS, AND ALSO FROM ACTS OF PARLIAMENT AND THE FINAL AWARD OF THE COMMISSIONERS, SHOWING CONNECTEDLY THE DEALINGS OF THE CROWN WITH THIS FOREST.

From the Report of the Surveyor-General of H.M.'s Land Revenue.

1809. Report IV. Page 194.

The Great Forest of Brecon, of which the Crown is the owner, being a district considerable in extent, but mostly mountainous and barren, and incumbered with rights of depasturage of cattle by the occupiers of adjacent lands, under small fixed rates of payment, and much encroached on; and being a property not likely to be rendered productive to the Crown under its actual circumstances, though perhaps a desirable object of possession to the great landholders of the county, I advised to be sold, and the produce to be invested in 3*l.* per cent. Stock in like manner with the sale of other property appertaining to the Crown.

From the Reports of Commissioners of Woods and Forests.

Report I. Page 22. 1812.

There are two very extensive tracts of land, which, like Delamere, appear to have been formerly royal forests, and of which the soil belongs to the Crown; viz., the Forest of Brecknock, in the county of Brecknock, and that of Exmoor, in the counties of Devon and Somerset. The Forest of Brecknock consists of 40,000 acres, but of this, as appears from a report made by a person who has been employed to survey it, there are about 2,000 acres fit for the growth of the oak. Under the Act of 48 Geo. III., we have a power to sell the whole of the King's interest in this estate, with the approbation of the Lords of the Treasury, and though it would be very desirable to retain those 2,000 acres in the hands of the Crown, yet the rights and claims over the whole are of so complicated and extensive a nature that an attempt to divide and enclose it in the manner of Bere Forest, and others we have mentioned, appropriating a due proportion to His Majesty, might be attended with insurmountable difficulty. We, therefore, think that the best plan will be to sell the entire interest of the Crown in Brecknock Forest by auction or otherwise, when we trust we may be authorised by the legislature to apply the produce of such sales to the purchase of other woodlands, better situated and less objectionable in other respects.

Report II. Page 27. 1815.

According to the intention mentioned in our first report, we were about to proceed under the authority of the Act of the 48th of the King, cap. 73, to take measures for selling by auction the entire interest of the Crown over the Great Forest of Brecknock, and with that view we have caused the same to be divided into seven lots, which were set out and measured by Mr. Hassell, an eminent land surveyor in that part of the country. But finding that a great impediment to the sale would arise in consequence of a claim set up by the homagers to depasture an unlimited number of cattle on the Forest, we thought it expedient to suspend our proceedings until the question involved in that claim could be determined by an issue at law.

An information in the Court of Exchequer was accordingly filed, upon which the parties very soon relinquished their claim to the extent above-mentioned, and agreed to confine it to the right to depasture as many cattle as they could maintain in winter in their respective occupations.

After this important point was settled, it was deemed, on full consideration of all the circumstances of this Forest, that instead of selling the rights of the Crown, subject to the claims of the commoners, limited and defined as they were to the extent above-mentioned, it would be more desirable to adopt the course followed with respect to Exmoor Forest, and to separate entirely under the authority of an Act of Parliament the rights and interests of His Majesty from those of the freeholders and commoners. For this purpose an Act was passed in the last session (cap. 190) by which so much of the Act of the 48th of the King as related to the sale of the interest of the Crown over this Forest was repealed, and Commissioners were appointed for dividing and allotting the Forest, who are required after setting out allotments for repairs of roads, watering-places for cattle, places for public limestone quarries, to be sold for payment of expenses, and in lieu of tithes, to allot to His Majesty one full moiety of all the residue of the Forest.

In this Act, and in that for the division and enclosure of the Exmoor Forest, provisions are contained for authorising the sale of the allotments, which by virtue thereof shall be made to His Majesty, and to place the produce of such sale to the account at the bank standing in the name of the Commissioners of His Majesty's "Woods and Forests and Land Revenues," being the Woods and Forests Fund. If, therefore, it shall be found inexpedient after a due inquiry and investigation to retain any portion of those forests for the purpose of planting, the produce of such sales may be employed in the purchase of woodlands more conveniently situated and better calculated for that object.

Report III. Page 25.

During the proceedings of the Commissioners under the Act of the 55th of the King, cap. 190, for vesting in His Majesty certain parts of Brecknock Forest, and for the inclosing the said Forest, it was represented to us on behalf of many of the persons entitled to rights of common over that Forest, that the expense of executing so much of the Act as related to the dividing, allotting, and enclosing the portions of the waste to which they might be respectively entitled, would be in many cases so great as to exceed the value of the allotments; that though they had concurred in the provision in the first instance, and which indeed had been adopted at their request, they had not foreseen that the expenses attending it would have been so great, nor had they calculated on the depreciation in the value of waste land which had since taken place, and that under these circumstances they requested our concurrence in stopping all further proceedings in execution of the Act.

Being clearly of opinion that it would not be expedient entirely to suspend the execution of the Act, but that it was material to the interests of the Crown that it should be proceeded in to the extent of allotting and awarding to His Majesty the moiety of what should remain after sufficient had been sold to defray expenses, we acquainted the parties who had applied to us, that provided this was accomplished, we saw no objection to its being left to the option of those who were interested in the remainder, either to divide it in severalty according to their respective rights and interests, or to hold it in common.

It was, therefore, agreed to propose a Bill to Parliament for repealing so much of the Act of the 55th of the King, cap. 190, as related to the division and enclosure of the moiety to be allotted to those having rights of common, for authorising a separate award to be made of the Crown allotment, and for providing that the residue should remain open and undivided.

That Bill having passed in the last session of Parliament (58 Geo. III., cap. 99) the Commissioners for the inclosure of this Forest have since confined their operations to making such a survey and valuation of the waste as may enable them to set out the Crown allotment, which we intend to dispose of in the same manner as Exmoor, as soon as the Commissioners have made their award, which they expect to be able to complete in the course of this month.

Report IV. Page 30.

Under the Act 58 George III., cap. 99, respecting Brecon Forest mentioned in our last report, there were allotted in severalty to His Majesty in compensation for all the rights of the Crown over that extensive and barren waste,† 13,760 acres, being one moiety of what remained after providing for expenses. This allotment was advertised to be disposed of by tender, and has been sold to John Stewart, of the City of London, merchant, on the nomination of John Christie, Esq., whose tender was the highest, together with the rights of the Crown to the tithes over the same for the sum of 16,330*l.*, which sum, together with the 200*l.* received from Archibald Christie, Esq., for the right of the Crown to tithes over some allotments sold for the purpose of raising money for carrying the measures authorised by Parliament into execution; and the purchase money on the sale of the Crown allotments in Exmoor forest was carried to the account of the Woods and Forests Fund at the Bank of England, and materially assisted in paying the very considerable demands upon those funds for several years past, on account of the extensive enclosures and plantations made in the royal forests.

† The Commissioners of Woods and Forests of that day evidently understood the matter in its proper light, and that on being allotted 13,760 acres in severalty as compensation, on had relinquished all claims over the rest of the allotment lands of the Forest.

55 Geo. III., cap. 190, sec. 57:

"And be it further enacted that from and after the execution of the final award of the said Commissioners, all forestal rights and privileges whatsoever of the King's Majesty, his heirs and successors, and his or their lessee or lessees, grantee or grantees, and of all other persons whomsoever, within, upon, and over the said Forest, shall cease, determine, and be for ever extinguished, and the whole of the said Forest shall be disafforested to all intents and purposes whatsoever."

58 Geo. III., cap. 99, sec. 12:

"And be it further enacted that all the rest, residue, and remainder of the said lands and grounds by the said recited Act directed to be divided, allotted, and inclosed, shall be and remain open and uninclosed for the benefit of the several other owners or proprietors of ancient messuages, cottages, inclosed lands, and grounds, entitled to rights of common in, over and upon the said lands and grounds according to their several and respective rights and interests therein, freed and discharged from all forestal rights, and from all claims of His Majesty, His heirs, and successors and all persons lawfully claiming under him or them, save and except such rights and interests as are herein-after expressly reserved to His Majesty, His heirs, and successors."

Express Reservation as to Mines and Minerals.

Sec. 17:

* * * *

"Provided always, that this Act shall not defeat or prejudice the right or interest of the King's most Excellent Majesty, His heirs and successors, in or to any mines of coal, lead ores, or any other minerals whatsoever, in or under the same Forest or any part thereof, but that His Majesty, His heirs and successors, and his or their lessees and grantees, agents, servants and workmen, may search for, dig, raise, and carry away all coal, lead ores, metals, and all other minerals whatsoever, as if this Act had not been passed."

General Reservation.

Sec. 19:

‡ "Saving always to the King's most Excellent Majesty, His heirs and successors, Hand to all bodies politic, corporate, or collegiate, and their successors, and to all and every person and persons whomsoever, his and their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, all such estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand whatsoever (other than and except such as is and are hereby expressed, meant, and intended to be barred, destroyed, and extinguished) in, to, or out of the said Forest and open commonable lands by the said recited Act directed to be divided, allotted, and inclosed before the passing of this Act, or could have had and enjoyed therein in case this Act had not been passed."

‡ Mr. Sowray in his evidence for the Office of Woods, &c., question No. 27,578, relies on this general saving clause in defence of the action of the Crown in granting vague and undefined rights over and interests in the Forest to Mr. Stewart by the conveyance of 1820. [See copy of conveyance, infra.]

Extract from the Final Award of the Commissioners.

And we the said Commissioners having so set out and allotted the several other allotments of the said open and uninclosed lands of the said Forest according to the several Acts of 55 Geo. III. and 58 Geo. III., and having in pursuance of the same Acts made and executed the said award bearing even date with these presents of one full moiety or half part of the residue of the open and uninclosed lands of the said Forest unto His Majesty, his heirs and successors.

Do hereby award and allot all that part, residue, and remainder of the said open and uninclosed lands of the said Forest, containing by admeasurement 17,106 acres (be the same more or less), and which are particularly delineated and described on the map or plan hereunto annexed, to be and remain open and uninclosed for the benefit of the several persons whose names are set forth in the schedule herein-after contained, or hereunto annexed, and their respective heirs and assigns for ever, freed and discharged from all forestal rights, and from all claims of His Majesty, his heirs and successors, and all persons lawfully claiming under him or them (save and except such rights and interests as are expressly reserved to His said Majesty, His heirs and successors, in and by the 58 Geo. III.).

D.—Copy of Conveyance of Crown's Allotment.

The following is a copy of the deed of conveyance by the Crown, which is referred to by Mr. Lloyd in his evidence No. 50, 881, as having caused great confusion and difficulty:—

Among the Inrolments in the custody of the Keeper of Her Majesty's Land Revenue Records and Inrolments in Book intituled "South Wales Inrolments, 15 fo. 34" is the following:—

By the Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods Forests and Land Revenues.

Inrolled 6th March 1822. A.B. Actg. Auditor.

Whereas by an Act of Parliament made and passed in the fifty-fifth year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the third entituled "An Act to amend an "Act made in the forty-eighth year of the Reign of "His said Majesty to improve the Land Revenue of "the Crown so far as relates to the Great Forest of "Brecknock in the County of Brecknock and for vesting in His Majesty certain parts of the said Forest "and for inclosing the said Forest" after reciting that the King's most Excellent Majesty in right of his Crown was seized to himself his heirs and successors of the Great Forest of Brecknock in the County of Brecknock which Forest was of considerable extent and that the waste Lands within the same were computed to be upwards of Forty thousand acres Subject nevertheless to such rights of Common and other rights as therein mentioned It was thereby enacted (amongst other things) that Henry De Bruyn and John Cheese both therein named and their successors to be nominated or appointed in manner thereinafter mentioned should be and they were thereby appointed Commissioners for dividing allotting and inclosing the said Forest and all the open commonable Lands and grounds within the same and for carrying into execution the several other purposes of the Act now in recital in such manner as was thereinafter provided or mentioned and with such of the powers and subject to such of the rules orders regulations restrictions and provisions contained in an Act passed in the forty-first year of the Reign of His said late Majesty and referred to in the said Act now in recital as were not altered varied or otherwise provided for by the now reciting Act and it was thereby further enacted that the said Commissioners should and they were thereby authorized and required after making and setting out several allotments therein mentioned to divide set out and allot one full moiety or half part of all the rest residue and remainder of the said Forest due regard being had to the quality and situation thereof unto the King's Most Excellent Majesty his heirs and successors and which Allotment as soon as the same should be allotted and severed from the Lands adjoining thereto should become and remain the exclusive and absolute property of the Kings Majesty his heirs and successors freed exonerated and for ever discharged of and from all rights of Common Common of Pasture and turbary and all other rights of what nature or kind soever And whereas by another Act made and passed in the fifty-eighth year of the reign of his said late Majesty intituled "An Act for altering "and amending An Act made in the fifty-fifth year of "his present Majesty to amend an Act made in the "forty-eighth year of his present Majesty to improve "the Land Revenue of the Crown so far as relates to "the Great Forest of Brecknock in the County of "Brecknock and for vesting in His Majesty certain "parts of the said Forest and for inclosing the said "Forest" After reciting or taking notice of the said Act of the fifty-fifth year of the Reign of His late Majesty and reciting that the Commissioners appointed in and by the said last mentioned Act had proceeded to put the same into execution and that great expences had been thereby incurred and that considerable parts of the said Forest had been sold by the said Commissioners to defray such expences and after further reciting that it appeared that the soil of so much of the said Forest and the Lands and Grounds in the said recited Act mentioned as would remain to be divided and allotted in severalty unto and amongst the persons entitled to rights of common in over and upon the said Forest after making and setting out the other allotments in the said last recited Act directed was so poor and sterile that the same would not answer the expenses of enclosure and cultivation and that it was therefore expedient that so much of the said recited Act as directed that allotments should be made in lieu of tithes and that the said Commissioners should allot the residue of the said Forest and other open and commonable lands after setting out the King's Allotment and such other Allotments as thereinbefore mentioned in severalty unto and amongst the several Persons intitled to commonage in over or upon the same freed and discharged from the tythes and rights of common should be repealed together with all powers and authorities given by the said last recited Act to the said Commissioners for that purpose and that the said Commissioners should be authorized and required to allot one moiety of the said Forest to the King's most excellent Majesty his heirs and successors and the other moiety thereof to and amongst the several Persons entitled to rights of Common to be enjoyed by them in common as thentofore or in such manner and under such rules and regulations as thereinafter mentioned but freed from all Forestal rights It was therefore enacted that so much of the said Act of the fifty-fifth year of the reign of his said late Majesty as directed and empowered the said Commissioners to turn or alter any streams springs or watercourses within the said Forest and make and set out any Allotments in lieu of tythes to any Person or Persons whatsoever and to ascertain settle or determine to whom such allotments should belong and to set out and allot the residue of the lands and grounds by the said last recited Act directed to be divided allotted and inclosed unto and amongst all and every the Persons entitled to Commonage in over or upon the same respectively or any part or parts thereof respectively in proportion to the real value of their several and respective messuages cottages lands and tenements in respect whereof they were entitled to such right of common and to the part or parts of the lands to be inclosed in over and upon which their respective rights of common should extend together with all powers and authorities given to the said commissioners for that purpose and all other powers and authorities given by the said recited Act to the said Commissioners for directing the fencing of Allotments and also so much of the same Act as directed that all tithes both great and small moduses compositions and other payments in lieu of tithes arising renewing and payable within the said Forest lands and grounds and all rights of common in over and upon the same should cease and be for ever extinguished should be and the same was and were thereby repealed and it was thereby further Enacted that the King's Most Excellent Majesty his heirs and successors should from thenceforth continue to take demand have and receive all tithes both great and small and all moduses compositions and other payments in lieu of tithes whatsoever arising growing renewing increasing happening or payable out of from or in any of such part or parts of the open and commonable lands within the limits of the said Forest as were extra Parochial and that all tithes both great and small and all moduses compositions and other payments in lieu of tithes whatsoever arising growing renewing increasing happening and payable in over or upon such part or parts of the said open or commonable lands as was or were locally situate within the bounds or limits of any Parish or Parishes if any part or parts were so situate should thenceforth be demanded taken and payable by and to the person or persons bodies politic corporate or collegiate who was were or should be entitled thereto in as full ample and beneficial and in such and the same manner as if the said Act of the fifty fifth year of the Reign of his said late Majesty had not been passed and after further reciting that the said Commissioners had under the authority of the said last-mentioned Act sold certain parts of the said Lands and grounds within the said forest for defraying the expences of passing and carrying into execution the same act and that the Lands and Grounds so sold had been purchased by the Persons then holding the same as tithe free It was thereby therefore enacted that nothing therein contained should be construed or extend to subject any lands which had been so sold tithe free to the payment of tithes but that the same should remain and continue free and exempt from tithes in such and the like manner as if the Act now in recital had not been passed and that the said Commissioners should and they were thereby authorised and required to set out and allot unto or for the King's Majesty his heirs and successors or the person or Persons bodies politic or corporate or collegiate who would have been entitled to tithes in kind in over or upon the said lands and grounds so sold by the said Commissioners as tithe free so much and such parcel of the said lands and grounds by the said Act of the fifty fifth year of the reign of His said late Majesty directed to be divided allotted and inclosed should in the judgment of the said Commissioners be a full compensation and satisfaction for all tithes both great and small and all moduses compositions and other payments in lieu of tithes arising growing renewing increasing happening or payable out of or from or for or in respect of all such lands and grounds which had been so sold tithe free as aforesaid and that after the making and setting out of the Allotments by the Act now in recital directed to be made as a compensation and satisfaction for the tithes of the lands which had been so sold tithe free as therein mentioned and the allotments of land to be sold under the authority of the Act now in recital for payment of expences the said Commissioners should and they were thereby required to divide set out and allot one moiety or full half part of all the rest residue and remainder of the said Forest (due regard being had to the quality and situation thereof) unto the King's most excellent Majesty his heirs and successors and which said allotment as soon as the same should be allotted and severed from the Lands adjoining thereto should become and remain the exclusive property of His Majesty his heirs and successors freed exonerated and for ever discharged of and from all rights of common common of pasture and turbary and all other rights of what nature or kind soever and it was thereby further enacted that all the rest residue and remainder of the said lands and grounds by the said therein recited Act directed to be divided allotted and inclosed should be and remain open and uninclosed for the benefit of the several other owners or Proprietors of antient messuages cottages inclosed lands and grounds entitled to rights of common in over and upon the said lands and grounds according to their several and respective rights and interests therein freed and discharged from all forestal rights and from all claims of His Majesty his heirs and successors and all persons lawfully claiming under him or them save and except such rights and interests as were thereinafter expressly excepted and reserved to his Majesty his heirs and successors and it is thereby provided that the Act now in recital should not defeat or prejudice the rights or interests of the King's Most Excellent Majesty his heirs or successors in or to any mines of coal lead ores or any other minerals whatsoever in or under the same Forest or any part thereof but that his Majesty his heirs and successors or his or their Lessees or Grantees Agents Servants and workmen might search for dig raise and carry away all Coal lead ores metals and all other minerals whatsoever as if the Act now in recital had not been passed And whereas the said Henry De Bruyn and John Cheese as such Commissioners as aforesaid did by their award in writing bearing date the tenth day of June in the year One thousand eight hundred and nineteen (amongst other things) award set out and allot as and for one full moiety or half part of all the rest residue and remainder of the said Forest unto the King's most Excellent Majesty his heirs and successors the several pieces or parcels of land therein and thereinafter described (that is to say) All that piece or parcel of land containing by admeasurement Thirteen thousand eight hundred and sixty acres or thereabouts be the same more or less bounded on the north partly by the Allotment thereinbefore awarded and set out in lieu of tithes marked 63 upon the map or plan referred to by the said Award in other parts by the Derwynnydd Brook the old inclosures then or then lately belonging to Rice Powell Clerk Llewellin Powell David Morgan Lewis Powell John Llewellyn Esquire Penry Williams Esqre and William Hopkins respectively the Cnewer Brook the Treweren Brook and on the remaining parts of the north by the Allotment awarded and set out to the owners or proprietors of ancient messuages cottages inclosed lands and grounds whose rights of common in and over the said Forest have been established and by lands sold to Walter Powell Esquire and on the East by the turnpike Road from Brecon to Neath by Lands sold to Archibald Christie Esquire by the Old Inclosures then or then lately belonging to Llewellin Powell and the heirs of the then late Walter Jeffreys respectively the Public lime Stone Quarries marked No. 4 on the said Map or Plan lands sold to John Parton, Esqre other lands sold to the said Archibald Christie and the old inclosed lands then or then lately belonging to Watkin Powell on the South by lands sold to the said Archibald Christie and by the old inclosed lands then or then lately belonging to Walter Price of Clynllech and the said Llewellin Powell and on the west by the old inclosed lands then or then lately belonging to William Gwyn, Esqr the said Walter Price Jane Powell and Watkin Morgan respectively the Public Lime Stone Quarry marked No. 5 on the said Map or Plan lands then or then lately belonging to William Powell John Llewellyn Esqre and Jenkins Thomas Watkins respectively and by the Public Road leading from Trecastle to Clyntawe and which said allotment piece or parcel of land was more particularly delineated and described upon the Map or Plan thereunto annexed and was so awarded and allotted by the said Commissioners subject to the then roads and driftways in and over the same excepting such unnecessary roads or driftways as should be stopped up under and by virtue of the order in writing of any two Magistrates of the County of Brecknock and reciting that the said Commissioners had comprised in the Allotment so made as aforesaid to the King's most Excellent Majesty his heirs and successors all that piece or parcel of land called Wain Liky being part and parcel of a tract of land called Cefn Cil containing by admeasurement Two hundred and forty acres or thereabouts be the same more or less bounded on the North by the Deiwynith Brook on the East by a Farm and lands belonging to the said Rice Powell called Cum Deiwynidd on the South by the Paddest Brook and on the west by part of the lands therein awarded to the King's most Excellent Majesty his heirs and successors and also reciting that a certain Suit therein mentioned to have been commenced by the said Rice Powell against the said Commissioners concerning the title of the said last mentioned piece or parcel of land being then pending and undetermined and it being expedient that an equivalent to one moiety of the said piece or parcel of land quality and situation being considered should be awarded and allotted to the King's most excellent Majesty his heirs and successors out of the Allotment awarded and allotted by the said Commissioners in and by their other Award bearing even date with the one now in recital for the benefit of the Owner or Proprietors of ancient messuages cottages inclosed Lands and grounds whose rights of common upon the said Forest had been established in the event of the said piece or parcel of land called Wain liky being decided upon the trial of the said cause to be the property of the said Rice Powell the said Commissioners did by their said Award now in recital Award and Allot unto the King's most excellent Majesty his heirs and successors All that allotment piece or parcel of land containing by admeasurement One hundred and forty acres or thereabouts be the same more or less bounded on the north by the open lands of the said Forest and lands belonging to Rees Howell on the South by lands awarded and allotted by the said Commissioners in their said other Award to William Powell and the open lands of the said Forest and on the West by the open and commonable Lands in the lordship of Garth and which said last mentioned piece or parcel of land was so awarded and allotted by the said Commissioners subject to the ancient tracks or driftways over the same which said last mentioned allotment piece or parcel of land should in the event aforesaid become and remain the exclusive property of the King's most Excellent Majesty his heirs and successors freed exonerated and for ever discharged of and from all rights of common common of pasture and turbary and all other rights of what nature or kind soever But in case the verdict in the said cause should determine the said piece or parcel of land called Wain liky to be a part of the said Forest and not the private property of the said Rice Powell Then and in that case the said Commissioners thereby awarded and allotted the said piece or parcel of land last thereinbefore described as part of the residue of the said Forest in and by their said Award bearing even date with the said Award now in recital awarded and allotted to and for the benefit of the persons whose rights of common upon the said Forest had been established as thereinbefore mentioned And whereas by a certificate of contract in writing under the hands of the Right Honorable William Huskisson and William Dacres Adams Esquire Two of the Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods Forests and Land Revenues for and on behalf of the King's most excellent Majesty bearing date the seventh day of February One thousand eight hundred and twenty and duly inrolled in the Auditors Office for the County of Brecon it was certified that in pursuance of a warrant from the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury bearing date the twenty fourth day of November then last past The said William Huskisson and William Dacres Adams had contracted and agreed with John Stewart of Mark Lane in the City of London merchant for the sale to the said John Stewart for fifteen thousand pounds of All that the said allotment piece or parcel of land part of the said Great Forest of Brecknock aforesaid containing by admeasurement Thirteen thousand eight hundred and sixty acres which was awarded set out and allotted unto the King's Most Excellent Majesty his heirs and successors by the said Henry de Bruyn and John Cheese as aforesaid and hereinbefore particularly mentioned and described (save only and except out of the said allotment piece or parcel of land so contracted and agreed to be sold to the said John Stewart as aforesaid the said piece or parcel of land called Wain Liky) and which said excepted piece or parcel of land was at the date and publication of the said Award in dispute the same having been claimed by Rice Powell Esquire and a Suit having been commenced by him against the said Henry De Bruyn and John Cheese as aforesaid for the purpose of trying his title thereto and which Suit had been then since decided in his favor and his title thereto had been established by a verdict in the said Suit And also all that the said other allotment piece or parcel of land being other part of the said Great Forest containing by admeasurement One hundred and forty acres or thereabouts and which said Allotment of One hundred and forty acres was in and by the said Award directed to become and remain the exclusive property of the King's Majesty (subject to the ancient tracks or driftways over the same) in the event of the claim of the said Rice Powell to the said excepted piece or parcel of land called Wain Liky being established by a verdict in his favour in the said Suit as aforesaid And which one hundred and forty acres were therefore then become the absolute and exclusive property of his said Majesty which said pieces or parcels of land so contracted and agreed to be sold to the said John Stewart contained together by admeasurement in the whole Thirteen thousand eseven hundred and sixty acres the said first mentioned allotment after deducting the said excepted piece called Wain Liky being thirteen thousand six hundred and twenty acres and the said allotment awarded in lieu of such excepted piece being one hundred and forty acres as aforesaid and which said allotment pieces or parcels of land so contracted and agreed to be sold to the said John Stewart as aforesaid were more particularly delineated and described in the Map or Plan thereof thereunto annexed Together with all mines of Coal Lead Ores Metals and all other minerals whatsoever in or under the same and all other His Majesty's manorial and other rights royalties and privileges in and over the said several allotments respectively and all ways paths passages waters watercourses rights easements privileges and appurtenances to the said pieces or parcels of land so contracted and agreed to be sold to the said John Stewart as aforesaid belonging All which said premises the said Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods Forests and Land Revenues were authorised and empowered in and by the said above recited Act of Parliament of the fifty-fifth year of His then late Majesty's reign to sell as therein mentioned which said price or sum of Fifteen thousand pounds was to be paid by the said John Stewart into the Bank of England and carried to the account of the Public monies of the Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods Forests and Land Revenues "the Woods and Forests Fund" and from and immediately after the payment of the said sum into the Bank in manner aforesaid and the inrolment of the now reciting certificate and the receipt for the purchase money in the Office of the Auditor of the Land Revenue for the County aforesaid and thenceforth for ever the said John Stewart and his heirs or assigns shall be adjudged deemed and taken to be in the actual seizin and possession of the said hereditaments and premises so by him purchased and should hold and enjoy the same peaceably and quietly freed and discharged from all claims and demands of His Majesty his heirs and successors or of any person or persons claiming under him or them And whereas the said John Stewart has since contracted and agreed with the Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods Forests and Land Revenues for the purchase of such further rights royalties privilege and interests of His Majesty in the said Forest as hereinafter described at or for the price or sum of One thousand three hundred and thirty pounds Now these are therefore to Certify That in pursuance of a warrant from the Right Honorable the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury bearing date the Fourteenth day of December One thousand eight hundred and twenty William Dacres Adams and Henry Dawkins Esquires two of the Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods Forests and Land Revenues for and on behalf of the King's Most Excellent Majesty Have contracted and agreed with the said John Stewart For the Sale to him At or for the price or sum of One thousand and three hundred and thirty pounds of lawful money of Great Britain of all His Majesty's rights and interests of in and to All tithes both great and small and of in and to all moduses compositions and other payments whatsoever in lieu of tithes arising growing renewing increasing happening or payable out of from or in respect of the said several pieces or parcels of land so sold to the said John Stewart as hereinbefore mentioned And also out of from or in respect of All and singular the allotments pieces or parcels of land allotted or set out by the Award of the said Commissioners to and for the benefit of the Owners or proprietors of ancient messuages cottages inclosed lands and grounds whose rights of common upon the said Forest have been established And also out of from or in respect of any other part or parts of the said Great Forest save and except out of and from such part or parts thereof as have been sold by the said Commissioners of Inclosure as Tithe free and out of and from the several allotments containing together one thousand seven hundred and eighty-six acres and twenty-three perches His Majesty's rights over which have been sold to the said Archibald Christie as aforesaid and save and except out of and from an allotment piece or parcel of land commonly called Carne Gwynnen containing by admeasurement forty-three acres or thereabouts bounded and abutted as in the said Award is particularly mentioned (His Majesty's rights over which said allotment have been agreed to be sold to John Parton late of Charlotte Street Bloomsbury in the County of Middlesex Gentleman now deceased) And also for the sale to him the said John Stewart of all His Majesty's rights and interests in to and over All that allotment piece or parcel of land commonly called and known by the name of Waindur containing One hundred and sixty-seven acres or thereabouts be the same more or less bounded and abutted as in the said Award is particularly mentioned and therein distinguished by the Letter and Figure A. 1. And also in to and over all that other allotment piece or parcel of land containing by admeasurement eighty-two acres or thereabouts be the same more or less also bounded and abutted in the said Award is particularly mentioned and therein distinguished by the Letter and Figure C. 3. and which last mentioned allotments are two of the Allotments which have been set out and allotted by the said Award unto the person or persons who would have been entitled to the tithes arising renewing increasing happening or payable for or in respect of the said several pieces of land so sold by the said Commissioners as Tithe free as aforesaid if the same had not been so sold and also for the sale to him the said John Stewart of all mines of Coal Lead Ore Metals and all other Minerals and *all other Manorial and other rights royalties privileges and interests of every description whatsoever of or belonging to His Majesty his heirs and successors in and over the said respective allotments and in and over the whole of the said Great Forest of Brecknock save only and except in and over the said several allotments containing together One thousand seven hundred and eighty-six acres two roods and twenty-three perches His Majesty's rights over which have been purchased by the said Archibald Christie as aforesaid and save also and except in and over the said allotment piece or parcel of land commonly called Carne Gwynnen containing by admeasurement forty-three acres or thereabouts His Majesty's rights over which have been so agreed to be sold to the said John Parton as aforesaid All which said premises so contracted and agreed to be sold to the said John Stewart the said Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods Forests and Land Revenues are authorized and empowered in and by the said above recited Act of Parliament of the fifty-fifth year of His late Majesty's reign with the approbation of the Lord high Treasurer or the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the time being or any three or more of them to contract and agree for the Sale of and absolutely to make Sale and dispose of as by reference to such Act will more fully appear which said price or sum of one thousand three hundred and thirty pounds of lawful Money of Great Britain is to be paid by the said John Stewart into the Bank of England and carried to the account of the public monies of the Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods Forests and Land Revenues being "The Woods and Forests Fund" and from and immediately after the payment of the said Sum into the Bank in manner aforesaid and the inrolment of this Certificate and the receipt for the purchase money in the Office of the Auditor of the Land Revenue for the County aforesaid and thenceforth for ever the said John Stewart and his heirs or assigns shall be adjudged deemed and taken to be in the actual seizin and possession of the said Tithes Rights Royalties Hereditaments and premises so by him purchased as aforesaid and shall hold and enjoy the same peaceably and quietly freed and discharged from all claims and demands of His Majesty his heirs and successors or of any person or persons claiming under him or them and in as full and ample manner to all intents and purposes as his Majesty his heirs or successors might or could have held or enjoyed the same if such Sale had not been made.

* These general words have created the difficulty. It is contended by the allotment holders that the crown had previously by statute surrendered all forestal rights and all claims whatever to and over their allotment land, except to minerals; and that this is an attempt improperly to assume again and to convey rights already fully compensated for and extinguished.—John Lloyd.

E.—LETTER FROM THE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY.

The annexed letter has been received from Sir John Hibbert on behalf of the Commissioners of Woods, &c. and the Treasury, showing the present views of that Department on the case.

Brecknock Forest.

Treasury Chambers,
Whitehall, S.W.
22nd August 1893.

DEAR SIR,

I HAVE received a Report from the Commissioners of Woods on your letter of the 7th August, raising the two points (1) what had the Crown to sell in 1820, and (2) what did the Crown sell to Lord Tredegar's predecessor in title.

You also ask for the report of the Crown Surveyor at the time of the sale with the object of elucidating the two questions.

The two questions which you ask can only be answered by reference to the Acts of Parliament, the Awards made thereunder, and the Crown conveyances.

I understand from the Commissioners of Woods that you have had access to all these.

It is clear that the Crown could only convey what was awarded to it or reserved to it under the Acts of Parliament, and therefore the question is only one of interpretation, as to which it is open to you to take legal advice, but as to which neither I nor the Commissioners of Woods can assist you.

I need only add that no Crown Surveyor's report such as you speak of is known or believed to exist: and even if there had been such in existence, it would not have interpreted or limited the conveyances by the Commissioners of Woods, so far as those conveyances are limited to what the Crown had to convey. Beyond that they were, and are, invalid.

I have, &c.
(Signed) JOHN T. HIBBERT.
